The Star says that there is a colored man now in the employ of the city of Wilmington aged about 80 years, who has had two wives and thirty children, eight by the first and twenty two by the last wife. Has had ten grand children and one great grand child; never had eight days' consecutive sickness in his life.

A Canadian Trapper on the Roanoke. Roanoke News. There is a gentleman all the way from Canada, located at Halifax, in this county He has been there since early fall and has been trapping along the Roanoke river with great success He has caught beaver mink, otter, musk rat, coons, etc. enough to pay him several hundred dollars. He says trapping is better in this State than anywhere he has been, and he has tried a majority of the streams between the St. Lawrence and the Rio Grande.

So Prevalent and so Fatal has Consumption become, that it is now everywhere dreaded as the great scourge of humanity. And yet, in their formative stages, all Pulmonary Complaints may be readily relieved and controlled by resorting promptly to Dr. Jayne's Expectorant—a curative specially adapted to soothe and strengthen the Bronchial tubes, allay inflammation, and loosen and remove all obstructions. It is a certain remedy for Asthma, and also for Coughs and Colds.

Gratuitous Advice.

This species of advice is not always acceptable but doubtless in many instances much benefit would be derived were it promptly acted upon. No section of the country is exempt from disease and many regions have ills that flesh is heir to." To know the best means of combatting the common enemy, with the least injury to our pockets and tastes, is certainly a great advantage. At this season we must expect Torpid Liver, congested spleen, vitiated bile and inert bowels, and all prudent persons should supply themselves with Tutt's Liver Pills which will stimulate the liver, relieve the engorged spleen, determine a healthy flow of bile, thus regulating the bowels and canse all unhealthy secretions to pass off in a natural manner. Remember that "an ounce of preventive is worth more than a pound of cure."

Died on the 9th inst. in Davidson county, after a long protracted affliction, Charles M. Perryman, in the 46th year of his age. He was converted and united with the M. E. Church, South 25 years ago, in the communion of which he lived till death. His death was peaceful, full of immortal hope. He passed from sorrow and affliction, to the rest of the people of God.

May his bereaved family have the prayers and sympathy of the church and friends, and may the grace of God sustain and comfort them

C. H. PHILLIPS.

Died on the 24th of Dec 1875, William W Harris Esq aged 71 years and 3 months. He had been afflicted with paralysis for 3 years, and been confined to his bed for nearly one year. He was a prominent citizen and true patriot He was a member of the M. E Church, South.

The writer of this obituary had a conversation with him on two occasions, relative to his future prospects, and found his faith and hope strong in the Lord The day previous to his death he rejoiced greatly, giving glory to God. He retained his mind to the last moment of life, and instantly ceased to breathe without a struggle or groan.

C. H. PHILLIPS

Sister Annie Price, the wife of Hon. Price died at her mother's residence on the 19th inst. Her illness was protracted but not triumphant. She reached forward to grasp the promises The truth and strength of Christianity shone brightly from her dying conch. Life's duties and life's trials are valuable in view of such an ending. Standing by the side of such a dying bed, our hearts are thrilled with a divine joy. Instead of tears and sorrow, we are filled with unspeakable peace. We take courage, renew our strength and go on praising God and preaching Jesus.

THOMAS A. BOONE.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.—At a special meeting of Panther Branch Grange No 76, the following tribute was paid to Mr. Walter R. Williams, who died Jan. 17th 1876.

Whereas our Heavenly Father in his divine providence has seen fit to take from us, our esteemed friend and fellow member Bro. Walter R. Williams in the 20th year of his age,

RESOLVED, That while we bow with humble submission to the hand of Him who doeth all things well, we nevertheless lament the loss we have sustained in this sad bereavement.

RESOLVED, That in the death of Bro. Walter R Williams, Panther Branch Grange has been deprived of one of its best members, and useful members.

RESOLVED That we tender to the bereaved family of the deceased bro. the assurance of our sincere condolence and unfeigned regret

RESOLVED, That the members of the Grange wear the usual badge of mourning for 30 days.

RESOLVED, That these resolutions be spread on the records of our Grange, and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and one to the Raleigh Christian Advocate for publication.

[illegible] Weldi, was born Sept 22d 1871 and died at Franklinton Jan. 26th 1875 aged one year and four months.

Though the hearts of the fond parents are sorely wounded by this severe affliction yet they should remember that the flower that for awhile shed its fragrance over their lives has not been blighted, but only transplanted to a brighter and better clime where it blooms in eternal beauty.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.—At a meeting of the Sunday school of Hopson's Chapel held the 26th day of Dec. 1875, for the purpose of giving expression to their feelings at the death of one of their teachers Miss Flora E Smith, which occurred on the night of the 22d Dec. 1875, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father in his inscrutable wisdom, to remove from earth to heaven our beloved sister, and faithful colaborer, Miss Flora E. Smith; and whereas we wish to record our appreciation of the many virtues that so eminently adorned her life as a christian lady and of her untiring zeal as a teacher in our Sabath school, be it therefore

RESOLVED 1st. That we bow with meek submission to the will but, who doeth all things well, knowing that he is too wise to err, and too good to do wrong,

RESOLVED, 2d. That in the death of our sister the Sabath school of which she was a member, has lost an earnest and faithful worker; the Baptist Church a consistent and worthy member; the family a devoted and affectionate daughter and sister and the community one of the most perfect types of the christian lady.

RESOLVED 3d. That we will strive to imitate her many examples, her holy life and her earnest devotion to the cause of her Saviour so that when life's journey with us shall have ended we may pass over the river and rest with her under the shade of the trees on the other shore.

RESOLVED, 4th, That we tender the afflicted family our heartfelt condolence in this their severe affliction, and commend them to Him who knoweth how to temper the winds to the shorn lambs.

RESOLVED 5th, That a record of these proceedings be spread upon the minutes of this school, that a copy be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and that a copy be furnished the N C. Christian Advocate for publication.

SOMETHING NEW!

An Imported Remedy.—Cannabis Indica.

This wonderful preparation, known by the above title, which has attained such celebrity during the last few years in all parts of the United States as a positive cure for Consumption, Bronchitis and Asthma, can now be obtained at all first class druggists We have made a permanent arrangement in Calcutta, India, for obtaining "Pure Hemp" and having it boiled by chemists to extract large quantities from the Indian hemp. These remedies are now prepared from the best Hemp, gathered at the right season, and extracted during midsummer in Calcutta There is no "fake" or "nonsense" connected with it, it will do its work fair and square. One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical.

$2 50 per bottle, or 3 bottles for $6.50.

As this is an imported article, we do not consign to our remedies, but will be pleased to make Cash agents every where.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Driven to Death

We are all overworked people. The almighty dollar is pursued with a phrenzy which admits of few pauses or breathing spells. How frequently one hears the phrase "driven to death," implying all that it does of physical exhaustion and mental excitement. Among artificial recuperants of exhausted energy, there is not one that so powerfully counteracts the effects of fatigue as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and next to that natural rest for which nothing can wholly compensate, it is the best and safest resource of those who are obliged, or think that they are, to undergo an excessive amount of labor. Against the baneful effect of exposure upon the sensitive organs, the Bitters are likewise an efficient protective. A dose or two will often counteract the effects which a severe wetting might otherwise produce, and the danger arising from unhealthy or fatiguing occupations is materially lessened by the daily use of this most reliable fortifying cordial, which possesses the additional recommendation of being an excellent antiseptic, or means of retarding bodily decay, a fact sufficiently proven by its prosper ative effects in all diseases of a depleting and exhausting nature

People who are obliged to take their meals in a hurry, or under circumstances which prevent their being digested with the usual thoroughness, and who consequently suffer from indigestion and dyspepsia, are notoriously the victims of dyspepsia. They may, however, avoid in a great measure the varied torments inflicted by that Protean of maladies, by swallowing after each meal a wineglassful of the National Stomachic.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS FOR SALE.

The claim is made with entire confidence for these waters that as a curative agent of many forms of CHRONIC DISEASE they have no superior among the medicinal waters of the world. Especially and emphatically is this claim made for them in the peculiar DISEASES OF WOMEN, in AFFECTIONS of the KIDNEYS and BLADDER, and in derangements of the DIGESTIVE and BILIARY ORGANS. In GOUT and RHEUMATISM dependent on URIC ACID in the blood, they have given the most marked and decided relief. In CHRONIC, INTERMITTENT, and REMITTENT FEVER, and all diseases attributable to miasmatic influence they act often like a charm. In SCROFULA they have given a degree of relief which might well induce sufferers from that disease to give it a trial. They are used with advantage throughout the whole year—equally in cold as in warm weather.

The claim thus made for these waters is vouched for by some of the MOST DISTINGUISHED MEDICAL MEN OF THE COUNTRY, both North and South, as well as by numerous reported case from the most unquestionable sources.

Testimonials sent to any address on application. These waters are put up in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles at $40 per case.

CENTENNIAL YEAR 1876.

In commencing business for the year, we return our thanks for the Liberal Patronage extended our Firm the past year.
Our plan of conducting business, has been a success, and we are more than gratified at its results.

THE CASH PLAN

Our Customers approve it
Heads of Families approve it,

And the cash buying Public are jubilant over the cash system adopted by us one year ago.

WHY?

Because they have no large bills presented to them at the end of the season.
Because a small bill is easier paid than a large one.
And because Tucker Bros. can and do sell cheaper for the cash, as they make no bad debts.
The cash customer does not pay any part of the price necessary to be charged on goods sold bad or doubtful debtors.

THE CASH PLAN

SAVES LABOR,
SAVES TROUBLE,
SAVES MISTAKES,
SAVES MISUNDERSTANDING
SAVES MONEY, because you buy cheaper.

Our stock will always be kept FULL and FRESH, with all the new and desirable styles and qualities.

And all will be Sold

THE BOARDING DEPARTMENT

OF THE

RALEIGH HIGH SCHOOL.

The special advantages of the boarding department of this school for boys are these. Its number of boarders is limited to sixteen. These all live in the same building with the Principals, sit at their table, and in all respects enjoy the social and domestic advantages of the family.

The situation of the school is healthy and pleasant. On the suburbs of the city. It combines most of the peculiar advantages of town and country. The Principals care for their boarders at all times as for their own children, in health, manners and morals.

Board and tuition for the year, 275 dollars, no extras.

School opens Jan. 12th. Spring half, of 20 weeks, begins Feb. 9th.

NOTICE.

My two sons, W. S. Hunter and J. W. Hunter, aged respectively 14 and 12 years, ran away from me on the 31st of December 1875. They were dressed alike—black pants, red yarn coats, and black hats.

Silas, the oldest has dark hair, short forehead, down east look, dark skin, black eyes and a dark scar under one of his eyes.

James has light hair, fair skin, long face, blue eyes, a scar on his right wrist and one on his head, which can be seen when his hat is off. He talks freely.

I forbid any person or persons to harbor, feed or hire the said boys, and will not be responsible for any debts they may contract. Any information leading to the recovery of my said sons will be thankfully received.

"Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling. ' is found in 2d Psalms 11th verse. T C W Boshamer, Mary F Coppedge.

"My skin is black upon me and my bones burned with heat"—found Job 30th chap. 30th v. T C W Boshamer.

"I love them that love me and those that seek me early shall find me"—found Proverbs 8th chap. 17th v. T. C. W. Boshamer.

The last night Peter went fishing he caught one hundred and fifty three fishes—St. John 21st chap. 11th v. T. C. W. Boshamer.

Hattie E. Raiford and Fannie Sue Hodges give the word "Revelation" as the answer to cross-enigma by Rachel Claytor.

T C W Boshamer sends the following as answer to Enigma proposed by Laura Davis: First is Abiah, second Benjamin, third Ithamar, fourth Hoshea, fifth Uz. The whole is Abihu

Mary F. Coppedge asks what was Sampson's riddle.

Lizzie Thompson asks where is found the word Tehaphneches.

T C W Boshamer asks where this is found: "Lo, this only have I found: that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."

CROSS ENIGMA BY FANNIE SUE HODGES.

For the Children's Column.
Straightway Mark.

If the children will turn to the first chapter of Mark, I think they will see why I call Saint Mark "Straightway Mark." Eleven times in that chapter he used a word that may be translated 'quickly,' 'straightway,' or 'immediately'

Mark seemed to be in a hurry. In his first chapter he carries the narrative as far as Luke gets in five, and as far as Matthew goes in eight chapters.

I am not sorry Matthew wrote 28 chapters and Luke 24; but I admire Mark's 16.

Straightway yours,
A. D. BETTS.

Rural and Domestic.

John M. Clayton is a large Delaware peach-grower, and very successful. He says that lime is the best manure he ever applied to peach trees He scrapes off the dirt, and then applies from three to a dozen shovelfuls of lime fresh from the kiln to the naked roots. It kills the grubs and favors the growth of fruit. Sometimes the larvæ of the curculio under peach trees can be killed by a heavy dressing of fresh slaked lime.—Southern Farmer.

To PRESERVE EGGS.—Mr. Joseph K. Boone, of Booneville, Mo., is the inventor of a new process for preserving eggs. It is said to consist of a compound of alum and lime, in equal proportions, dissolved in hot water, in which the eggs are dropped and allowed to remain for ten seconds.—A cement is formed on the eggshell, producing an air-tight polished surface.

STRAWBERRIES. — Clean the beds, loosen the soil, and top dress literally with vegetable manure; see that the alleys between the rows or narrow beds, carry off the water, and not hold it in pools, to the detriment of the plants, and be sure to set out a new bed at once, unless you are sure you have enough already for a full supply next summer of this delicious fruit.—Southern Farmer.

Carbolic acid diluted with water, will destroy almost any kind of small insect, especially the small lice which infest poultry houses.

Brine Butter.

Among the many devices for keeping butter in a manner that preserves the rich, rosy flavor of new, with all its sweetness, is the following from the Dutchess Farmer, which is said to be entirely successful: "To three gallons of brine strong enough to bear an egg, add a quarter of a pound of nice white sugar, and one table spoonful of saltpetre. Boil the brine, and when it is cold strain carefully — Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with a string.—Pack a large jar full, weigh the butter down, and pour the brine until all is submerged. This will keep really good butter perfectly sweet and fresh for a whole year. Be careful not to put upon ice butter that you wish to keep for any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to the depth of at least four inches. This excludes the air, and answers very nearly as well as the first method suggested.

Having had some experience, says a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, in clover raising, I will say for the benefit of any who may be interested in the subject, that I believe it produces more milk than either timothy or corn fodder, and at the same time I find that land improves by frequently being seeded to clover — As to whether plaster is indispensable, I have always used it with varied results. The present season I had twenty acres of clover, which I had intended for seed, and to which I applied, about May 20th, 100 lbs. of plaster per acre. On examining the heads this fall, I found that very few of them contained seed—in fact, I do not think the 20 acres would have produced 5 bushels, and I abandoned the idea of cutting it for seed, and put a part in for feeding, and pastured the remainder. On an adjoining farm I saw some clover very well filled with seed where no plaster was used.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 13th, 1874

DEAR SIR—I had suffered from Catarrh in an aggravated form for about twelve years and for several years from Bronchial trouble. Tried many doctors and things with no lasting benefit, in May, '72, becoming nearly worn out with excessive Editorial labors on a paper in New York City, I was attacked with Bronchitis in a severe form, suffering almost a total loss of voice. I returned home here, but had been home only two weeks when I was completely prostrated with hemorrhage from the Lungs, having four severe bleedings, spells within two weeks, said first three incidents nine days. In the September following, I improved sufficiently to be able to be about, though in a very feeble state. My Bronchitis trouble remained and the Catarrh was fearful worse than before. Every effort to react seemed fruitless. I seemed to be losing ground daily. I continued in this condition, raising blood almost daily until about the first of March, '73, when I became so bad as to be confined to the house. A friend suggested your remedies. But I was extremely skeptical that they would do me good as I had lost all heart in remedies, and began to look upon medicine and doctors with disgust. However, I obtained one of your circulars, and read it carefully, from which I came to the conclusion that you understood your business, at least. I finally obtained a quantity of Dr. Sage's Catarrh remedy, your Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets, and commenced their regular use according to directions. To my surprise, I soon began to improve. The Discovery and Pellets, in a short time, brought out a severe eruption, which continued for several weeks. I felt much better, my appetite improved and I gained in strength and health. In three months every vestige of the Catarrh was gone the Bronchitis had nearly disappeared, had no Cough whatever and I had nothing to raise to Raise blood, and, contrary to the expectation of some of my friends, the cure has remained permanent. I have not so much as Hemorrhage from the Lungs, and am entirely free from catarrh, from which I had suffered so much and so long. The debt of gratitude I owe for the blessing I have received at your hands, knows no bounds. I am thoroughly satisfied, from my experience, that your medicines will master the worst forms of that odious disease Catarrh, as well as Throat and Lung Diseases. I have recommended them to very many and shall ever speak in their praise. Gratefully yours, WM. H. SPENCER.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

Has long attracted the notice of the most eminent physicians, by its great efficacy in curing what is considered incurable cases of disease. Over the patients have been almost despaired by SCROFULA etc., and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Professors Gibson, DEWEES and Chapman of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill to its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up but is worth many times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and, IN ALL CASES WHERE THE BLOOD IS NOT PURE, IT SHOULD BE USED FREELY.

LEAVE ME NOT.

BY R. M. S.

Leave me not, Lord, O leave me not!
This is my cry to Thee.
Life's bright and golden day is almost gone,
Chilly and dark the night is stealing on.
Saviour, abide with me!

Leave me not, Lord, O leave me not!
Still keep me near Thy side.
My troubled spirit yearns for that repose!
Which Thou dost give to those, and only those
With whom Thou dost abide!

Leave me not, Lord, O leave me not!
Whatever may betide,
When Thou art with me, I need fear no ill,
The restless fever of my life is still—
My soul is satisfied!

Leave me not, Lord, O leave me not!
Be Thou my Guard, my Guide,
And when my weary feet at length shall come
Up to the shining portals of thy home,
May I with Thee abide!

Leave me not, Lord, O leave me not!
In death's swift rolling tide!
The icy waves will not seem dark or cold,
If but the loving arms shall me enfold,
And I with Thee abide!

Then leave me not, O leave me not Until the eventide!
When, with my dying head upon Thy breast
I'll breathe this prayer while sinking into rest!
"Jesus, with me abide!"

Letter from Mt. Airy.

MESSRS EDITORS: Amidst the changes that are especially so incident to the life of itinerant preachers, I am at Mt. Airy. The transition from Kinston to Mt. Airy is very great almost from the seaboard to the mountain's top. The contrast is wonderful —an exchange of the low sandy lands, with their extensive pine forests, corn and cotton fields, swamps and sluggish streams, for the hilly mountainous country, with its winding fertile valleys, its wheat, corn and tobacco farms, its rippling, surging, sparkling rivulets and rivers, water and air that are pure and invigorating, and much scenery that is romantic, beautiful and sublime. Thus one section possesses advantages that the other does not, making them, in the infinite wisdom of God, mutually dependent upon each other.

This country has grown in many respects since the war. A want of railroad facilities is what is keeping it back now. Supply this, and Mt. Airy, with its surrounding country, while it is a very desirable section, will become one of the most desirable sections of Western North Carolina, if not of the State.

The interests of this people demand a railroad. They have railroad "on the brain," and have determined to have it. I think it is only a question of time when they will have one terminating at Winston, Kernersville or Greensboro.

Mt Airy sits on a little prominence in the basin formed by the Blue Ridge, the Slate, Pilot, and other mountains encircling it as a rim. The Blue Ridge, lying about fifteen miles off, bends into a semi circle, or crescent like shape. This lies in full view for many miles. It seems a little strange to see farms and houses and human beings carrying on their farm work, so far above us, and seemingly cut off from all intercourse with us.—On bright days, with telescope, we can look at the mountaineer in his operation above us, while in turn he may look down on us. The many farms lying along on the mountains, as far as the eye can behold, is a sure mark of the increase of population and development of this mountainous country. An old settler says, "there are ten families up there now, to one twenty years ago." And land that then was uncleared and of no value, except for pasturage, now commands a good price.

An outlet from here by way of railroad, would surely open to capitalists and pleasure seekers a most desirable place for investment and summer resort.

The winters, it is true, are severe, but good preparations against them can be made. This winter, so far, has been remarkably mild. No snow—but little freezing weather. Now it is very spring-like—much like a May day.

The moral tone of this section is good generally. There is not a licensed dram shop in the county.—The commissioners put their veto upon it. I presume few, if any other, counties in the State can say as much. I heard of not one man intoxicated during the Christmas holidays. I do not say there is none of the intoxicating beverage drunk here. There is some. O, that men would quit drinking it!—then others would quit making and selling it.

Religion here, I believe, is keeping pace with that of other sections.—There has not only been an advance in this country in point of property and education, but the Church has also advanced much. This country, for years past, has been under the influence of the Primitive, or Iron Side, Baptist Church. In 1826 there were no Methodist churches north of the Yadkin River from Wilkshoro to some distance below this. Preaching places were from ten to fifteen, thirty or more miles apart, at private houses.—Our pioneer brethren — Anderson, Lumsdale, Bailey, McIntosh, Tippet and others—used to make their journeys through this country preaching at private houses, —their circuits extending over one hundred miles.

The names of Lewis Skidmore, Peter Donb, Moses Brock, Jno. Wesley Childs, Alexander Pennington, Joseph Reed men and S. D. Bampass, as presiding olders, stand upon the Quarterly Conference record from 1823 to 1848.—These, with many others, whose names are precious, were valiant soldiers of the cross, and endured many hardships to preach the gospel and plant churches in this country. Now that they have ceased from their labors and entered their Master's joy—resting with Jesus in Paradise—Methodist churches, as a result of their labors, though not so very close together, have sprung up all over this country. So that now the glad sound of "redemption" of salvation in Jesus' name by repentance, faith and a life of piety, with baptism as "a sign of profession," is heard and the hearts of many are made to rejoice, where once was heard (and sometimes now declared): "God will convert you in his own good time, in spite of all you can do." "You can do nothing" "It's no use to try," &c. The Missionary Baptists have some churches in this country. At Mt. Airy there are two churches—the Methodists and Presbyterians. The Presbyterians are few in membership. The Methodists, including two country churches, number about two hundred and fifty. O, that a tidal wave of revival spirit, during this centennial year of Methodism in North Carolina, may sweep over the land, that our present membership may be increased a thousand fold!

Yours truly,

JAMES WILLSON.

Mt. Airy, N. C , Jan. 28th, 1876.

Pulpits.

Who knows what becomes of the old pulpits? What curious tales might be told of some of them: and if they could speak or write, what curious tales could they tell? But as a matter of curiosity we should really like to know whether any of the pilgrim pulpits, for instance, are in existence, and where. Let some of the good old brethren rub up their memories, and let us see what is known about these old standpoints.

To give an idea of what we mean, here are three or four facts about pulpits in Europe: In a closet near the door of the church of St. Nicholas, at Leipsic, is the pulpit in which Martin Luther, the reformer, preached.

The pulpit of the celebrated Richard Baxter is still preserved in the vestry of the Unitarian church at Kidderminster, and was occupied by the writer a few years ago. It is small, and of the octagonal form. In the front of it, near the top, are the words, in yellow letters: "Praise ye the Lord," and on the four front panels are the words: "Daw widow gave this."

John Bunyan's pulpit was removed, many years since, from Belfast to London, and it is feared is now lost. His vestry chair is yet preserved in the vestry of the present church; his pulpit Bible is in possession of the distinguished family of the Whitebreads, who purchased it for a large sum, and his large, awkward pulpit candlesticks are in the pulpit of the Baptist church at Irthlingborough, in Northamptonshire.

The pulpit of the excellent Dr. Isaac Watts was sold a few years ago in London, and is yet used in a small place of worship in that city.

The pulpit used by George Whitefield, in his open air efforts on Blackheath, was carefully preserved till a very few years since, when it was borrowed by a careless preacher and broken.

Some twenty years ago, when the corporation of London purchased the Baptist church in Carter Lane, London, to make the approach to the new London Bridge, they presented the fine old carved pulpit, so long occupied by Dr. John Gill, to his successor, Dr. Pippon. It has been handsomely varnished, and now occupies its proper position in the church in New Park street, where not a few American Baptist pastors have occupied it.—Ex.

The Methodists of Nebraska are making efforts to establish a college of their denomination in that State.—Omaha is desirous of having it located near that city

Apostolic Preaching.*

BY BISHOP WIGHTMAN.

But we preach Christ crucified. 1 Cor. i, 23.

This short text is very full of meaning. The ordinary terseness of language and fullness of thought, in the style of St. Paul, are here transcended. Weighty are the lessons of instruction furnished us in these few words.

Observe, then, 1. The sum and substance, the pith and marrow of apostolic preaching: Christ- Christ crucified. Behold in this, the foundation idea, the central truth of the gospel, as Paul understood the system.

2. See God's method of rendering available to the world the sacrificial death of Christ—we preach. The [illegible] particle which introduces the text—but; suggestive of antagonisms to be bravely confronted.

We preach Christ. If it were merely Jesus, a great prophet, a sublime genius, with no super human proportions, no supernatural facts or revelations involved in the case, and with naught more than a martyrdom undergone in attestation of the truth of His teachings, it were hard to understand why this should have formed the theme of ancient preaching: why we of the nineteenth century should be much concerned in the matter. But the case is far different with Jesus, the Christ. That Christ is Godhead manifested in manhood: manhood glorified in Godhead.

That Christ is the eternal Son and Word of the Father, found in fashion as a man. The crucifixion were nothing in absence of this majestic and awful Personality. His Messianic dignity underlies all the value of His sacrificial death. God spared not His own—His proper—Son, who took up on Himself a real humanity, an entire community of nature with the race He came to redeem. He is, therefore, the one Mediator between God and man. The authority of His official claims rests on the validity of His personal claims.

As merely the Christ, what a magnificent theme for preaching! Pictured, as His life is, in the ancient literature of the New Testament, there is nothing more touchingly beautiful. All æsthetical tastes find in that Life their loftiest ideals fulfilled. It is the one lone vision of a perfect character that has been lived out before the wondering gaze of the world.

But it is Christ crucified—Christ dying for us—Christ a ransom, a sacrifice, an atoning Redeemer; this is the point of eminence, the grand center of apostolical preaching. Important, no doubt, are Christ's teachings and example. His moral greatness, His self-renunciation: important, too, His death, considered as a heroic devotion to truth, a sublime attestation to His sincerity. But all this is of secondary importance to us sinful men, by the side of the stupendous fact that Christ's death is the meritorious, procuring cause of salvation for the world. Redemption is the special object of the manifestation of the Son of God. It is its glory. It vindicates the honor of divine government; it throws its sheltering wing over sinful, helpless man; it is God's method to satisfy justice and exercise mercy: to condemn sin and save the sinner. This is the sum of the glad tidings—the substance of all preaching.

We preach. The gospel set out with preaching. 'Go ye into all the world and preach,' said the ascending Christ to His first preachers. Thus was preaching instituted. 'Lo I am with you alway unto the end of the world'—thus was it authenticated and sustained. 'How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?' Preaching deals with truth. It is a testimony to the reality of facts. It is a function of teaching, instruction, exhortation; a call to repentance: the offer of the divine mercy to penitent faith: the edifying of believers by the word of God, and not with ceremonies, however splendid, with quasimediatorial acts, with altar and sacrifice, incense and white-robed processions. Preaching is thus the moral and rational instrumentality through which, as a system of means, the Spirit of God's grace moves on the hearts of men. Its quality being of the right kind, it constitutes an agency sufficient for human salvation. It becomes efficient whenever it is met by an ingenuous disposition to hear, to believe and accept the truth, and to commit the soul in humble trust to God's plan for salvation, to 'Christ crucified.' It may, on the other hand, be met with worldly indifference, with the bigotry of prejudice, or the pride of unbelief. It never forces the mind The unbelief of the people of Nazareth imposed an obstruction to the very omnipotence of Christ, who, on account of it, 'could there do no mighty work.' And so, this is the condemnation to the present day, that 'light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light.' Alas, man has the power to treat with indifference the highest expression of God's wisdom and love, the cross of His Son!—while, at the same time, through the 'prevenient' grace of the Holy Spirit—'the light which enlighteneth every man'—the result of a general redemption, all who hear the gospel might repent, and believe.

'We preach.' We, who, ourselves, were awakened and brought to Christ through the instrumentality of preaching; we, who trusted in Christ, after that we heard the word of truth, the gospel of our salvation; we, who were justified, renewed, made spiritual men; received a divine call to the ministerial vocation, being moved thereto by the inward impression of the Holy Ghost; were separated, set apart by the proper officers of the Church for this work; we, who have received the external commission from the existing body of Christian ministers: and not this alone, but also, the inward endowment, which is properly divine in the ministerial calling—even 'the spirit of power and of love and of a sound mind': 'We preach Christ crucified.'

We come, now, to notice, finally, the force of the particle which introduces the text—'but.' This suggests the existence of difficulties growing out of the prejudices of race, times, tastes; of opposition to the central doctrine of the gospel, which sought compromise or evasion. 'But we preach Christ crucified.'

Turn your eye upon the great traveling preacher who planted christianity in Europe. Jewish bigotry demanded of him a sign from heaven. How eagerly would it have accepted a gospel proclaiming a Messiah, girt with the flashing glories of a deliverer come from heaven, [illegible] squadrons of angels, hurling thunder at earthly thrones, and stretching forth an arm omnipotent to lift a down-trodden people into glorious independence and world-wide renown! Preach the advent of such a Christ, and Hebrew ears will be all attention. If Paul turned to the Greeks, he was met by the demand for a preaching worthy of the culture of the foremost race on earth, in all mental and artistic accomplishments. Science, philosophy, oratory, deep speculation, lofty poetry—these were the themes suited to the men of Athens and Corinth. The disciples of the Garden, and the Porch—of pleasure and pride: the gay triflers that filled the Athenian Agora; such as these were ready to listen to preaching which would please a cultivated taste: which wore the gorgeous robes of finished rhetoric: and ministered to speculation and amusement. But, hold. Let the sophist, the man of elegant tastes, æsthetic culture, accustomed to the spectacle of gay processions, imposing ceremonies, and sculptured forms of beauty, unmatched in all the world beside, the versatile and profligate, treat the affair with courteous indifference or sportive derision—yet, never mind. 'But we preach Christ crucified.' Whether it be matter of scandal or folly, in the esteem of Jew or Greek, it cannot turn us from our paramount object in preaching, which is to save men's immortal souls from the guilt, pollution, power of sin, by presenting God's great, immutable plan of salvation, centering in the sacrificial, atoning death of Christ. He that is a sinner, let him hear. He that is athirst for living waters, let him hear. He that is pining with unappeasable hunger of the soul, let him hear. He that is weary and heavy laden: that sitteth in darkness, and hath no light: that has a thousand times asked the question: 'Who will show us any good?' 'How can a man be just with God?'—ah! let him hear 'God justified the ungodly; justifies freely; justifies not only through mercy but in strict respect to law, all who, with a penitent faith, accept Christ crucified, and with the full consent of the will, cast themselves on 'the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.'

This, then, was the gospel preached by Paul. Behold how the wisdom, prejudice, passion and power of the world stood in line of battle against it; but it faltered not. It sought no compromises, made no evasions, lowered not its demands an iota. The swords of thirty legions were ready to be drawn to put it down; but it calmly, bravely kept the field, and finally won it. Then persecutions let loose their fury upon it. It found a foe in every priest, a tyrant on every throne. Infamy, chains, and death, befel the first preachers; but the gospel was not bound. Those preachers conquered by principle, by patience, and by love; by the might of their faith, and the certainty of their convictions. The power of the persecutor was limited to the suffering body, but the free spirit sang praises to God in the midnight prison: and then soared from the martyr's stake to the shining gates of glory. Until at length, the colossal superstitions of ages fell before the triumphant power of the gospel. Olympus itself bowed its awful head, and cast down its 'coronet of gods' at the feet of 'Christ crucified.' And that boastful Roman mythology which once commanded the homage of a hundred millions of souls, is now to be found only in school-books, the ridicule of children.

You tell me all this might be so in the remote past, yet this gospel of 'Christ crucified' may, nevertheless, be wholly unsuited to the present age. You tell me that our time blazes with new lights, is astir with new inventions and great discoveries; has inaugurated the reign of new ideas:—that the scientists have materialized the living God into a mere 'stream of tendencies': that the communists have begun their fight for the demolition of all property-rights; and that Free-love spurns all marriage bonds.

Yes, this is a progressive age; but let us be sure that TRUTH is eternal; that God's methods and plans are not affected by the shifting fashions of modern thought. Whatever else has changed, it is atleast certain that the sin and sorrow of the world have not changed. Ah! there they lie confronting the preacher of the nineteenth century. He must meet them with the divine message of salvation. Let him deliver it tenderly, lovingly, but with unwavering confidence. God forbid that he should attempt the compromise which would sink the intellectual, moral, and spiritual, in the scenic, and conceal the truth by wrapping it up in the costume and upholstery of Ritualism. On the contrary, what is more manifest than that the times demand the most heroic of remedies; that preaching should be no idle pomp of words—no mere holiday parade of bugle and banner, and blank cartridge, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds? Elaborate meeties of expression, tedious wire-drawing of mere words where ideas are scanty, the finery of pretentious rhetorical embellishment—all this is sadly out of place in the pulpit; eminently out of place, when we are addressing the common mind of the country, which is apt to be shrewd and active, 'keen-sighted to discern the truth, and mighty to digest the matter of an argument.' Praching is meant to take hold upon what most deeply concerns the souls of all men, their struggles with sin, the solemn sense of responsibility, the deep yearnings for inward satisfaction, the apprehensions of hereafter. How thoroughly acquainted ought the preacher to be with the varied workings of the human soul under the visitations of the Holy Spirit; how skillful and energetic in adapting instruction and exhortation to different mental states and conditions; how eminently a man of prayer, that from God might be obtained the efficiency which the Holy [illegible] dency of the clerical mind, so often noticed, should be strenuously resisted—the tendency to move in the old grooves of thought, and repeat itself mechanically. On the contrary, we should be always seeking a clearer insight into the deep things of God, ever striving after more comprehensive views of the great elements grouped around the central principle of the gospel. There are reserves of power in that gospel, never yet, perhaps, fully drawn upon

The shortest road to the mental growth and energy of conviction, I have just alluded to, is daily communion with God, through Christ, by the Holy Ghost. He is the fountain of all wisdom as well as love. Add to this the habitual, earnest study of His Holy Word. The experience of the inner consciousness, affect the mental constitution. In the things of God there is no teacher like experience when the soul realizes the power of the Spirit of grace What we are we know. The illuminations which fill the intellect with light, come from the unfoldings of the divine life in the soul. When the heart is full of the love of Christ, the mental powers catch the radiance of the divine glow. We know what "Christ crucified" can do for the soul of man, not because we have read about in the books, or heard the theme argued, but because we ourselves are crucified with Christ, and our life in the flesh is by the faith of the Son of God—because we ourselves have felt the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings. Then the majesty of the truth rises before the intellect in something like its own proportions. Then our preaching is something like "deep calling unto deep"—it reaches the depths of the human soul, because it comes from the depths of our own souls. The mind being thus full of light, the [illegible] Spirit of grace lending his accompanying aids, then the utterances of the pulpit will be clear, fresh, influential. We shall make out what we take in hand—dcit tersely, without prolixity; do it distinctly, without dullness. We shall thus avoid the two deadly sins of the modern pulpit. Nobody will go to sleep under pulpit utterances which soar over the dead level of prosy monotony, and are like the morning spread upon the breezy mountain-tops, and which fill the sanctuary with light.

Let me remind you, my brethren of the Conference, in closing, that you will need the hardness and intrepidity of good soldiers, in the wide field whose the Providence of God has cast your lots It will be well for you in times of trouble and scarcity, in dark days and on hard circuits, to be able to set clearly before your minds the dignity of your office, and the importance of your work. That office is the grandest on earth. Royal honors fade before it. Angels might well covet it. That work, carried forward, it may be, with toil, sacrifices, and manifold discouragements, is nevertheless, a more important work than any which fills the hands and thoughts of statesmen or sages. It is to affect directly the immortal souls of men. It is to take hold on their eternal destiny. It is to swell the satisfaction of Christ.

After all, men erect monuments not to those who have lived easy, comfortable lives: but to heroes and martyrs, the benefactors of society, who have sacrificed ease and luxury for the good of others. Remember, you who preach Christ crucified, who it was that bore the cross and despised the shame. In hours of hardship, despondency, and suffering, if any such should darken the history of the coming year, fail not to look to Jesus. From His example, learn to suffer patiently, and bravely to endure to the end. The cause to which you have devoted your lives, is His, and for that cause the wheels of Providence roll, and the foundations of nature stand secure. To it the power of Omnipotence is linked, and God Himself is pledged.

With us, as with our crucified Master and Lord, the time of toil and suffering is short. He is now in the midst of the throne. He is crowned with glory and honor. He says: "I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, Amen: and have the keys of death and hell! O brief transition from labor, agony, and shame—from the cross to universal empire! Soldier of the cross; long baffeted and tried; harrassed by hostility, and wearied with struggle! Long hast thou stood the fiery ordeal of battle days. Soon shalt thou say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Thy warfare is accomplished Depart: yonder is thy home. It is where the Captain of thy salvation is. An entrance abundantly into His everlasting kingdom awaits thee. You are come to the spirits of just men made perfect. They greet you. Bending from their thrones they swell their acclamations, now that your last step has been taken in the march to victory. All heaven joins in the cry "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Before you is consummated joy, the jubilant ascent from glory to glory, with immortal faculties ever growing, with energies never wearying, with horizon ever expanding, in infinite progression, through eternal ages!

Church Music.

At a recent meeting of Moody and Sankey's "Christian Convention," in Philadelphia, the question was considered, "How shall music be conducted in the Lord's work?" Mr. Sankey gave his views, which, since he may be considered a specialist in that line, are entitled to great weight. He favors—first, that the choirs should be composed of people who are, in life and belief, Christians; that they sing [illegible] the front of the church, near the preacher, and not back, where they cannot be seen; and that there should be no "fancy pieces"—all of which seems very sensible and practical.

There is no doubt that the church music, as ordinarily conducted by paid choirs of singers who are not members of the church, is very cold and tame. A quartet choir, singing adaptations from oratorios and operas, solos, duets, and the like, rarely raises a devotional feeling, or, indeed, any feeling at all. If one should leave this cold and conventional "sacred music," and go to a church where the whole congregation unites in a simple old hymn steeped in ages of prayer, and sing it in unison, or, at most, in two parts, treble and bass, but where all love it and believe in it, he will find, there something which is better than music—earnestness and faith. There is, however, merely as music, something powerfully impressive in a great multitudinous volume of sound; and when the old composers aim at their highest effects they seek them through simplicity, naked melody in unison, coming from a hundred throats. No arts of the vocalist can atone for absence of expression, and expression in church music is only to be obtained by genuine feeling.

On the other hand, there is often a most odious formalism about congregational singing. There is always some prominent member who sings through the nose, and his example is contagious. Many believe that there is a peculiar sanctity in a nasal tone, and look upon those who praise God through their throats as worldly and carnal minded persons. There are also many little carls and quavers of voice peculiar to old-fashioned psalm singing that are just as objectionable as the cadenzas of professional singers. There is but one remedy for coldness and insincerity on the one side and nasal formalism on the other, and that is congregational training. There are very few people who are so devoid of musical faculty as not to be able to learn a tune; all have voices, good or bad; and in a large chorus peculiarities of voice are lost in the volume and rush of tone. All of the congregation, with few exceptions, should submit themselves to a little class-training under the organist of the church, and then let all do their best. It is only indolence or the shamefacedness of vanity, or fashion, or some other paltry consideration that keeps any believer from joining in the song of praise. When all join in there is something that is thrilling in the effect. Even as music it is better than the sort usually furnished by choirs; but it is better than music. It is not the "foolishness of preaching" that stirs and warms the soul; and Luther and Wesley, the French Huguenots, and the Scotch Covenanters moved the world by their songs.—Baltimore Gazette.

Capital Punishment

If a law were passed declaring that on conviction for murder, a sentence of life imprisonment should be passed, and that executive interference would not be permitted unless it was clearly proved the wrong person had been convicted, we venture to say there would be fewer murders. The prospect of a life-long imprisonment, from which escape was utterly impossible, would be dreadful enough to appal the most desperate. Now, a murder can be so skilfully performed that the assassin can prove to a jury that he was injured by his victim; that the murder was done in self-defence, etc. If the law said, 'Imprisonment for life,' there would be fewer murders in self-defence and fewer murderers in the dock, who were impelled to their crime by the villainy of the dead man. Our laws must be very defective if they cannot prosect a man from committing a murder.—Commercial Advertiser.

THE California Advocate says about premiums: "Our agents will please see that other papers with premiums do not rob us of the patronage which legitimately belongs to the California Advocate. The New York Advocate last year, with its picture of 'Mercy at the Wicket Gate' (like Alexander the coppersmith of which the apostles speaks), did us much harm. 'The Lord reward' its publishers 'according to their works.'"

Mr Spurgeon and Old Converts

Speaking lately at Brighton, Mr. Spurgeon denied the oft repeated assertion that if persons are not converted before they are forty, they are never likely to be converted at all.—He said that he would preach to Methuselah if he was alive on the surface of the earth. "The brother who makes such an assertion," continued Mr. Spurgeon, "is probably a small minister with a small congregation, who does not preach so that old people care to listen to him," He had himself received as new converts in church fellowship as many persons of one age as of any [illegible] that is proportionately; for there are not so many old persons as young. In proportion, he had baptized as many people of eighty as he had children of twelve; and he had hundreds of children of twelve brought to the cross. "So on along, aged brother," exclaimed Mr. Spurgeon; "come along dear old sister. We shall meet in heaven, I hope: and while I shall bless God that He saved me while young, then will bless God that he saved thee: even though thou wert but a sorry old stick and old in sin."

Mighty and Beautiful.

Labor, honest labor—is mighty and beautiful. Activity is the ruling element of life, and its highest relish. Luxuries and conquests are the result of labor; we can imagine nothing without it. The nobest man of earth is he who puts hands cheerfully and proudly to honest labor. Labor is a business and ordinance of God. Suspend labor and where are the glory and pomp of earth—the fruit, fields and palaces, and the fashioning of matter for which men strive and war? Let the labor scorner look to himself, and learn what are the trophies. From the crown of his head to the sole of his feet, he is the debtor and slave to toil. The labor which he scorns has tricked him into the stature and appearance of man. Where gets he garmenting and equipage! Let Labor answer. Labor—which makes music in the mines and the furrow and forge—oh, scorn not labor, you man, who never pities you, proud fool, and laughs you to scorn. You shall pass to dust, forgotten; but labor will live on forever, glorious in its conquests and monuments.

Give it to Them.

Here is an anecdote told by one minister about another:

'A certain Presiding Elder, who was noted for seldom being up to time, seldom very animated and seldom very brief, once kept a congregation waiting a long time for his appearance, and when at last he did come he preached them a very prosy sermon of unusual length on the text, "Feed my lambs."

'He had not yet finished when that origiual old minister, known as 'Camp meeting John,' rose from a seat in the congregation and said—

'Brother, I have had some experience in raising lambs myself, and I have found that the following rules are absolutely essential to successful lamb raising: First, give them their food in season; second, give them a little at a time; and third, give it to them warm.'"

THE year 1876 comprises the latter part of the 99th and the beginning of the 100th year of the Independence of the United States of America, and corresponds to the 6589th year of the Julian period; the 7384-14th year of the Byzantine; the 5636-7th year of the Jewish Era; the 2629th year since the foundation of Rome; the 2623d year since the beginning of the Era of Nabonassar, which has been assigned to Wednesday, the 27th of February, of the 3971st year of the Julian period, corresponding according to the chronologists to the 750th, and according to the astronomers to the 749th year before the birth of Christ; the 2188th year of the Grecian Era, or the Era of the Seleucidæ; the 1592d year of the Era of Diocletian; the 1293d year of the Mohammedan Hegira; and the 5636th year of the Jews.

The beautiful magnolia tree on the banks of the Cape Fear about 60 miles below Fayetteville, has been recently cut down to make way for workmen who are quarrying rock there. The Fayetteville Gazette waxes wroth over what it calls the "vandalism" of the deed.

The French do not bury in single graves, like their English brethren. They buy or hire a plot of ground four or five or nine or ten feet square, if they are rich, and there dig one grave deep enough for all the family. Over this is built a little house in stone—a chapel—in the sides of which are written the names of the dead below.

It is asserted on the Trieste Exchange that England is persuading the Khedive to purchase Tunis and Tripoli from the Porte for the sum of two hundred millions of francs.

A Gentleman

When you have found a man you have not far to go to find a gentleman. You cannot make a gold ring of brass. You cannot change a Cape May crystal to a diamond. You cannot make a gentleman till you first find a man.

To be a gentleman is not sefficient to have had a grandfather. To be a gentleman does not depend on the tailor or the toilet. Blood will degenerate. Good clothes are not good habits.

A gentleman is just a gentle-man; no more, no less; a diamond polished that was first a diamond in the rough. A gentleman is gentle. A gentleman is modest. A gentleman is courteous. A gentleman is slow to take offence, as being one who never gives it. A gentleman is slow to surmise evil, as being one who never thinks it A gentleman subjects his appetites. A gentleman refines his taste. A gentleman subdues his feelings. A gentleman controls his speech. A gentleman deems every other better than himself.

Sir Philip Sidney was never so much of a gentleman—mirror though he was of English knighthood—as when, upon the field of Zutphen, as he lay in his own blood, he waived the draught of cool spring water, that was to quench his mortal thirst, in favor of a dying soldier.

St. Paul describes a gentleman when he exhorts the Phillippian Christain: "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely whatsoever things are of good report if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." And Dr. Isaac Barlow, in his admirable sermon on the callings of a gentleman, pointedly says, "He should labor and study to be a leader unto virtue, and a notable promoter thereof; directing and exciting men thereto by his exemplary conversation; encouraging by his countenance and authority: rewarding the goodness of meaner people by his bounty and favor; he should be such a gentleman as Noah, who preached righteousness by his words and works before a profane world."—Selected.

'Doctor,' said a gentleman, 'my daughter had a fit this morning, and continued for half an hour without knowledge.' 'O,' replied the doctor, "never mind that; a great many people continue so ALL THEIR LIVES.'

THE DIFFERENCE.—A teacher, wishing to explain to a little girl the manner in which a lobster casts its shell when it has outgrown it, said, 'What do you do when you have outgrown your clothes? You throw them aside, don't you?' 'O, no!' replied the little one; 'mamma lets out the tucks!"

The boys of Winnemucca, Nevada, had some fun with a showman. They formed a line from the ticket office extending around a near corner. Each asked the price of admission, and, when being told it was fifty cents, shook his head, said it was too dear, retired, and fell in at the rear of the line. This was kept up until the showman, astounded by the unanimity and the seemingly great number, reduced the charge, and then every boy cleared out.

'And have you no other sons?' asked a curious lady of a bronzed old sea captain. 'Oh, yes, madam, I had one that lived in the South Sea Islands for nearly a dozen years.' 'Really! Was he bred there, and what was his taste—the sea or land?' 'No, madam, he wasn't bread—he was meat; leastwise the niggers ate him, and as for his taste the chief said he tasted of terbacco.' The lady walked to another part of the ship, and the captain smiled and took a fresh quid.

Christian Perfection.

Very much has been written and spoken upon this subject, and yet perhaps there is no doctrine so little understood by intelligent Christians as this. Why this is so we do not propose to discuss. Nor shall we undertake to show, at length, how it is that thousands who gather at the sacramental board, accept the doctrine with no well defined ideas of its true import. Political prejudices, sectarian selfishness, sectional animosities or personal peculiarities often render an excuse for invective or abuse of things both true and good in themselves. They also make us more liable to receive, without examination, anything emanating from the party or side to which we belong. Hence, we see one party avoid a plan or measure simply because another adopts it—this is true in political parties, in science, in medicine, in literature and in religion—indeed in every controverted subject where parties are found and organizations exist. To discover the love of the truth," seems so clearly and universally right, as to be the duty of every one beyond dispute or doubt. But the love of triumph or self or party or sect has often vanished all love of truth and blinded the mind to its perfection or discovery, and indisposed the heart to its reception. The "good and honest heart" alone brings forth fruit unto righteousness. "Because they received the love of the truth—God shall send them strong delusion," is a very serious and solemn truth. Every Christian should take the Bible as his guide in everything pertaining to salvation, both as to theory and practice—as to doctrine and duty. The Holy Scriptures are able to make us "wise unto salvation."

The words 'perfect' and 'perfection' are used frequently in the Bible, and we may not denounce or deny or despise, or doubt the truth of these words. We cannot be ashamed of them. They are the words of our blessed Master. Let fanatics or enthusiasts or hypocrites profane or pervert them, we should neither ignore or forget them. They are still the words of truth and soberness. They are the standard erected by our Lord and Law-Giver. They are not to be stigmatized as Methodist cant by the bigoted haters of Methodism, nor claimed by special inheritance as Methodist doctrine by its advocates and lovers. They are Bible words, and inculcate God's will. Sinful things may be done by those who have professed perfection—yet no one should dare say that this should drive us from its pursuit or profession, or practice. Let God be true though every man false. Our mistakes and mis-steps cannot change the truth of God into falsehood—it remains true—it abideth forever.

If Wesley, or Fletcher, or Watson, or Dr. Peck or Foster, or Hester, and Rogers, or Carvasse, or any one else makes mistakes as to what this perfection is, or requires or allows, the words of Jesus, divine words, "Be ye perfect" are the same. Their mistakes, if any they have made, cannot change the truth, nor release us from its obligation. He who does not desire to "be perfect," nor seek, nor strive to be so, certainly should throw no impediment in the way of any who aspires to this state, nor should he be too ready to condemn those who do seek to secure this state; or who profess to enjoy it. For professed Christians to array the imperfections, errors or lapses of those who have professed to obtain the blessings, before the public, to throw discredit upon the doctrine, is but to pursue the same course which infidels do in regard to all who profess to be Christians at all. It is passing strange that some professed Christians should so closely follow the example of sinners in this particular.—The very same objections are urged by the wicked and skeptical against religion and the profession of it, that those Christians, who doubt or deny the doctrine of perfection, do urge against the advocates or professors of "Christian perfection," and sometimes against the doctrine itself. Let every Christian therefore seek to know what the will of the Father is in this great and important matter. Let us seek earnestly for purity of heart.

Rev. B. R. Hall, writing to us on bnsiness, adds a note as follows: "I have nearly completed my first round of appointments as Junior preacher on the Robeson circuit. I am very much pleased with my work. The people thus far have given me a kind reception. I embrace every opportunity to present the claims of our College and the Advocate."

Bro. Black, Presiding Elder of the Wilmington District, keeps in mind the resolution of Conference concerning the Advocate, and is working manfully to increase its circulation.

A deep and glowing revival of religion has been enjoyed by the Church in Tarboro recently. The Southerner, published in that place, speaks of it as a remarkable work, and Bro. Swindell in a note to us a few days since, says: "The revival at this place continues with unabated interest. More than 40 have been converted and many are anxiously seeking peace with God.

Rev. Wm. Closs, D. D., P. E. of Washington District, in a letter to Dr. Burkhead, Feb. 2d, says: "Between 60 and 70 have been converted. 26 joined our church last Sunday—making 45 in all since the meeting commenced. Souls are converted every day. The good work still goes on."

We see from the Roanoke News that the new Methodist Church in Weldon will be dedicated next Sunday, the 12th. The dedication sermon will be preached by Rev. C. F. Deems, D. D., pastor of the Church of Strangers, of the City of New York. Dedication services by Rev. Wm. Closs, D. D., Presiding Elder of the District. The first quarterly meeting for Roanoke circuit will be held at the same time and place on the 12th and 13th. Preaching at 11 o'clock on Saturday, also at 7½ in the evening. It is expected a large crowd will be present and extra trains will be run on the Railroads.

We must ask our friends, both clerical and lay, to be a little more energetic in giving circulation to the Advocate. These are hard times through which we are passing, and it will require the best financial skill on our part, and the best exertions on the part of our friends to make the Advocate pay expenses. We know whereof we speak, and we call upon all to do what they can to place the paper in the hands of our people.

We send out bills this week to all our subscribers whose time has expired. In a few instances we have sent them [illegible] for collection, but generally they have been sent direct to the subscribers themselves. We hope all who receive them will lose no time in sending in the amount due and continuing the weekly visits of the Advocate for this the Centennial year of North Carolina Methodism.

Just before going to press with the Advocate, we have a communication from Bro Carraway calling attention to the omission of Tryon St. Church, Charlotte, from the list of charges ranked as "First Class" in the Minutes of Conference, having paid, in full, all assessments. Tryon Street, though falling behind in the item of Foreign Mission assessment, overpaid the assessment for Domestic Missions, as well as the total amount assessed for all purposes.

An editor of the minutes was appointed by Conference, as also a Committee of Publication, the latter consisting of Dr. Burkhead and the Editors of the Advocate. We, the committee, neither prepared nor arranged any part of the copy, but only published what was furnished, and as it was furnished. We regret that Tryon Street Church feels aggrieved at the error, which certainly was unintentional on the part of the editor of the minutes.

We publish, elsewhere, an appeal from our college agents. The plan they are operating to pay the debts of the colleges is the most feasible which, in all probability, could be adopted. The whole indebtedness of the institutions as given in the circular, is $60 000, fifty thousand of which is against Greensboro, and $5.000 each, against Trinity and Davenport. They propose to raise the amount from the several charges in the Conference on the basis of the Conference fund, to be secured by individual donations, payable in four annual installments. For instance, a person subscribing $100, will give four notes for $25, each, payable annually. The charges visited thus far, have raised, with few exceptions, their proportionate amounts. We trust no circuit or station will fail to do its part. It will be hurtful to the success of the plan, especially, for our best appointments to fall behind. Let all come up to the requirement proposed in the plan.

We have wealth enough in our Church in North Carolina to pay all these colleges out of debt, and not impoverish any one. If those who have a plenty and to spare, could but see and feel the relation our institutions of learning sustain to Methodism in our midst,—how dependent it is upon them for success, it does really seem they would come to their relief. If any would perpetuate their memory, and confer a lasting benefit upon the rising and future generations, let them give as God hath prospered them, to relieve Greensboro, Davenport and Trinity Colleges from debt and amply endow them.

Board, Lodging and Clothes.

A millionaire in New York, sitting by a desk on which lay a mass of title-deeds, mortgages, leases and bonds, asked a friend in the room whether he would undertake the management of all the property, which those papers represented, for his board, lodging and clothes. The answer was "Of course, I would not." "Well," replied the millionaire sadly, "that is all I get." The wealth of which the late William B. Astor died possessed, did him no more good and brought him no more enjoyment than the laborer derives from the wages which he earns by the steady toil of his limbs;—he got something to eat, had a place to sleep and something to wear;—the laborer has the same—the difference being in Astor's favor only in the quantity and quality of these creature comforts and not in the degree of pleasure which they produce. And yet, in order to get riches, men toil early and late, neglect the cultivation of the finer instincts of the soul, sacrifice comfort and convenience, and immolate justice and regard for others rights and feelings upon the altar of [illegible].

Riches may secure other advantages and comforts than those which the millionaire declared were all he derived from his large estate; but they who make riches their chief object of pursuit, do seldom allow themselves the indulgence in those higher pleasures and privileges which lie in their reach. They even stint themselves in the enjoyment of the lower creature comforts, and feed, lodge and clothe themselves and families indifferently—sometimes meanly. So absorbed do they become in the race after wealth, that they willingly undergo all manner of hardships—make all kinds of sacrifices, curb and kill all impulses to generosity in act or thought, restrain all aspirations for intellectual and moral triumphs, direct all their thoughts and energies and bend their souls into the narrow channel of money getting and money keeping. The word miser denotes wretchedness and is aptly applied to him who is greedy of lucre; for he is wretched while hoarding as well as in watching and guarding his treasures.

Riches are desirable only for the increased power to do good which they confer, and the advantages they afford for the higher cultivation of the mind and the proper gratification of sense. As an end, wealth is useless and empty;—it is only as a means to other things that it is desirable. If men restrict it to procuring food and clothing, they act sellishly and unwisely; but to employ it in elevating their nature, in beautifying homes and rendering them attractive, in relieving the distress of their [illegible] fellow-men, in spreading the influences of christianity, in patronizing the good in art and science, in furthering the cause of education—in short, to employ it in making themselves and the world better and happier, is the true and right use of the riches which it is right to accumulate by honest industry.

Moody and Sankey.

Barnum's Hippodrome in New York City has been obtained for the evangelical labors of Moody and Sankey, and the services began last Sunday. The sum of $20,000 has been expended in rearranging and furnishing the interior of the Hippodrome. The huge building has been divided by a partition into two large auditoriums, the partition walls being doubled and lined with felt paper in order to deaden the sound of voices in other parts of the building. On the platform to be occupied by Mr. Moody, in one half, there are three hundred chairs placed for the choir, and on the floor and terraced sides are seats for 4000 people. In the other half, or Chapel, says the N. Y. Advocate, the platform is located at the eastern end of the hall, with seats for a choir of about four hundred; in this hall a grand piano will be placed. Six thousand chairs have been fixed to the floor, and seats arranged for 2,000 more persons on the side galleries. Four hundred ushers, volunteers from the various evangelical Churches, have been enrolled, and twelve firemen detailed, the latter to patrol the building day and night as a guard against fire. In the fireproof corridor beneath the southern gallery everything has been arranged for prayer and inquiry meetings. It is proposed by the committee that services shall be held simultaneously in both halls, Mr. Sankey singing in one, while Mr. Moody preaches in the other—say for thirty five minutes each—after which they will exchange their positions, the choristers remaining with the separate congregations. The next rehearsal of the choirs will be held next Thursday evening. It is estimated that the two halls can be safely vacated by the congregations in from eight to twevle minutes.

We have received the first number of the Centennial, a neatly printed and well filled paper, published in Warrenton N. C. and edited by Rev. B F. Long. The editor is a good writer, and he has had considerable experience in newspaper work. Our best wishes for the success of the Centennial: price $1 per year.

Rev. A. D. Betts, in a letter, says of his first round: "I have preached in each of the eight churches on Mt. Pleasant Circuit. Good churches: two have no stoves: seven have burying grounds: Only 726 members. Each Church has a Bible and Hymns."

Our College

I enclose a circular, which contains an epitome of our plan of work. At the request of Bro. Black, I am canvassing this district first. The congregation at "Front Street" have contributed $970 00 of the $1000.00, which I ask for as their full proportion. I expect to get the ballance. The pastor and people (who are great ly in love with each other) have been unremitting in their kindness to me, and they have offered more audible prayers for my success than any people I have visited as agent. May God bless them abundantly!

I have made a partial canvass of the Magnolia, Bladen and Topsail circuits, and have had good success on each. The people appreciate the oneness of effort for all our colleges, and are making more sacrifices to relieve them from debt, than at any time in the past. Bro Black and all the pastors whose charges I have visited, have given me a genuine christian support in my peculiar work. They have put their heads and hearts and money in action, to help these great conference enterprises to completion. They will raise [illegible] have commenced in their fields. The spirit of the preachers and people has greatly encouraged me. They are joining me in prayer and labor and expectation that our colleges may soon be free from their burdens of debt. I hope there will be perfect union among the people throughout our conference, so that at the end of this centennial year we may realize our hopes. More anon.

J. A. CUNNINGGIM.

An Appeal in Behalf of the Colleges of the North Carolina Conference

DEAR FRIEND: Please consider the following facts: All our colleges are so in debt as to embarrass their operations; hence, we must raise

For Greensboro,	$50,000
Davenport,	5,000
Trinity,	5,000
Total,	$60,000

OUR PLAN OF WORK

Is to secure from every Pastoral charge an equitable proportion of this amount, divided on the basis of the Conference fund, (the former being ten times the latter) to be secured by individual donations, payable in not more than four annual installments.

To Illustrate:—On the Tarboro Circuit the Conference fund was $40.00, College fund, $400,00. Eight men gave that amount by paying $50.00 each—$12,50 per year. While others increased the amount to $385. 00.

Each contributor may choose to which school the donation shall be applied; but if no directions are given, the Agents will divide it according to the amount wanted for the several institutions.

We will do our uttermost to canvass the whole Conference and raise the entire amount during this centennial year, and it should be done.

1st. Because it is right. The burden has been carried by a few self sacrificing men long enough, and the church at large should relieve them at once.

2nd. The great head of the church has owned these Colleges in accomplishing much good in the past, and they will be needed quite as much in the future: for the church that educates will control the next generation. Let us do our full duty and God will succeed our efforts.

3rd. God has done great things for us as a church during the past hundred years. Let us by bringing a large thank offering qualify the church for a grander career in the future.

4th. There are specific benefits to the children of itinerant Ministers, and poor and worthy children, which cannot be secured in any other way.

Now to the rescue in the spirit, and for the glory of Christ.

We want from your Pastoral $——. It can, and we trust will be secured. Will you not give $——?

Affectionately,

J. A. CUNINGGIM, V. A. SHARPE, } Agents.

To the Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church, South, in North Carolina, within the bounds of the Virginia and Holston Conferences—DEAR BRETHREN: The North Carolina Conference at its last session resolved to celebrate the year 1876 as the "Centennial of North Carolina Methodism."

A grand centennial mass-meeting will be held in Raleigh, N. C., beginning "March 21st and continuing 3 or more days." The Conference passed the following:

"Resolved, That the preachers and members of the Virginia and Holston Conferences, within the bounds of the State of North Carolina be earnestly invited to unite with the N. C. Conference in the observance of this centennial year."

We hereby most cordially invite you to be with us at Raleigh, March 21st 1876, and participate in the services of the occasion. (Signed)

J. H. MOORE, L. S BURKHEAD, J. B. BOBBITT, W. J. W. CROWDER, W. J. YOUNG, } Com. of Arrangm'ts

Richmond Christian Advocate and Holston Methodist please copy.

The path of the believer is always new. Among the thousands and millions who have gone before not one treads in the path of another.

☞1. Up to this Conference the meetings were called "Conversations between the preachers in connection with the Rev. Mr. John Wesley."

2 The term "Conference" is to be used hereafter instead of "conversations, &c."

3. It was determined to hold three Conferences for 1785 instead of one as heretofore, viz:

North Carolina, at Green Hill's (near Louisburg) April 20th and 30th.

Virginia, at Conference Chapel, May 8th.

Maryland, at Baltimore, June 15th.

4. No Presiding Elders up to this time.

1785.

A General Conference was called at Baltimore (by mutual consent as it seems) in January. At this Conference several important steps were taken.

1st. A separate denomination was formed in the following language: "It was unanimously agreed at this Conference that the circumstances made it expedient for us to become a separate body, under the denomination of the Methodist Episcopal Church"—(The reasons for so doing are here given by publishing an extract from John Wesley's letter dated at Bristol, England, Sept. 10th, 1784. This letter is of great interest and ought to be read by all Methodists.)

2nd. The Episcopal form of government was adopted, and the office made elective and dependent upon the "Ministers and Preachers."

3rd The Presiding Elder or "Elder" system was adopted; the work was divided into Districts and Elders appointed for each district.

4. Three Elders were appointed for North Carolina with charges as follows:

Henry Wilson—Elder.

Yadkin—Henry Bingham, Thomas Williamson.

Holstein—Richard Swift, Michael Gilbert.

Richard Ivey Elder.

Caswell—Elijah Ellis.

Salisbury—Joshua Hartley, Hope Hull.

Halifax—James Hinton, George Noseworthy.

Reuben Ellis—Elder.

Wilmington—John Baldwin.

New River—Philip Bruce.

Tar River—Thomas Humphreys, [illegible]

Roan Oak—Edward Morris, [illegible] Whitaker.

New Hope—Henry Jones.

Guilford—John Smith, Stephen Johnson.

N B. Cumberland and Pertie were attached to the Virginia work.

The membership for North Carolina is not stated, but the whole membership of the Methodist Church at that Conference is reported at 18,000.

Conferences for next year as follows: North Carolina at Salisbury, Feb. 21. Virginia at Love's Chapel, April 10, Maryland at Baltimore, May 8th.

NOTE.—The appointment of Dr. Coke and Francis Asbury by John Wesley was ratified by this General Conference; hence they became the first Bishops of our Church in America.

If the above condensed items should prove of interest, I will give you some others at another time.

Very truly, L. BRANSON.

The Baptist Communion Controversy

The N. Y. Post, of a recent date says:

"The Rev. Dr. Behrends, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Cleveland, Ohio, announced his resignation of that position last Sunday and his withdrawal from the Baptist denomination. The reasons which induced him to take this course are given by him as follows:

'1. I have found myself growing more and more out of sympathy with the prevailing and dominant policy of the communion question, by which assent is treated as sertous disloyalty, and a fair public hearing is emphatically and universally refused, until my self imposed silence, in the face of unrestrand assault upon my brethren and myself in public gatherings, at social feasts, in ministerial conferences, on the platform and through the press, has become practically unendurable and almost a wrong at the bar of my conscience.

'I do not impeach my brethren as guilty of conscious and designed intolerance; I believe them to be honest in the advocacy of their principles as necessary to a maintenance of their apostolic orders; but I am equally free to say that without calling in question the baptistic claim of immersion as essential to the validity of Christian baptism, the policy of restricted communion appears to me not only uncalled for and unwise, but positively unscriptural and wrong. I am satisfied that the public advocacy of such a position would be emphatically resented by the denomination, and I have no desire to play the part of a disturber of the peace. They who cannot agree, or amicably discuss their differences, should quietly part.

'2. The more serious reason remains to be added. So far as I know, I am more radical in my dissent than any present open communion advocates in the denomination. The exclusive attitude of the denomination on the baptismal question I am unable any longer to maintain. I shall not presume to present the argument, but content myself with a summary of the result to which a fresh and painstaking review, especially of the Scriptures, has led me, as all that is pertinent here.

'Granting that immersion was the practice of the Apostles and the usage of the early church, it cannot be shown from the New Testament that immersion is so related to the design or symbolism of Christian baptism as, in its absence, to destroy the integrity or validity of the ordinance. Immersion is baptism, and as it seems to me, by the preponderance of critical and historical evidence, the primitive baptism, but that immersion only is valid Christian baptism I deem incapable of proof, whether the appeal be to philology, to history, or to the doctrinal significance of the ordinance. It may be wise and desirable that immersion should retain prominence of practical recognition in the Christian church, or that it should resume its ancient prevalence; but that such a return to ancient usage is necessary to the reason and restoration of Christian baptism is a claim I find it impossible to maintain. I believe in open church-membership, therefore, no less than in free Christian communion.'

His resignation was accepted by the church, and he will preach his farewell sermon next Sunday. Dr. Behrends was called to Cleveland three years ago from Yonkers, N. Y. He is comparatively a young man, and has achieved a high reputation. His ministry in Cleveland has been very successful, and on the first Sunday in this month he received thirty-eight persons to membership. It is his intention to join either the Presbyterian or Congregational denomination."

The King of Burmah has asked for more Christain teachers to come and reside in Mandulay, and promises them protection and aid.

Religious Intelligence.

By resolution the American Bible Society has refused to participate in the Centennial Exhibition if kept open on the Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. Duane reports two thousand parishes in the Protestant Episcopal Church which have contributed nothing during the past year to foreign missions.

The Presbyterian Church at Broad and Oxford streets, Philadelphia, of which the Rev. Frank L. Robbins is pastor, is one of the most prosperous in the city. It has just finished and dedicated a new lecture and Sunday school room, costing about $20,000. Drs. Dickey and Willits made the dedicatory addresses.

The London Metropolitan Lay Mission numbers 600 volunteer workers. During the past year 84,971 visits were paid, 3,352 meetings held in halls (attended by 112,005 persons,) with 150 open-air services, 115,000 tracts and illustrated periodicals given away, and 1,540 persons indneed to attend public worship.

In the Zulu mission, South Africa, there have been numerous cases of conversion and awakening of the native Christians to a sense of their personal responsibility. In one of their public meetings $500 were subscribed for the cause of Christ.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times writes: 'Russian government missionaries stationed at Hakodadi, writing to the semi-official Church Messenger, triumphantly relate the steady progress of "orthodoxy' in Japan. The conversion of the Japanese race to the Hussian religion, they say, is universally considered by the Japanese as a guarantee of their success in the great work of introducing European cultnre and civilization.'

Three Congregational Churches, the Bethany in San Francisco, the First in Oakland, and the Church at Redwood, without knowing each other's purpose to do so, lately tried the experiment of a Praise Service and Bible Reading combined; the report in each case was of success. The Praise Service at Dr. Stone's church called together an assemblage which filled the house to overflowing. It was estimated that 2,000 people were present, and at least 1,000 were obliged to go away unable to enter the door.

During the past century the order of the religious denominations as to numbers has been changed. One hundred years ago the Churches ranked as follows: Congregationalists, Baptists, Church of England, Presbyterians, Lutherans, German Reformed, Dutch Reformed, and Roman Catholics; in 1870 they stood: Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Lutherans, Congregationalists and Protestant Episcopal.

A church belonging to the Christian denomination was recently dedicated in Augusta, Ga., costing, together with its grounds, furniture and bell, $95,850. This with a parsonage, costing, $6,000, was the gift of a Mrs. Tubman, of that city.

The Roman Catholics of Dubuque, Iowa, have openly declared war against the public schools. At St. Patrick's Church, in that city, on a recent Sunday, the pastor gave notice from the pulpit that the sacraments of penance and the holy eucharist would be withheld from all parents who persisted in sending their children to the obnoxious institutions

"Not My Will But Thine Be Done."

Such was the prayer of God's own Son, and if we are to follow him, if he is to be our great example and pattern, it becomes us to measure life by a larger scale than our own selfish interests. "God's ways are higher than our ways, and his thoughts are higher than our thoughts." If we are tempted to consider ourselves the center of the universe, let us remember that God is the center. If we are tempted to have our own way, let us remember that God's ways are not our ways. The moment we begin to feel that God is the center of all, and that his way is best, that moment we begin to feel that there is room for other men as well as ourselves. The moment we see God as he has revealed himself in the Lord Jesus Christ, then he reveals himself in every man we meet, and for these he asks the same mercy and love that he has shown for us. Every time we turn away or look coldly on one of these, it falls upon his great loving heart, and every time we meet them in a spirit of love and helpfulness, he says, "In as much as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." The great peculiarity of Christ was, the seeking not his own good, but the good of others. Shall we be "partakers of the divine nature," and realize the divine love?

HIGH COMMENDATION.—Rev. D. A. Long, Principal of the Graham High School, has secured the services of Miss C. Hunter Southgate as Teacher of Music in that School. Rev. Dr. Duncan of Randolph Macon College thus speaks of her:

"Cordially I recommend Miss Hunter Southgate for a situation as teacher, Her intelligence, excellent qualities of character, and experience in teaching assure me that she will give entire satisfaction to her employers and patrons. In her modesty and integrity I have such confidence, that I am sure she will make no professions that are beyond her ability to fulfil as teacher. I should congratulate any one who might obtain her faithful services."

The pay of cadets at the military Academy at West Point has been reduced to $540 without rations.

The speech of Hon. W. M. Robbins of N. C, on the Centennial appropriation bill, has been highly commended by the Northern press, as eloquent and patriotic.

The Centennial appropriation bill passed the House by a vote of 146 to 130 all of the Georgia delegation except Hill voted nay; of the Tennessee delegation all except Casey, Young, of the Memphis district, voted against the appropriation. Sixty-three of the one hundred and thirty negative votes were from the Southern States.

The State finance committee has agreed to report favorably on Senator Howe's bill for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcohol and liquor traffic, and to recommend its passage with certain amendments the most important being a requirement that for manufactured liquors and manufacturers of all kinds of liquors shall be included in the proposed inquiry.

The heirs of William K. Sebastian, of Arkansas, who was expelled from the United States Senate for alleged disloyalty at the breaking out of the war, have sent to the Senate a memorial praying for the pay, perquisites, and emoluments of which he was deprived by expulsion. They claim that he was in no way implicated in the rebellion, but on the contrary became odious to the people of the South on account of his loyalty to the Union.

In response to a call from the House for correspondence on the Cuba question, it was submitted by the President to that body. It includes the instructions of Secretary Fish to Minister Sickles at Madrid, how and in what manner to present the grievance of the United States to the Spanish Government and explains the much talked of circular letter, which proves to have been a suggestion to the powers to offer good offices, for the sake of humanity and civilization, in intimating to Spain the justice of the attitude of the government in asking that some effective steps be taken to put a stop to the costly strife in Cuba.

The Centennial of 1876.

This highly favored country is about to celebrate its hundredth birthday Under its favored privileges, its citizens have been happy; worshiping God according to the dictates of their own consciences; pursuing their chosen avocations unmolested; growing rich and prosperous. Some have attained the most exalted positions from the smallest beginnings. This is particularly applicable to Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills. Ten years ago they had but a limited local reputation, but in this time, aided by scientific research and conscientious business direction, they have attained such a celebrity that there is not a country on the globe that they are not known and used. Wherever disease prevails, especially such as results from torpid liver, dyspepsia costiveness, sick headach, fever and ague, they are eagerly sought for Mrs. Elizabeth A Lander was born in Ireland May 19th 1793, and died in Lincoln N. C. Dec. 29th 1875.

Sister Lander has been long known as one of the purest and noblest women in this section of the State. She with her husband, Rev. Samuel Lander fleeing Catholic persecution in Ireland, came to America many years ago to seek their fortunes in a land of religious liberty. A short while found them in this place where their long and useful lives were spent. Like her noble spirited companion, Sister Lander was a thorough Protestant of the genuine Wesleyan type. Her father's house was a home and pra ching place of the great Wesley and his coadjutors, "the born day of her death the doctrine and discipline, songs and prayers of the Methodist Church. Those who knew this godly woman well remember her unwavering faith in Jesus, the son of God She was blessed with a strong mind and especially that charming faculty—a tenacious memory. The events of childhood and middle life could be given as it occurances of yesterday. Her knowledge of th word of God was extensive and exact rate Her qualities of heart were equal to those of mind. Gifted, yet humble and Christ like, she was no ordinary woman in her children she has given the church, state and society some of their brightest ornaments. The late Hon. Wm Lander adorned with brilliant talents the bar of North Carolina Rev. Samuel Lander is a member of the South Carolina Conference, Her daughter was the itinerant wife of the glorified Rev. Wm. I. Lan. don of the North Carolina Conference, and heaven contains happy spirits who upon earth called her mother. Her's was a noble character and life, but best of all was her triumphant death. She fell a sleep in Jesus,—

"a blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep."

Her death was sudden and unexpected The angels came at the silent hour of midnight, while only a few of her children were present, and took the soul of this good woman to the bright mansions above. The evening before her death she was heard repeating to herself the lines

And let this feeble body fail
And let it droop or die,
My soul shall quit the mournful vale
And soar in worlds on high.'

How appropriate when one is about stepping from time to eternity! She is lost to earth but gained to heaven!

J. F. Hamlin.

In Goldsboro N. C Jan 21 1876, Ella Lillian, daughter of Mr. Elbert P. Edwards in the 16th year of her age.

This tender child of affliction had been the subject of disease for many years She had probably not been entirely free from suffering during her waking hours, in half a decade. She was confined to her chamber most of the time for the last six months of her life. Until the day before her death she never made any profession of faith in Christ But having had the interests of her soul pressed upon her attention by her parents and others, she seems on that day to have left committed her soul and destiny into the hands of her Saviour And after bidding all the family to meet her in heaven, she passed peacefully and triumphantly from the scene of her sufferings to her happy home on high. Her last words were: "I will soon be at rest." Poor, patient child of suffering, thou dost doubtless appreciate and enjoy that rest. May thy surviving loved ones sacredly comply with thy request!

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MAKE YOUR OWN FERTILIZERS.

Farmers save from 2 0 to 400 per cent by buying the

CHEMICAL FERTILIZER;

equal to the best Guana at a cost of only

TEN DOLLARS PER TON.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

Mr. Wm. Simpson, Sir; I am so much pleased with the result of the fertilizer I made last spring of the chemicals which I purchased of y o u, that I feel it due to you and the farming community to say what I think of it. I used it side by side with the "Star" at the rate of 40 lbs of the home-made to 200 lbs of the "Star," per acre.

The growth of the home made was earlier, matured earlier and made more per acre.

If this can be of any service, use it, as I am fully satisfied of the merits of your fertilizer.

Very respectfully
Signed, G. I. Bank,

Raleigh, N. C, Nov. 24, 1875.

This is to certify that Dr J. A. J. Penny, and A Y Bailey, after using the preparation of Guano recommended by Mr. Wm. Simpson, cheerfully state "that we gave it a fair test alongside of "Zell's Ammoniated Super Phosphate" "Bradley's Seafowl and Super Phosphate Star Guano," also "Thuine" and pronounce it equal if not superior to either, and the consideration of cost makes it by far more economical. We therefore recommend it to the consideration of farmers.

Respectfully &c.
Signed, J. A. J. Penny,
A Y. Bailey.

Call on or address Wm. Simpson Druggist, 33 Fayetteville st, Raleigh N. C., for receipt and mode of preparation; also for many other certificates.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL.

A Household Weekly Magazine.

DEVOTED TO

Popular Literature, and all Matters of Taste and Culture.

Appletons' Journal appears in new type and with other mechanical improvements, making it the handsomest weekly literary Journal in the country. Appletons' Journal aims to be comprehensive, including in its plan all branches of literature, and treating all subjects of interest to intelligent readers; it desires to be elevated in taste and pure in tone; it gives in quantity fully twenty-five per cent more than the largest of the Monthly Magazines, while in quality its literature is of the highest class.

Price, $4 per Annum; 10 cents per Number.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The undersigned have procured, exclusively for subscribers to Appletons' Journal, a splendid steel engraving of which is offered under special terms, to every subscriber—in advance—to Journal for 1876.

"CHARLES DICKENS IN HIS STUDY,"

This steel engraving is in line and stipple. It is not a fancy picture, but an actual representation of Charles Dickens's study at Gadshill, while the portrait of the distinguished author is strikingly faithful.

The size of the plate is 20 by 14, printed on heavy plate paper 24 by 30, making a large and handsome engraving for the parlor or library wall. The execution of the plate is of a superior order.

The ordinary price of a steel engraving of this character in the print-shops would not be less than five, and perhaps six dollars. It is offered exclusively to subscribers, in addition to the Journal for one year, for $3—that is, for $1 additional, each yearly advance subscriber to the Journal, for 1876 may receive a superb engraving worth fully five times the amount.

This engraving is entirely new. It has never been for sale in the print-shops, and can not be obtained, except in connection with Appletons' Journal upon the terms and conditions given above. It will be mailed to subscribers postage prepaid,

CENTENNIAL YEAR 1876.

In commencing business for the year, we return our thanks for the Liberal Patronage extended our Firm the past year.

Our plan of conducting business, has been a success, and we are more than gratified at its results.

THE CASH PLAN

Our Customers approve it.
Heads of Families approve it,

And the cash buying Public are jubilant over the cash system adopted by us one year ago.

WHY?

Because there have no large bills presented to them at the end of the season.

Because a small bill is easier paid than a large one

And because Tucker Bros. can and do sell cheaper for the cash, as they make no bad debts.

The cash customer does not pay any part of the price necessary to be charged on goods sold bad or doubtful debtors.

THE CASH PLAN

SAVES LABOR,
SAVES TROUBLE,
SAVES MISTAKES,
SAVES MISUNDERSTANDING
SAVES MONEY, because you buy cheaper.

Our stock will always be kept FULL and FRESH, with all the new and desirable styles and qualities.

And all will be Sold Cheap.

"The Best Goods at the lowest Cash Prices."

Some Place for Me.

What if a little ray of light
Just starting from the sun,
Should linger in its downward flight—
Who'd miss the tiny one?
Perhaps the rose would be less bright
'Twas sent to shine upon

What if the rain-drop in the sky
In Retrose case should say:
"I'll not be missed on earth, so I Concerned here will stay;"
Would not some lily, parched and dry,
Less fragrant be to-day?

What if some acorn on the ground
Refused its shell to burst,
Where would the stately tree be found?
Or if the humble dust
Refused the germ to nestle round,
What could the sailor trust?

I am a child. It will not do
An idle life to lead
Because I'm small, with talents few
Of me the Lord has need
Some work or calling to pursue,
Or do some humble deed.

I must be active every hour,
And do my Maker's will;
If but a ray can paint the flower,
A raindrop swell the rill,
I know in me there is a power
Some humble place to fill.

Answers.

The answer to the Enigma proposed by Rachel Claytor is "Revelation." John L. Ray, Jimmie R. Betts.

Z. J. Needham, Adaline Needham and N. J Needham, write that they will join the army of Bible readers who are to read the Bible through in one year.

Questions.

Tullia B. Reeks asks where the following is found: "the world by wisdom knew not God." Also, what was the number of sacred vessels delivered into the hands of Cyrus."

ENIGMA BY Z. J. NEEDHAM.

My 1st was a prophet in Israel.
My 2d was the brother of Moses.
My 3d was a queen who disobeyed the kings commandment.
My 4th was the father of Jacob.
My 5th was a king of the Medes and Persians.
My whole was a king of Israel.

ENIGMA BY GEORGE A. RAY.

My first, at a feast a cruel present gained.
My second, where Solomon his gold obtained.
My third's household prospered for a servant's sake.
My fourth, in hunger, did his rights forsake.
By the initials you may find
What should with sorrow ever blend
And drive away the black despair
Those feel who see in death the end.

ENIGMA BY J. R. BETTS.

My 1st is in run but not in walk.
My 2d is in whisper but not in talk.
My 3d is in link but not in chain.
My 4th is in window but not in pane.
My 5th is in go but not in send.
My 6th not in borrow is found in lend.
My 7th is in bold but not in brave.
My 8th is in servant but not in slave.

ENIGMA BY SAML S. DREW.

1st a wicked prince
2d a slaughtered prince.
3d a prince's brother.
4th a prince's inheritance
5th a prince with God.
6th a tried and faithful prince.
7th a prince's capital.

The initials give the name of a prince of the race of Judah; the final letters the principality where he exercised power.

Laplander Babies at Church.

I want to tell you how the mammas away up in Lapland keep their babies from disturbing the ministers on Sunday.

Poor babies! I suppose it is growing bad style everywhere to take them out to church. And I suppose, too, the ministers are privately as thankful as they can be. But the Lapp mammas don't stay at home with theirs. The Lapps are a very religious people. They go immense distances to hear their pastors. Every missionary is sure of a large audience, and an attentive one. He can hear a pin drop—that is, should he choose to drop one himself—his congregation wouldn't make so much noise as that upon any consideration. All the babies are outside buried in the snow. As soon as the family arrives at the little wooden church, and the reindeer is secured the papa Lapp shovels a snug little bed in the snow, and mamma Lapp wraps baby snugly in skins and deposits it therein. Then papa piles the snow around it, and the dog is left to guard it, while the parents go decorously into church. Over twenty or thirty babies lie out there in the snow around the church, and I never have heard of one that suffered or froze—smoke dried little creatures, I suppose they are tough!

But how would our soft, tender, pretty, pink-and-white babies like it, do you think?—Wide Awake.

Rural and Domestic.

Bee-Keeping.

1. If you wish to keep the worm or moth out of your bee hives, have your hives sitting upon boards or planks (the hive sitting upon the boards in two places,) so that you can take out one piece and get the worms and eggs off of it, and put it back and take out the other piece, and clean off in the same way. This ought to be done, as often as every ten days, after the fifteenth of June until the first day of October. This will keep the moth almost entirely from your hives. I object to the plan of setting the hives upon the heads of rails or small blocks, as that induces the worm fly to pass up into the comb to deposit its eggs, where you can never get the worm out until the hive is ruined.

2. Driving your bees from one hive to the other, after the common plan, will ruin your bees, for the reason that you lose a crop of young bees.—Sometimes they do well, but only when there is a young swarm nearly ready to come out, which, when driven out with the old bees, will do well. When you wish to drive from one gum to the other, put your new gum in the place of the old gum, with the head loose, so that you can take it off. In taking the old hive to pieces, save all the best, well-filled pieces of comb, with young bees, and string them up in the new gum where you wish to drive your bees into, and then nail on the head. The bees will go in and do well, for all bees will take care of their young. This plan of stringing up the young bees will apply to the saving of bees from the woods or forest when you cut a bee tree. This is almost a never-failing plan to save bees from trees in the forest.

3. Being afraid of the stings of bees, or of being stung, is the reason you cannot manage bees. Go to the store and buy a small meal sifter, and put it into the end of a small flour sack, and fasten the sack well over the half of the sifter. Open the other end and slip it over your head, and tie it around the neck, so as to let the sifter come over the face. Put on your gloves, and go where you please among your bees.

4. You should never let your hives stand where the hot sun will come upon them from eight o'clock in the morning until four in the evening.—Many persons, in hiving bees, let the gum stand in the hot sun, and think that the bees hived are doing well But when they come to examine the gum they find that the bees are out and gone Nothing but the hive standing in the hot sun was the cause of it. If these few hints are well received I may write again.

Respectfully,

OLIVER FLEMING.

How to Cure Bacon.

Our neighboring State, Virginia, is no less famous for her "pone and greens" than is "the old North State" for her "ham and cabbage;" hence recipe for curing bacon from this section should be entitled to consideration:

We prefer a hog eight to ten months old, weighing one hundred to one hundred and twenty five pounds Slaughter in clear, cool weather, but provide against freezing by piling all night in a room sufficiently warm for this purpose. Never "cut out" and pack before the next day, thus giving time for the animal heat to leave the pork. Sprinkle a teaspoonful of salt petre on the flesh side of each joint. Salt liberally and pack away on a stand (that the brine may run from it, and thus avoid a "porky" taste or smell.) In five or six days "upset" it and salt as in the first instance.—Whether the resulting or the exposure to the atmosphere is an advantage we cannot say, though we incline to the latter. Pack as in the first case and let it remain for four or five weeks.—Then take up, wash in warm (not hot) water and smear well with a paste made of flour, molasses and black pepper. Rub well the flesh side and the end of the hock. Hang up and allow it to dry thoroughly before smoking. When dry, the paste forms a cement and effectually expels the fly; consequently, no bug will ever be seen on or about it.

After the meat has been hanging a few days and has become perfectly dry, kindle a small smoke (not fire) of green hickory wood every morning for a week or ten days, and occasionally during damp days in the spring under it. Let it remain hung up and use as wanted. In this condition it will remain for years, and, like old wine, improve by age."

Driven to Death

We are an over-worked people, The almighty dollar is pursued with a phrensy which admits of few pauses or breathing spells, thus frequently one is in the phrase "driven to death." Implying as it it it done of physical exhaustion and mental exctement. Among artificial recuperants of exhausted energy, there is not one that so powerfully counteracts the effects of failure as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and next to that natural rest for which nothing can wholly compensate, it is the best and safest resource of those who are obliged, or think that they are, to undergo an excessive amount of labor. Against the baneful effect of exposure upon the sensitive organs, the Bitters are likewise an efficient protective. A dose or two will often counteract the ill effects which a severe wetting might otherwise produce, and the danger arising from unhealthy or disturbing exceptions is materially lessened by the daily use of this most reliable fortifying corrector, even overcome the additional reconsideration of taking an excellent antiseptic, of means of reaching bodily disease, a fact confidently proven by its comparative effects in all diseases of a depleting and exhausting nature

People who are obliged to take their meals in a hurry or under circumstances which prevent that repose which the mind should enjoy during the process of digestion, are notoriously the victims of dyspepsia. They may, however, avoid in a great measure the varied torments inflicted by that Proteus of maladies, by swallowing after each meal a wineglassful of the National Stomachic.

A FEW WORDS TO FEEBLE AND DELICATE WOMAN.

WM. R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of the "World's Dispensary," Buffalo, N. Y., Author of "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," etc., etc.

Knowing that you are subject to a great amount of suffering, and feeling on your part has a strong tendency to prolong it, and the longer it is neglected the more you have to endure and the more difficult it is to cure your case becomes, I, as a physician, who is daily consulted by scores of your sex, desire to say to you, that I am constantly meeting with those who have been treated for their ailments for months without being benefited in the least, until they have become perfectly discouraged and have almost made up their mind never to take another dose of medicine or be tortured by any further treatment. They had rather die and have their sufferings ended than to live and suffer as they have. They say they are worn out by suffering, and are only made worse by treatment. Of any thing more discouraging, we certainly cannot conceive, and were there no more successful mode of treating such difficulties than that the principles of which teach the reducing and depleting of the vital forces of the system, when the indications dictate a treatment directly the reverse of the adopted for them, their case would be deplorable indeed. But lady sufferers, there is a better and far more successful plan of treatment for you; one more in harmony with the laws and requirements of your system. A harsh, irritating caustic treatment and strong medicines will never cure you. If you would use rational means, such as common-sense should dictate to every intelligent lady, it is with medicines as embody the very best invigorating tonics and nervines, compounded with special reference to your delicate system. Such a happy combination you will find in my Favorite Prescription, which has received the highest praise from the thousands of your sex. Those languid, dreamy sensations causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet or ascend a flight of stairs; that continual drain that is sapping from your system all your vital forces, that continual strain upon your vital forces that renders you irritable and fretful,—may all be overcome and subdued by a perservering use of that marvelous remedy. Regularity and obstructions to the proper working of your system are relieved by the prompt use of this periodical pains, the dragging down sensations, while periodical pains, the existence of which is conclusive indication of serious disease that should not be neglected, readily yield to it, and if its use be kept up for a reasonable length of time, the special and distressed these pains is permanently removed. Further light on these subjects may be obtained in the "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," in which I have devoted a large space to the consideration of all forms of disease peculiar to your sex. This work will be sent (post-paid) to you free, on receipt of $1.50. My Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists.

Extra Early Peaches and Extra Fine New Late Keeping Apples and Tea Best strawberries for Market are my specialties. I have the advantage of 15 years experience in the Nursery Business. I superintended the Propagating Department of the Celebrated West Green Nurseries near Greensboro which were destroyed during the war. My father, the late B. W. Westbrook, the leading Nurseryman in North Carolina from 1830 to 1861 frankly acknowledged to many of his friends that my knowledge of Horticulture in general was more extensive than his. In proof of this assertion he invariably intrusted the correction of Nomenclature to me.

I removed my entire business from Greensboro in 1872 and located in Wilson in charge of the Agricultural Department of the Wilson College. I have a choice collection of fruit Trees, Grape Vines, Straw berries, Flowers, and a limited supply of Shrubbery, which I offer at reduced prices, for February and March planting. Catalogues and Prices furnished on application. Address, C. W. WESTBROOK, Wilson, N. C.

CAUTION—Inasmuch as several canvassing agents representing other nurseries, have made use of my name in the sale of nursery stock, I take this occasion to warn agents and all others against the use of my name in any manner, in connection with the sale of Trees and Plants Any person furnishing me positive proof against any one guilty of such imposition and fraud shall be liberally rewarded with a choice selection of trees and plants, securely packed in moss.

CENTENARY HYMN.

[REV. I. HARTSOUGH, IN THE REVIVALIST.]

A hundred years, a hundred years
And lo! the onward march,
Of hallow'd thought and holy zeal,
That round the world shall reach
Twas God who fired those humble hearts
Whence sprang the rising Name;
All praise to thee, the Triune God,
Our joyous hearts proclaim

A hundred years, a hundred years,
What wonders God hath wrought!
The feeble hand and altar hath spread,
Hosts have their spirit caught
The continent, yea strait indeed,
Their followers sends abroad,
To every clime the wide world round,
All praise to thee, O God!

A hundred years, a hundred years,
O! which our thousands tell,
In songs of praise unto his power,
Who still our rocks shall swell.
These praying bands, thus won to Christ,
Shall press the regard on,
Torising millions, who in turn
Shall shout: "still still they come!"

A hundred years, a hundred years,
What triumphs have they known,
As hosts have from our altars gone
To their eternal home.
The hand that led our church abroad,
And gave us rank and place,
Has filled the e hundred years to us
With victories of grace.

A hundred years, a hundred years,
O! holy vows and aims,
Of lifting high in purity,
The Gospel's truths and claims.
Twas God who marked our pathway plain
To spread through all the land
The doctrines, deeds of holiness,
By which his saints should stand.

A hundred years, a hundred years,
Where others wept and toiled—
O, may their mantle—ours awhile—
To others pass unsoiled.
God grant another hundred years
May see a holier gain,
And on till all earth's tribes are saved
For whom the Lamb was slain!

Centennial Column.

For the Advocate.

Reminiscences by Bennet Taylor Blake.

Now in the 77th year of my age, and the fifty fourth year of my public ministry, and for the last twenty years retired from the active employments of life, the events of fifty years past have so far faded from my memory as to require great effort to resuscitate them. Of all the ministers of the Virginia Conference of 1824, fifty two years ago, I alone am left to take part, if spared, in our approaching centennial. In one respect it is a sad, a melancholy reflection; but it has its compensation—"God buries his work men and carries on his work." Since 1810 I have observed the growth of the M. E. Church in various towns, cities and States. It is utterly impossible to account for its rapid progress on any other principle than by admitting that its one constant aim has been, as it still is, to spread Scriptural holiness over these lands, offering an asylum to every one who has "a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and be saved from his sins," and who continues to evince that desire by doing no harm, by doing good of every possible sort, and attending upon all the ordinances of God. With these simple Scriptural rules of Christian morality, with their Bibles and hymn-books, Methodist ministers, mounted on their horses, traversed the continent from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the uncultivated regions of the West. Without mental reservation, they proclaimed the love of God to all mankind, a free, unmerited pardon for every penitent sinner, justification by faith alone, spiritual regeneration, gracious adoption, the witness of the Spirit, and a progressive sanctification towards a perfect christian manhood. In no cities were the inhabitants so refined as to deter them from entering in and proclaiming the simple, pure, scriptural and rational doctrines of Methodist Christianity. At the same time they were the pioneers of civilization, and foremost to visit the savage tribes beyond, with the same message of free salvation.

But this is not the occasion to refer to Methodism in general: we are in the centennial year of Methodism in North Carolina. To this subject we are required to speak. The records of Methodism in North Carolina are few and desultory. It is only recently that an attempt has been made to gather up their scattered fragments. It is to be hoped that at our approaching centennial celebration, we will be able to furnish the future historian with materials for a history worthy of North Carolina Methodism. Inspired by this hope, I now attempt to gather up such fragments as have not utterly perished from my memory, and may be considered worthy of a permanent record.

In 1824, in the town of Petersburg, I was admitted, as a candidate on trial, into the traveling ministry by the Virginia Annual Conference, held in February. The Conference bounds then embraced a large extent of North Carolina territory. In 1825 the Conference met at Oxford, N. C., in February, Bishop Soule presiding. At the earnest request of a representation from the town of Murfreesboro, in this State, Bishop Soule sent me to that place, which for the first time was that year made an independent station. The next year Bishop Soule passed through that town, on his way to Conference to be held in Norfolk, and saw proper to return me to Murfreesboro—1826.

It would require a small volume to contain a narrative of all the interesting events of the two years spent there. The present occasion only allows me time to say, in general terms, they were prosperous and happy years From the day I took charge of the church to the end of my labors, there was not a case of disorderly conduct by any member of the church. Sabbath morning at sunrise we met at the church for prayer, with undeviating regularity. Class meetings were never intermitted: we had constant peace and joy and love.

One incident I must relate: Julia Johnson was the daughter of a pious mother, and had been nursed in the lap of Methodism. Her amiable disposition and unblemished manners seemed to afford but little room for improvement. But Julia thought differently;—she mourned over her unregenerate heart for many weeks, came to the altar of prayer, and ceased not until she found pardon and divine acceptance as God's adopted child. She was admitted into Christian fellowship in the church at Murfreesboro. Sometime thereafter she married John W. Southall, a prosperous merchant and valuable member of the church As a bridal present he placed around her neck a heavy gold chain, valued at fifty dollars.—Shortly after, at a missionary collection, with the approbation of her husband, she laid her bridal present on the altar of God for missionary purposes, and thenceforward Julia South all lived, and died as she had lived, a pure hearted and devoted Methodist. If I were called upon to invoke a blessing on every woman in the Methodist Church, I would pray that she might be not only almost, but altogether a Methodist like Julia South all.

Dear Julia, if I meet thee not in heaven, it will be because I myself shall fail of the grace of God! With what pleasure could I speak of Rev. Daniel Southall and his family, and their unbounded hospitality; of Sister Meredith, whose sanctified life revealed itself in a most heavenly countenance, so often greeted at class meeting, at a time when her advanced age would have justified her absence. Other members of the church might be mentioned for their devotion to Methodism did time permit.

From Murfresboro in 1827, I went on horse-back, seventy five miles to attend the annual Conference at Petersburg, held in February. From that conference Bishop Soule sent me to Raleigh the second station in North Carolina I ever served. After a fatiguing journey back to Murfreesboro, and thence to Raleigh, I arrived here the first day of March, and entered immediately on my ministerial duties. William Hammet had preceded me in 1825, and Geo. W. Charlton in 1826. Of these two ministers alone of all who had preceded me, do I know enough to justify any statement in regard to them, and their labors here. William Hammet was a native of Ireland He was endowed with superior abilities, and possessed every element for an effective popular speaker. His personnel was favorable, his voice strong and musical. He preached with the pathos so essential to true eloquence. In his pathetic strains he succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of his hearers, which he carried along with him to the end of his discourse As far as my information goes, he was one of the most popular ministers that had ever filled the Methodist pulpit in Raleigh. During the sitting of the Legislature, some of the most highly cultivated members delighted to listen to his oratory. There had been no unusual revival interest during the year. Up to the end of his ministry in Raleigh, he enjoyed the love and confidence of the church and people whom he had served.

He was succeeded by Geo. W. Charlton, in 1826, who, as a preacher was totally unlike William Hammet. In person, he would have commanded respect and attention in any society into which he might be admitted. His early educational advantages were much better than those of his predecessor, whose popularity had stimulated him to greater application in preparing his sermons. In preaching, his voice was loud and distinct from the beginning, and though increasing in volume to the end, never became disagreeably harsh. In declamation, I never heard his equal. He never aimed his invective against the degrading vices of vulgar minds. He took it for granted that his congregation was made up of the most intelligent and cultivated classes. In preparing his sermons, he sought to accommodate them to the character of his audience, who with all their respectability, needed reproof and correction for their fashionable follies and vices, against which he leveled his denunciations in strains of withering satire. His rhetoric was faultless, his language so precise that the unlearned could not misunderstand him, while the most refined taste would be gratified. He studied his sermons, but never wrote them out. Had they been taken down as they were delivered, they would have been fine specimens of pulpit oratory.

An unusual revival took place under his ministry, many were converted, and many valuable additions made to the church. The spirit of this revival remained after he had been removed to another station. In this condition of affairs in the Methodist Church, the charge of the station devolved on me. Of this hereafter.

For the Advocate.

Money the God of the Masses Now.

It really does seem to me that money is the chief object of men's glory now. It is the Diana of the majority of our race.

If men would learn to love the God of the universe as well as they do money, the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ would soon prevail. But the intense desire among men for riches is a great barrier now to the progress of the gospel.

A great many men toil all their lives to become rich, scant themselves and families in order to save their dimes, and at last die poverty-stricken. Oh, how terrible a man must feel at the close of his days, who, having striven all of his life to become rich, finds that all his efforts have been a perfect failure!

What a terrible disaster! Money gone, time wasted, talent buried, and soul neglected! No Savior to guide him through the dark valley: no bright convoy of angels to beckon him homeward, but dies without one ray of hope.

There is another class of men, who, if they cannot get money in an honest way, will get it dishonestly. There are men who will take the advantage of their neighbor for the sake of making a few cents only. will cheat the poor widow out of her last mite without any compunction of conscience.—There are many professing Christians, claiming to be disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus, who will thus act,—men who love their money a great deal more than the religion they profess.

Brethren, this love of money, by those who profess Godliness, is a curse to the Church of God. There are plenty of men in the State, and in the church, who are making "Blockade" whiskey "under ground" at this moment—some of them officers in the church too, but I hope we haven't many in our own beloved church. No wonder that men of the world stumble and fall, when those who call themselves Christians are living in violation to the laws of the land, as well as the laws of God. Why is it that men will perjure themselves' because they love money more than their own soul The love of money has caused men to lie, cheat, defraud, steal and rob. A great many men will seek office not that they may be of service to their country, but that they may get rich by it. And some of them when elected cannot serve out their probation, but will take the funds entrusted to their care and abscond with them. Has not this been the case with many since our late war?

Suppose, reader, you are fortunate enough to obtain riches; how soon may they take to themselves wings and fly away! And if you are fortunate enough to keep thousands of dollars until you die, what will it profit you? You can only use enough of it to purchase a coffin and shroud; the remainder you must leave behind.—"What shall it profit you if you gain the whole world and lose your own soul?"

Be careful how you act. You will have to give an account for your behavior here. It is written "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, mind and strength." You cannot do this if you are a lover of money more than God.

"Seek the kingdom of God first, then all these things shall be added unto you." Of course, things that God has provided for you.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., is now filling a series of engagements to lecture on 'The Expulsion of the Bible from the Public Schools.'

Safe Arrival of our Missionaries in China.

The mail has just brought us the glad intelligence of the safe arrival of Brother Parker, Sister Lambuth, and Willie, at Shanghai, but the sad news of the impaired health of our faithful Superintendent, Brother Lambuth. Let all the Church join in prayer that he may be given yet a little longer to the work he has earnestly carried forward.

EXTRACT OF LETTER FROM BROTHER PARKER.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 7, 1875.

REV. DR. D. C. KELLEY—Dear Brother:—I arrived at this place in company with Mrs. Lambuth and Willie, the first day of this month—last Wednesday—making a little over twenty nine days from San Francisco. We had considerable stormy weather both on the Pacific and the Yellow Sea. But thanks to a kind Providence, no damage was done to the ships, and no lives were lost

We make only a short extract this week from a letter from Brother Lambuth; we will give more next week, as well as an earnest note from Sister L. to the friends who promised aid while she was in the United States. Brother L. says: "Two days after their arrival in Shanghi two or three steamers came in from Japan, with wheel-house torn away and capstans and cabins swept from the deck. One of the steamers was badly damaged. My family arrived just in time to escape this fearful storm. We feel that we cannot be too thankful to our Heavenly Father for his protective care."

A Roman Catholic Church-Extension Scheme.

Our Roman Catholic brethren are very wise in their generation. They know how to extend their Church, and fasten its roots into new soil. The St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press gives us the following:

The Rev. Bishop Ireland, who has already done so much to elevate the condition of his fellow countrymen in this city and State, has for some time been engaged in a scheme for transferring a large number of industrious and frugal Irish families from the overcrowded cities to the broad prairies of Minnesota. His plans have finally been matured, and they are now in process of execution. Bishop Ireland has been negotiating with the St. Paul and Pacific Rail road Company for the purchase of a large quantity of railroad lands, and the sale has practically been completed. The Railroad Company will transfer about 80,000 acres of land to Bishop Ireland, which, with the 80,000 acres of intermediate government land which can be taken as homesteads, will make 160,000 acres of land as the amount to be devoted to this new and extensive Irish settlement. The railroad lands are worth six or seven dollars an acre, but, by the use of railroad bonds in their purchase, the cost to the settlers will not be more than $1 75 an acre. Bishop Ireland and Fathers McDermott and McGolrick returned last evening from De Graff Station, located about ten miles south east of Benton, the county seat of Swift county, which will be the center of the colony, where they personally inspected the land and its surroundings, and they express themselves more than delighted at the favorable prospects of this commendable enterprise.

As soon as the weather permits, a Roman Catholic church and schoolhouse will be built at De Graff, and Father McDermott will be transferred to that point to superintend the work of construction, and to receive and dispose of the colonists as fast as they arrive. It is proposed to sell these lands only to the better class of Irish people, who will require at least three hundred dollars in cash to purchase their lands and get a favorable start in life at their new homes. It will be stipulated that no liquor selling shall be allowed in the settlement, and every effort will be made to limit the sale of lands to those who will improve them at once, and who have a disposition to become, what they can be in a very few years, rich and independent farmers.

CRITICISING PREACHING.—I never suffer myself to criticise it, but always act upon the uniform principle of endeavoring to obtain from what I hear all the edification it affords. This is a principle that I would warmly commend to my young friends in the present day—for nothing can be more mischievous than for learners to turn teachers and young hearers critics. It is one of drying up the waters of life in the soul, and an exact method of weighing words and balancing doctrines which we hear is a miserable exchange for tenderness of the spirit and the dew of heaven.

THE Rev. B. P. Keasberry, a faithful missionary of the London Missionary Society, stationed at Singapore, fell dead while preaching in his pulpit in that city, Sept. 6. He had preached in Ceylon for thirty-six years.

Gaining by Giving

It is impossible for men to grow rich, by hoarding, but affluence thus gained is an unmitigated curse. The close shut barn breeds weavels and smut. The stagnant pool gathers scum. The unyielding bud suffers blight and comes neither to flower nor fruit. Worse than all that such figures can possibly suggest, however, are the sure effects of selfish accumulation on the heart. But one who acts on the opposite principle and wisely and generously dispenses of his means is not only sure to escape the fearful consequences entailed by greed, but is sure to become richer handed. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth," and he that with a liberal hand dispenses to the needy will find his own portion enlarging rather than growing less. Facts give information of a law which is working to the advantage of those who show themselves generous. As their hands part with blessings, their store is increased, and the more they give the greater are their gains.

Nor is this law any less obvious as applied to spiritual benefits which it is the privilege and duty of every believer to dispense. All humble efforts made to bring others to know the joys of salvation, are sure to enhance our own stock of happiness and to deepen our own sense of the preciousness of the Gospel. In order to be in conscious sympathy with the Spirit of Christ and, at the same time, thoroughly interested in his benevolent work, it is indispensable that we should be controlled by a self-sacrificing love that will constantly impel us to engage in efforts to supply the spiritual necessities of those around us.

Without doubt, a fruitful source of the stirt and stoliduess experienced by professing Christians is to be traced to the disregard of this law of the new life. Their own needs being temporarily supplied, they are strangely apathetic in regard to the wants of others, and, failing in the duty of dispensing the blessings with which they have been entrusted, they soon come to feel their own supply but scanty, and are made to complain of their spiritual leanness. The divine precept: "Freely ye have received, freely give," enjoins duties both to ourselves and to others that must not be neglected, and which, if slighted, are sure to entail sloth and sorrow. "The liberal soul shall be made fat," and 'If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land.'—Baptist Weekly.

Tribute to Methodism.

A wealthy Baptist of Liverpool has built a chapel at a cost of $10,400, and presented it to the Wesleyans. The following he states to be his motives for this act of liberality: "I should like to inform my Baptist brethren that I am just as loyal to them, just as firm in my adherence to their views and principles, as when they were first adopted by me; nor am I ever likely to forsake them. The experience of twelve years' residence here has confirmed me in this opinion—that the people of our rural districts, where mining and agricultural operations are joined, require for their spiritual training a religion which, while pure and sound in doctrine, possesses a power to reach their hearts by earnest, faithful preaching of the Word of God. This preaching power, this peculiar gift, seems to belong pre-eminently to the followers of Wesley, and, united with their wonderful organization for bringing that power to bear directly upon the people, even in the most remote localities, qualifies them especially to lead the van in any mission to the masses. My observations have led me to the conclusion that, in order to awaken the careless and arouse the inpenitent, we must look for success in the employment of a power like that of Methodism."

Immortality.

When yonder burning orb, whose glory lights up the universe, shall cease his daily course—when the silvery moon shall shut her eyes, and look no more down upon this sin-stained earth—when the blue canopy shall hurl the scintilating stars from their sockets—and when this old crazed world shall reel and stagger as a drunken man, and the fearful chaos as of old, shall spread its withering pall over all we once admired and loved; then those immortal minds shall rise above the wreck of matter to nobler hights, to grander scenes, and to purer joys.

This yearning heart shall find the goal to which its hopes have pointed. This curious mind shall drink from fountains whose springs are gushing from beneath the great Father's throne, and his glorious countenance shall light up the 'new heaven and the new earth.' 'For there shall be no night there. Selected.

Things are not to be done by the effort of the moment, but by the preparation of past moments.—Anon.

A Beautiful Idea

"It cannot be that this earth is man's only abiding place; it cannot be that our life is a bubble, cast up by the ocean of eternity to float for a moment on its waves, then sink into nothingness. Else why is it that the glorious aspirations which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts are forever wandering about unsatisfied? Why is that the rainbow and the cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off and leave us to muse upon their faded loveliness? Why is that the stars which hold their festivals around the midnight throne are set so far above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And finally, why is it that the bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view but for a moment, and then taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affections to flow back in Alpine torrents upon our hearts? We are born for a higher destiny than that of death; there is a realm where the rainbow never fades—where the stars will be spread out before us like the islets that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings that here pass before us like shadows, will stay in our presence forever."

Tale Bearers.

In every society we find one of those "good-natured fools" who keep a whole community in hot water, and alienate friends by small tittle-tattle and idle tale-bearing. The most minute incident in families repeated from ignorant servant maids, and small serving men, forms the stock in trade of these weak gossips. Of course facts are embellished and enlarged upon, and what in itself was very simple and innocent grows in their hands to something enormous in iniquity, in its silly and malicious repetition. No general correctness of life is safe for their vile tongues. Some little incident is magnified into a great wrong or a great sin: and men find cold looks and shrugged shoulders without being conscious of ever having committed or given offence. Alienation occurs generally where misrepresentation takes place, and people find themselves at dagger's point without having anything based upon truth to warrant or to justify it.

It is all very well to say that character should be able to stand these small assaults—that it should, like the rocks in the ocean, beat back the waves of calumny and send it exploding in froth and bubbles at our feet. But the continued dropping of vile stories into the ear—like falling water upon marble—wears its way into our consciousness and memory, and insensibly affects us. We are so constituted that we cannot, at will, dismiss the mind of foul words in regard to others, told repeatedly. We are impressed by them, and while we say we do not believe them the impression remains; and we unconsciously allow them to impress our action. There is no remedy but utter scorn and contempt and a firm resolve to hear no more from any man who goes about retailing slanders in regard to neighbors and friends, rolling them as sweet morsels under the tongue. Every sense of honor, all decent pride and loving friendship forbids us to know such people.

The Japanese.

Nothing more plainly shows the spirit of enterprise that has lately possessed the Japanese, than the sending abroad of the choicest of their youth on a naval cruise in the frigate Tsukuba. This vessel, which has just arrived in San Francisco, is one of the training ships of the Japanese Navy, and is fitted up for and manned by cadets. These are assigned to a five years' service on a training vessel, after which period of apprenticeship they are allowed to enter the regular naval force. The navy is comparatively a new thing with the Japanese, anyhow, as only three years ago they made their first purchases of vessels to be used for war purposes. The naval force now consists of twelve ships, some of them very large and well fitted out in man-of-war style. The Tsukuba was originally an English vessel, and was purchased not long since by Japan for the purpose of a training school. The appearance of the vessel, therefore, differs little from that of an ordinary English or American line of battle ship, and the only thing noticeable is the oddity of the flag, the officers and the crew. On their entrance to the San Francisco harbor, the young Japs manifested the most eager curiosity, and were ranged fore and-aft sketching every object of interest with remarkable assiduity The Japanese are a far more intelligent Nation than the Chinese, and, as is proved by this ready acquisition of a navy, can more readily adapt themselves to a change of circumstances.—Globe-Democrat.

Keeping the Tongue

Keep it from unkindness. Words are sometimes wounds. Not very deep wounds always, and yet they irritate. Speech is unkind sometimes when there is no unkindness in the heart. So much the worse that needless wounds are inflicted; so much the worse that, unintentionally, pain is caused.

Keep it from falsehood. It is so easy to give a false coloring—to so make a statement that it may convey a meaning different from the truth, while yet there is an appearance of truth—that we need to be on our guard. There are very many who would shrink from telling a lie, who yet suffer themselves in such inaccurate, or exaggerated, or one-sided statements, that they really come under the condemnation of those whose "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."

Keep it from slander. The good reputation of others should be dear to us. Sin should not be suffered to go unrebuked; but it should be in accordance with the Scripture method, "Go and tell him of his faults twixt thee and him alone." And it should be borne in mind that what is too often considered as merely harmless gossip runs dangerously near, if it does not pass, tho confines of slander. A reputation is too sacred to be made a plaything of, even if intent be not malicious.—Rural N. Yorker.

A Boy's Love for His Mother.

Says the poet Coleridge,

"A mother is a mother still,
The holiest thing alive."

A writer, Beriah Green, thus quaintly speaks of the love of a big boy for his mother:

Of all the love affairs in the world, none can surpass the true love of a big boy for his mother. It is a love pure and noble, honorable in the highest degree to both. I do not mean merely a dutiful affection. I mean a love which makes a boy gallant to his mother, saying plainly to everybody that he is fairly in love with her. Next to the love of her husband, nothing so crowns a woman's life with honor as this second love, this devotion of the son to her. And I never yet knew a boy to "turn out" badly who began by falling in love with his mother. Any man may fall in love with a fresh faced girl, and the man who is gallant to the girl may cruelly neglect the worn and weary wife. But the big boy who is a lover of his mother at middle age is a true knight, who will love his wife as much in the sere leaf autumn as he did in the daisied spring. There is nothing so beautifully chivalrous as the love of a big boy for his mother.

Learn all You Can.

Never omit an opportunity to learn all you can. Sir Walter Scott said that even in a stage coach, he always found somebody who would tell him something he did not know. Conversation is frequently more useful than books for purposes of knowledge. It is therefore, a mistake to be silent among persons whom you think ignorant, for a little sociability on your part will draw them out, and they will be able to teach you something, no matter how ordinary their employment. Indeed, some of the most sagacious remarks are made by their particular pursuit. Hugh Miller owes not a little of his fame to observations made when he was a journeyman stone-mason, and working in a quarry, Socrates well said that there was but one good, which is knowledge, and one evil, which is ignorance. Every grain of sand goes to make a heap. A gold digger takes the smallest nuggets, and is not fool enough to throw them away, because he hopes to find a huge lump some time. When acquiring knowledge, we should never avoid an opportunity, however unpromising. If there is a moment's leisure spend it over a good book or instructive talking with the first you meet.

THE LORD PLUCKS THE FINE FEATHERS OF PRIDE.—Mr. Spurgeon says: There never was a saint yet that grew proud of his fine feathers, but that the Lord plucked them out by-and by; there never yet was an angel that had pride in his heart, but that he lost his wings and fell into Gehenna, as Satan and those fallen angels did; and there shall never be a saint who indulges self deceit, and pride, and self-confidence, but the Lord will spoil his glories, and trample his honors in the mire, and make him cry out yet again, 'Lord, have mercy on me, less than the least of all saints, and the very chief of sinners.'"

THE days are full of divine messages from the boundless love of our Father, and have a wealth of meaning deeper than any human soul has known or measured.—Duff.

FOR all other pleasures substitute the consciousness that you are obeying God, and preforming, not in word, but in deed, the duties of a wise and good man.—Epictetus.

DANIEL WEBSTER, when asked if he could comprehend how our Saviour could be both God and man, promptly replied: "No, sir. I cannot, and I would be ashamed to acknowledge him if I could. If I could, he could be no greater than myself. Such is my conviction of accountability to God and of my own incapacity to recover myself, that I feel I need a superhuman Saviour."

Would you show yourself really good to your daughters? Then be generous to them in a truer sense than that of heaping trinkets on their necks. Train them for independence first, and then labor to give it to them. Let them, as soon as ever they are grown up, have some little money, or means of making money, to be their own, and teach them how to deal with it without needing, every moment, somebody to help them.—Springfield Republican

GOD respecteth not the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they are; nor the rhetoric of our prayers, how neat they are; nor the geometry of our prayers, how long they are; nor the music of our prayers, how melodious they are; nor the logic of our prayers, how methodical they are,—but the divinity of our prayers, how heart-sprung they are. Not gifts, but graces, prevail in prayers.—Trapp.

WRONG.—It is very wrong for boys or girls to plague or make sport of their comrades because they are poorly dressed. Boys and girls win the love and esteem of playmates by kindness; clothes wear out in season, but kind words and gentle manners live forever, doing good to all.

"Have you any nice fresh farmer's eggs?" inquired a precise old lady at a grocery store. "No, ma'am," replied the practical clerk, "but we have some very good hen's eggs." She took three to try.

A bachelor returning from a ball in a crowded coach, declared with a groan that he had not the slightest objection to "rings on his fingers," but he had a most unequivocal aversion to "belles on his toes."

A lady applying for admission to the junior class of an Eastern seminary, being questioned by the President as to her qualifications, replied: "I ain't much of an arithmeticker, but I am an excellent grammarist."

Country bookseller to Fourth street woman—"Yes; but the work is both instructive and humorous." Fourth street woman—"That ain't the point. The young man said there was nothing compulsory about it, and was gone.

As a colored resident of Detroit was breasting the storm, with a new umbrella over his head, he was halted by a friend and brother, who asked, "Is dat your umbrella?" "Yes, sah—cost me $2," was the prompt reply. "Mr. Savage," said the other, very solemnly, "when a man will buy a $2 umbrella to keep the wet off'n a fifty-cent suit of close, what's de use to talk about economy?"—Detroit Free Press.

A little fellow, who was at a neighbor's house about noon the other day, watched the preparations for dinner, with great interest, but, when asked to stay and eat something he promply refused. Two lawyers in a country court.—one of whom had gray hair, and the other, though just as old a man as his learned friend, had hair which looked suspiciously black—had some altercation about a question of practice, in which the gentleman with the dark hair remarked to his opponent, "A person at your time of life!"—looking at the barrister's gray head—"ought to have long enough experience to know what is customary in such cases." "You may stare at my gray hair, if you like. My hair will be gray as long as I live, and yours will be black as long as you dye."

We received for publication last week an obituary notice of a deceased lady, in Fulton, Davie county. The name of the writer did not accompany the notice and hence we cannot publish it.

The annual meeting of the bishops of the M. E. Church, South, will be held at Nashville, on the first Wednesday in May.

Rev. E. R. Hendrix of the Missouri Conference has been added to the editorial staff of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. With Drs. McAnally, Haygood and the new editor, this excellent religious journal can but be ably edited.

In returning papers to this office, postmasters will oblige us, and save themselves a great deal of trouble, by writing the name of the office from which they are returned, on the wrapper or margin of the paper in wrapper.

The postal law which went into effect January 1875, requires that the postage on all newspapers be prepaid at the office where the paper is mailed. In compliance with this law, we prepay the postage on our entire mail list, and subscribers are not required to pay at the office where the paper is received.

Rev. B. T. Blake.—Upon our first page will be found an interesting letter from Father Blake. The committee of arrangements extended to him a cordial invitation to take part in the approaching centennial mass meeting to be held in this city, commencing on the 21st of March, but his feeble health compels him to decline the invitation.

Not long since Thomas Carlyle, the eminent English writer, became an octogenarian and the prominent historians and statesmen of Germany sent across the waters a "thankful greeting and warm congratulation." Now, Ranke, "the king of Prussian historians," has just celebrated his eightieth birthday, surrounded by friends and full of honors, receiving, by the wires, the congratulations of his admirers in all parts of the world. They ask him now to crown his sixty years' literary work, with a Universal History of the world. A great work for a man in his ninth decade!

The Trial of Faith.

Happiness and usefulness in the Christian life are founded in faith—faith in the Son of God. A trial of this faith is a test of its degree. We do not know what faith we possess until it is called into lively exercise.—We may be mistaken, or deceived as to its nature and degree. To walk upon the water, may be thought by us an easy thing—an easy matter in which we may stand as witnesses for Christ. But the Lord brings our faith to the test. He bids us come to him on the water, and then we begin to sink. He suffers us to be assailed by our enemies, and we shrink from the cross. He puts our faith to the trial and then we learn how little we possess. The trial of our faith is also a test of its character. It is the furnace that tries the ore of what kind it is. It may be brass, or iron, or clay, or perhaps precious gold, but the crucible will test it. Much passes for faith, real faith, which is not faith. As the spurious counterfeit metal is tested by trial, so must our faith be. The real character of Judas was not known until his covetousness was tested. Simon Magus was thought to possess a genuine faith until he thought to purchase the gift of God by money. Our heavenly Father will try his own work in the soul. Every grace of his own Spirit he will at one time or another place in the crucible, under the immediate oversight of his divine eye—as a refiner. He will see that not a particle of the precious metal is consumed. He is with his children in every affliction. Not for a moment will he leave them. Let gratitude, rather than mourning, joy rather than sorrow, attend every test which a loving and faithful Father brings to his own work:—"That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

Taxation of Church Property.

The suggestion in his last message to Congress, by Gen Grant, that Church property should be taxed in order to increase the revenues of the Government, has caused much and wholesome discussion in the columns of the press,—especially religious journals—and has brought forth comparative statements of the amount of property held by different denominations. By these it appears that the Methodist Church controls more property than any other in the United States and that it would be most affected by a law such as Gen. Grant proposes. It was thought that his object was to cripple Romanism and hedge it within proper bounds, so that it should not become a moneyed power, besides being a religious despotism. But the comparison of the values of the property owned by various Churches in the Union shows that he could have been influenced by no such motive, since the measure would affect most seriously the Church to which his family belong and he himself is attached.

The idea was, no doubt, to carry out to its farthest extent the principle of an entire impenitence between Church and State—to destroy the possibility, or appearance of any partiality on the part of the government or government officials toward any denomination, sect or society:—to place all Churches, institutions, cooperative bodies, and so forth, whether rich or poor, upon the same footing, just as it is the theory of government that all men should be upon an equality as to rights and privileges. In short, the intention was to show that the Government is under no obligation to relieve one class of property of its share of the public burdens, although it be property used in the furtherance of religion. It is, in a measure, some concession to infidels and atheists who contend that they and their property ought not to be taxed to support a religion which they deny, or that the government ought not to favor the holders of one opinion or set of opinions more than it favors others who entertain different opinions and theories about life and the future of men.

But these arguments for the taxation of the property belonging to Churches and benevolent societies are numerous and specious. It is the duty of the Government to discriminate in favor of societies that hold property which is used, not for speculative or gainful purposes, nor for bestowing power and influence in any other than their own legitimate province, but for the good and happiness of men. Whatever tends to make men better and more intelligent citizens ought to be encouraged by the government. Schools do this, and hence they are encouraged and relieved of taxation. Churches teach morality and obedience to law and on this account, if no other, are to be favored. So, also, those institutions which minister to the necessities and relieve distresses of men, should be supported and encouraged by the State and government which they relieve of expense and trouble. In the proportion in which religious denominations prosper and churches increase, will morality prevail, the laws will be observed, and crime will decrease; idleness and pauperism will yield to the active hand of industry, and wealth and intelligence will be the possessions of the people. A State obstructs itself and its own interests, therefore, when it imposes a tax on a class of property which enhances the value of other property situated near it, and stimulates men to become better citizens. To tax churches, schools and benevolent institutions is to impose a burden upon the very sources from which government derives its best strength and moral support.

Editorial Notes.

Rev. E. D. Winslow, a Boston preacher, lately perpetrated immense defalcations and forgeries. He was prominent in Church, society and business circles, having held responsible and honorable positions in all. Being well know in financial circles, he secured large accomodations at the banks, by means of forged endorsements, and there is no certainty which of the obligations he had discounted are genuine and which are forgeries. The amount of his frauds is about $600,000. It was discovered that he took passage to Rotterdam where he is safe, as we have no extradition treaty with Holland.

According to a report recently made in the Journal of Evangelical Missions, an extract from which we notice in an exchange, there are in the world about 1,559 Missionary stations and 2,132 Missionaries. England, is first, with over one thousand workers, Germany and Switzerland with 500, America with 460, Holland with forty three, France, twenty two, and the Scandinavian North with forty-five. England spends the most money in the cause, America comes next, then Germany, Holland, France, etc. According to this report there are in Asia 449,170 converts, over 20,000 in China, and 25,614 in Turkey and Egypt. Africa counts a large number of converts on account of the great numbers now to be found in Madagascar, where there are 283,204, according to these statistics. South Africa numbers over 124,200, while there are about 65,000 in West Africa. In America the West Indian Missions are given at about 308,206 converts, while 43,723 are put down for North America.

Half a century ago, travelers who described the capital at Washington used to describe, as a particularly noticeable feature of the society there, the drunkenness during the session of congress, and the night sessions as scenes of debauch. We are glad to know that the growing temperance sentiment of the public has wrought a change in the conduct of our congressmen and the usages of Washington society. Wine is still drunk at dinner tables, but the sight of a drunken Congressman is an exceptional thing now a-days. Some members of Congress do not even have wine on their tables, and Dr. Chickering who reorganizes the Congressional Temperance Society at the commencement of every session, is unusually successful this winter.

Soorjee, a reformer in India, has introduced a new kind of religion among his countrymen. He preaches worship of one God, peace and goodwill. His followers take an oath to abstain from all crimes and offenses, spirituous liquors and causing death to any living thing. They bind themselves to live by the produce of the soil and to bathe before eating.

Much of the space of the last Methodist Quarterly Review (Dr. Wheedon) is taken up with a discussion of the action of the General Conference in 1844 and the present relations of the two branches of the Church, North and South. Dr. Myers' "Disruption of the Methodist Episcopal Church" (which we noticed some time since) has created a stir among those of our Northern brethren who ardently hate the Church, South, and are always on the qui vive for an opportunity to show their fangs and venom. "Fraternity" is further off now than ever, if the spirit which breathes over the pages of Wheedon's Quarterly is of the same sort with that which animates the masses of the Northen Church. In noticing Dr. Myer's demand that the Northern Church should rescind the repeal of the Plan of Separation, Dr. Wheedon scouts the idea as not to be considered, and says:

"We are willing to shake hands in silent oblivion of the past: we are willing with them to kneel down before God, while each prays forgiveness for his share in the common sin; but the proposition that the maintainers of freedom and government must apologize to the assailants of both for such maintenance is a reverse of the tables altogether ludicrous. It is too much like the culprit expecting the judge to beg pardon for hanging him."

On this heated language of Dr. Wheedon, the N. Y. Methodist, a liberal and even tempered journal, remarks:

The two ends of this passage are in complete antagonism, and it is just this antagonism that makes reconciliation difficult. The hypothesis is purely gratuitous, and even Bishop Kavanaugh would recoil from the contemptuous pardon offered to him and his as culprits graciously let go by a magnanimous judge.

Peep at the Colleges,

It was my duty to go to see my mother—81 years old. I felt it my duty to turn aside and look in on some of the schools. Spent a day at Greensboro F. College. Ninety girls from abroad, besides the local patronage: twelve daughters of preachers there.

Most of our preachers are of such talent and industry, that they would have been able to educate their children, if they had given their life to some secular employment. The church ought to enable them to educate their children.

Girls at Greensboro enjoy fine facilities for study and improvement, and the most perfect physical comfort of which I ever conceived. I spent a day at Chapel Hill: no rival of Academies. Some boys wanted to enter there, not prepared for the lowest class. The faculty commended them to preparatory schools elsewhere. Some turned away because they were not allowed to enter as high a class as they wished. All right, gentlemen. Stick to that; don't let down your standard and embarrass boys by yielding to their notions on a point so vital. About 70 students are there. Faculty and recitation rooms look like business.

Spent two days at Trinity, found one hundred and fifteen students there, 8 sons of our preachers. The machinery runs very quietly. Some youngsters who go out from Trinity are pompous and self-important: but the crowd here is quiet and modest—delightfully so.

In the recitation rooms of Prof. Ganaway, Johnson, Carr and Pegram, I saw good signs of study and application to duty on the part of pupils.

The new Chapel is a gem of rare beauty. Ye Methodist people of N. C. what are you doing for your sons? A hundred more ought to be sent to Trinity in six weeks. Don't say you are not able. Sell some of your property and put it in the head of your son. He will thank you for it when you are dead. I have met a son who blamed his father for allowing him to grow up in ignorance. Let it not be so with yours when you are gone.

A. D. Betts.

A note from Rev. R. L. Abernethy informs us that he has one hundred and fifty students at Rutherford College. This speaks well for the College and for the President.

A General Disease.

Many people are diseased who are not aware of it. Disease it may be has been preying on their system for years, but they have not found it out; or if they have been much acquainted with the fact, they act as though they knew it not. With the disease of vanity all are more or less afflicted and nothing but the grace of God will cure this dreadful malady. Upon this subject the Richmond Christian Advocate has this to say:

Of all the afflictions of fallen human nature vanity is the most common: we would give something really handsome to see the person who is a stranger to it. In strut, and show, and squawk this richly feathered biped often finds his counterpart among the non feathered tribe. Vanity and peacocks are both very old. In Job's time, and he was far back of Moses, vain man tried to be wise, though born like a wild ass' colt. Solomon was a royal importer, and did a heavy business in peacocks, apes, and gold, a trio very often found in company. We think it likely that from these objects, and others on which the great king doted too fondly, he received the conviction that vanity was one of the chief elements in all earthly things. We are not prepared to say he was far from the truth, leading such a life as he did for the most part.

We do not think that Adam and Eve were vain, though they were the best looking couple that ever lived in this world. But even they, on Bishop Butler's theory, might have become vain and so fallen from their high estate without the help of the devil. However this may be, one thing is certain, all their descendants are now suffering more or less with the affliction of vanity. From the savage with his extra fine breech cloth, feathers and war-paint, to the civilized young gentleman who parts his hair in the middle, and gives his whole mind to the tie of his cravat—from the dusky maiden of the torrid zone, whose least want is clothing, to the modern belle, who languishes for all manner of dresses tucked and tied upon her person in all manner of grotesque styles, the common heritage is vanity. It is thought by some that all vain people are empty headed. It is not so. Some of the cleverest sort of people are the vainest. Doctor Sam. Johnson was certainly not a handsome man nor empty-headed, and yet he was extremely vain; he looked upon his grand style as the perfection of writing; and, in view of this, Goldsmith laughingly told him that if he were to write a dialogue for fishes he would make all the little fishes talk like whales. But if all the little fishes should talk like whales, how would the whales talk?

And Goldsmith himself was as vain of his flashy clothes as his huge friend was of his style.

There are but few men in the world that are not vain of some quality or other, and in half an hour an observant person can find it out. There is no trade, profession, or calling, free from the intrusions of vanity. A man gives his mind to a business and has success in it, and gradually the conceit grows upon him that no other man can conduct it as well. This is vanity. A man by practice and natural gifts may learn to speak so as to sway the passions of the multitude; and, watching the magic effects of his eloquence, he begins to think himself the unrivalled master of oratory. This also is vanity. A man of good natural parts devotes himself to study: he plunges into the muddle and mists of metaphysics, and thinks and writes and writes and thinks, filling his brain with the ideas of greater men than himself, and dwelling upon them until they seem to him the discoveries of his own genius, he announces them with the most offensive dogmatism as something new and wonderful. This also is vanity. A man studies with an insatiate ambition to become a great and successful and shall we add, a sensational preacher. He reaches a giddy height where he is wrapped in the robe of vanity, and from which the path slopes down to ruin.—Well it is for a man thus exposed if he come to know that the devil will not be slow to seek his undoing by stimulating his vanity.

"You gave us a fine sermon to-day, sir," said one of Robert Hall's hearers to him as he came out of church.

"The devil is ahead of you sir," said the great preacher; 'he told me that before I left the pulpit."

Here we have the secret of safety for all who are in danger from the same cause. Repel on the instant the first risings of vanity. To indulge it for one moment is to incur the danger of being puffed up by an overweening conceit of one's attainments. The only cure for vanity is a deep and thorough conviction of our own guilt, littleness, and helplessness. What are we but poor pensioners upon the bounty of heaven's Great King? What have we that he has not given? Our persons, our minds, our means, individual and social influence, are gifts which we dare not use to feed and foster vanity, but which we must employ for his glory and the good of others. One thing we have in our own right, and only one; that is sin.—This is of ourselves. This thought should work an effectual cure of vanity. Sit down, now, and think awhile; what are you vain of? Don't dodge the question, for you are surely vain of something. Whatever it may be, cast it down, trample it under foot, and go to the Great Physician and be cured.

The New-York Tribune, which distinguished itself by its reports of the Evangelical Alliance meetings in 1873, is publishing entire Mr. Moody's sermons now being delivered in that city. We understand that Mr. Moody's discourses in New-York have been marked by greater power and success than any yet given in this country, and that there is great popular interest in his meetings. To accomodate the great demand for Mr. Moody's sermons, which have never before been accessible to the reading public, The Tribune announces that during the continuance of the Moody and Sankey meetings it will receive subscriptions to its Daily for $1 per month. We doubt whether a better investment can be made, The Tribune, without the sermons, being well worth much more than the money.

Dear Brethren: We publish the above as the Programme for our Centennial celebration in Raleigh. It is not fully completed—some few changes may be made in reference to the pulpit exercises. It is however substantially arranged. As the people generally in N. C. feel a deep interest in this celebration, we most respectfully request the Press of the State to copy this Programme.

Other important announcements will be made next week. Let there be a grand rally at Raleigh: and let all our ministers and people pray for a "tidal wave" of salvation to sweep over the whole state.

Commodore Vanderbilt, it was recently mentioned, had added to his gifts to Vanderbilt University, in Tennessee, bringing the whole sum donated by him up to $700,000. He has since deposited in the Union Trust Company, New York, to the credit of the University, $300,000 more, making in all the round sum of $1,000,000.

The Japanese minister of foreign affairs and the commissioner of education has granted premission to Rev. Joseph Nee Sima to teach Christianity in his school at Tokio, Japan, and to train native converts for the ministry, and all this has been done contrary to the law of the empire.

An unknown lady of another denomination has presented to the Baltimore Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a gift of twelve hundred dollars.

Minutes---First Class.

Messrs Editors: The Minutes of our last Conference have been received.—I have not had time to examine the work very carefully, but think it is full of valuable information, besides the proceedings of the Conference.

I hope the errors are few in number and unimportant in character. A few, however, are palpable. I will call attention to one or two.

I see Tryon Street, Charlotte, paid all assessments except for Foreign Missions. We fell below the assessment $20.00, but paid $21.00 more than the assessment for Domestic Missions. So we paid really more than the total amount assessed for all the items.

Furthermore, we raised more money according to the exhibit than any station in the Conference, unless we call Wilson a station, and yet Tryon Street did not get in the "First Class," while Thomasville and High Point did, though they failed to raise the assessment for Domestic Missions. I think that T. and H. Pt. ought to be considered "First Class," because they overpaid on the total though they failed on one.

Again: Edenton Street, Raleigh, failed on the total $125.00, and yet it graces the head of the list of "First Class."

I know not how these errors could have been made, but I think they are of sufficient magnitude to call forth these lines. Whether the fact be published in the "Journal" or not, Tryon Street is alive and is not ashamed of her record for 1874 and 1875.

Yours respectfully,
P. J. Carraway.

I Thank God and Take Courage.

I am rejoiced to say, that the drops which precede the "shower" have begun to fall. But I would be pleased to see them fall a little faster and thicker. The first response came from Ridgeway—then Raleigh, Magnolia, Wilmington, Thomasville, and Charlotte. Who will be the next to send me one dollar to finish our Church? There is an absolute necessity for help, or I would not ask it. Then let the one thousand friends respond immediately. Some who read my appeal, may have been tempted to treat it with silence, but I pray you don't do that.

God, our Father, is giving you an opportunity to do good—in helping the unfortunate—who were made so by the war.

One good brother got his friends to join him in sending me a money order for several dollars. I thank all who have kindly responded to my request, and pray that God will bless them an hundred fold.

I want all my friends to feel good—then send that dollar along, and not wait until you forget the matter, and thus miss feeling good. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain yours fraternally.

B. B. Culbreth.

Widows' and Orphans' Benefit Society

Messrs Editors:—Please say through your paper to the preachers that, all who have not received books of blank certificates of membership of The Widows' and Orphans' Benefit Society, will please notify me by postal card, giving me their address plainly written.

I have sent out quite a number, and many of them have been lost through the mails. We do not expect each preacher to keep one himself, unless he is so disposed; but we want every one to select for us a good man or woman, who will take some interest in the Society.

We have no idea of abandoning this great, and as we believe, greatly needed enterprise; not in the least. But, Messrs Editors, I wish to ask the preachers, what they are doing for the Society, directly or indirectly? I wish to inquire whether some of them, do not think the indifference they are manifesting towards it, is enough to freeze out the last bit of interest from the heart of the last friend? Let us have an answer from each.

Yours &c.,
T. C. Williams,
Fin. Secty.

To the Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church, South, in North Carolina, within the bounds of the Virginia and Holston Conferences—Dear Brethren: The North Carolina Conference at its last session resolved to celebrate the year 1876 as the "Centennial of North Carolina Methodism."

A grand centennial mass-meeting will be held in Raleigh, N. C., beginning "March 21st and continuing 3 or more days." The Conference passed the following:

"Resolved, That the preachers and members of the Virginia and Holston Conferences, within the bounds of the State of North Carolina be earnestly invited to unite with the N. C. Conference in the observance of this centennial year."

We hereby most cordially invite you to be with us at Raleigh, March 21st 1876, and participate in the services of the occasion. (Signed)

A missionary from India relates the experience of a native Christain whom he was called to visit. Inquiring the state of her mind, she replied." Happy, happy! I have Christ here!" laying her hand on the Bengalee Bible; "and Christ here!" pressing it to her heart; "and Christ there!" pointing heavenward.

There is no choice of words for him who clearly sees the truth. That provides him with the best words. If your subject do not appear to you the flower of the world at this moment, you have not rightly chosen it.

"Religious Bees" is what the Philadelphia Church Journal calls revivals. It is opposed to the religious crusades which propose to convert all "the sinners in the land in three months." Why? Would not the sinners be made better by conversion?—They could not be made worse by any thing that was genuine.

Popularity.

It is a self-evident fact that unless a person possesses sterling worth he will not have the esteem of his fellow-men It is true, that for a time he may deceive, but eventually his faults will be exposed.

This is applicable also to articles recommended to the confidence of purchasers For a brief period by false commendations and glittering exterior, they impose on the people but as soon as tested they are cast aside. The test of time has proven the intrinsic worth of Dr. TUTT'S HAIR DYE, and today no preparation enjoys greater popularity. From year to year the demand for it has increased, and now this in general use both in this and foreign countries. No stronger proof of its value could be given.

Deaths.

Died, in Mecklenburg county, of pneumonia on 28th Jan, Rufus A. son of Daniel Sides, formerly of Stanly county, aged 17 years and four months.

In the same county, of dropsy on the 4th inst., Miss Elizabeth M Hall. Daughter of Samuel Hall decd.

Jobiel Atwater was born March 17th, 1817, and died at his residence in Chatham county Jan. 19th 1876, aged fifty-eight years, ten months and two days.

It is seldom that a community is called upon to mourn the loss of a citizen so true, so noble, so useful. His education was limited, but his aims were high A vigorous constitution, an indomitable energy, a clear head, a warm heart and a discriminating judgment raised him to a position that commanded the respect and confidence of all Just and fair and liberal in his dealings with others, charitable in his judgments, more willing to suffer wrong than to do wrong, he obeyed the divine injunction "as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men."

His friends were often anxious to put him in public positions of trust and honor, but unambitious for self he never consented to hold any office save that of Magistrate, and that only for the benefit of others.

From his youth he was an exemplary member of the Methodist Church. He loved the church of his choice—its ministry and its institutions. To these his contributions were liberal, while his private charities were unostentatious and constant.

He was stricken down in vigorous manhood, and for weary months his sufferings were intense, yet there was no murmur no terror, no fear As he was stepping down into the dark waters, he calmly and confidently remarked "I have tried to live well, and now my time has come, I shall die well. I shall go safe."

"Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be upon their head. They shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away."

A. H. M.

Died on the 18th of January 1876, in this city, Mr. Parker Read, in the 83d year of his age.

He had been afflicted with asthma many years, at times suffering very much. He was confined to his bed but a few days previous to his death retaining his mind to the last. He was more than an ordinary man, his intellectual capacity being very strong his judgment sound, and his attachments very firm He left assurance that he died not without hope as he called upon his Maker for the summons Thus ends the pilgrimage here of another aged, honorable and prominent member of the Read family. May the trials and vexations of this life have been exchanged for the Heaven of eternal bliss.

W. H. R.

Died in Edgecombe Jan. 23rd 1876, Mrs. Margaret Horne wife of John M. Horne.

Sister Horne was a faithful member of the M E. Church South, truly a good wife, mother and obedient daughter and an affectionate sister.

Her death was unexpected and therefore harder to bear. Two days previous she was in usual good health and with the prospect of a long and happy life. Surely what time the Son of man shall come we know not. We believe he found her ready. She leaves a husband and one child. God bless and comfort the bereaved family!

F. D. SWINDELL.

Died in Franklinsville Randolph co. N. C. Dec 17, 1875 Martha Russel, wife of Jerome B Russel, aged 37 years.

Sister dies I join'd the church in early life She was a good neighbor, a devoted mother, and an exemplary christian. She had been more or less afflicted for many years, but for the last two years she suffered much and intensely, but she bore her afflictions with christian resignation. She leaves a husband and four children, one son and three daughters, all members of the Methodist E. Church, South, the youngest daughter, Lizzie Cecil about ten years old May the Lord soon bring her into his fold, and may they all meet in heaven, never to part again.

Symptoms of Specific and General Consumption as it prevails in America, and as it now is Consuming the people.

1st. Of the head—heavy, dull, aching over the eyes, sometimes extended back through different parts of the head, and causing a weight or heat, or giddiness on top of the head, snapping and cracking noise in the ears, dimness of hearing—often the secretion collects in the middle ear, closing up the eustachian tubes, producing deafness—the lining membrane being the form the head through the whole alimentary canal, and down into the lungs, it has but to extend itself to affect the whole system It becomes virulent in the nose sometimes, causing a tenderness, or producing offensive breath, discharges of yellowish matter and scabs the shape of the nostrils, or if the partition bone is only affected, then the lschars are that, and when they discharge, which is generally after exertion, the nose is open, the patient breathes more easily and the head feels more clear—the heaviness over the eyes and across the forehead is seldom entirely gone, but it is aggravated by every fresh cold. This barbarous and offensive disease, called Ozoena, which has now assumed a tertiary form of cancer, destroying everything but the outside skin, sometimes letting the nose sink in, extending to the throat destroying the voice, etc., when the disease is called Laryngitis, Bronchitis, etc.

2nd. A collection of tenacious or slimy secretion falling down into the throat and thrown out—tickling, rasping, hoarseness and scraping to keep open the wind pipe; difficult breathing, oppression and soreness under the breast-bone; tenderness in the left side; rheumatic pains between the shoulders; stiff neck on taking cold; palpitation of the heart; torpid liver; sometimes yellow complexion; general dull heavy feeling; extreme shortness of breath; soreness of stomach pit; bloated sensation; belching of wind; yawning gaping, keeping mouth open to breathe; distress, sleepless nights; worse when lying down, and it now terminates either in consumption of the Lungs, or follows the mucous membrane through the whole alimentary and urinal canal, causing dyspepsia costiveness piles, inflammation of the bladder, trouble in the urinary organs, (and in women, nearly the whole train of female disease,) and general Consumption, emaciation, complete prostration, etc., with all of which, and many other symptoms, called by twenty different names, the sufferer may exist for a while. Dr. Jones cures this Dangerous and Insidious Disease by the Ærien system—using specific medicines known only to himself, applied to the diseased surface, in the form of spray. He relieves the sufferer in a few minutes, and supplies the patient with all that is required to finish the cure at home.

Dr. Jones, is now curing this and other difficult diseases at the McAdoo House, Greensboro, N. C. where he remains until March 3rd Send for circulars for your afflicted friends and go and get cured yourself ere it is too late I. t.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS IS RHEUMATIC GOUT. ONE OF THE MOST REMARKABLE CASES ON RECORD. THE MINERAL WATERS OF THE WORLD MAY BE SAFELY CHALLENGED FOR A SIMILAR RESULT.

CASE OF J. C. GORMAN.

Adjutant General of the State of North Carolina, of Raleigh N. C.

BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, Aug 18th, 1875.

COLONEL GORMAN:

Dear Sir—I have been a sufferer from RHEUMATIC GOUT of a most aggravating character. Most of my limbs, especially at the joints, were greatly swollen and enlarged, and I suffered at times the most excruciating pain. It was with difficulty that I moved about at all with the assistance of a cane. My liver was torpid and complexion sallow. In this condition I was advised by my physician (Dr. E. B. Haywood, of Raleigh, N. C.,) to visit these springs. I arrived here on Friday, the 13th day of the month, having to be assisted from the stage and to my room, both legs and arms being very much contracted. I commenced at once the use of the water of Spring No. 2, which in about four hours acted profusely on my kidneys, giving evident relief to my general system. From that time my improvement has been so rapid and astonishing as to attract the attention and remark of the visitors generally at the Springs. On this, the sixth day since my arrival, I am walking readily without my cane. The swelling of my joints and the contraction of my limbs have almost entirely disappeared, and I am free from pain, I reached here without appetite, but on the next day found myself craving food, and was enabled to eat heartily.

Very respectfully,

J. C. GORMAN.

Statement of Dr. J. D. EGGLESTON, of Hampden Sidney College, Va., a visitor at the Springs, in relation to the foregoing case.

My attention was call to the condition of General Gorman upon his arrival at the Springs by his great deformity and difficulty of walking, and I observed with interest from day to day the rapid and astonishing improvement above described by himself. His disease was evidently Rheumatic Gout.

V. D. EGGLESTON, M D.,
Of Hampden-Sidney, Va.

In a communication from Gen'l Gorman, dated September 12th, 1875, referring to his disease, and the great relief he experienced from these waters, he says,

"I went to your Springs at death's door, and had I been dipped in the Biblical Pool of Bethesda, relief could hardly have been more instantaneous than I experienced from the waters of the Buffalo Springs."

So uniform has been the relief afforded by the waters of Spring No. 2 in Rheumatic and Gouty affections, that the cases in which they fail, form the exception to the general rule.

THOMAS F. GOODE,
Proprietor Buffalo Lithia Springs Va.

SOMETHING NEW!

An Imported Remedy.—Cannabis Indica.

This wonderful preparation, known by the above title, which has attained such celebrity during the last few years in all parts of the United States as a reserve cure for Consumption, Bronchitis and Asthma, can now be obtained at all first class druggists throughout the country. We have made permanent arrangement in CALCUTTA, INDIA, for obtaining the "PURE DRUG" and having it extracted upon its own soil (the climate in America being unchangeable to extract large quantities free from mildew. These remedies are now prepared from the best Hemp, gathered at the right season and extracted during midsummer in Calcutta There is no a Single ounce of Consumption that it does not dissipate and it will break a cold in twenty-four hours One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical.

$2 50 per bottle, or 3 bottles for $6.50.

As this is an imported article, we do not commission our remedies, but will be pleased to make them as the everywhere.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL.

A Household Weekly Magazine.

DEVOTED TO

Popular Literature, and all Matters of Taste and Culture.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL appears in new type and with other unheralded improvements making it the handsomest and cheapest literary journal in the country. APPLETONS' JOURNAL is to be comprehensive, including under each of the branches of literature, and treating all subjects of interest to intelligent readers; it designs to be practical in its text and pure in tone; it gives in a month's reading more than twice as much matter as any of the Monthly Magazines, while in quality its literature is of the highest class.

Price, 24 per Annum; 10 cents per Number.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

The undersigned have procured, exclusively for subscribers to APPLETONS' JOURNAL, a splendid steel engraving of which is offered under special terms, to every subscriber. Send address for Circular.

The engraving, is in line and stipple. It is not a fancy picture, but an actual representation of Dickens' favorite study, in which, while the portrait of the distinguished author is strikingly faithful.

The size of the plate is 21 by 14, printed on heavy plate paper 24 by 30, making a large and handsome engraving for the parlor or library wall. The execution leaves the plate of a superior order

The cost of the engraving is the least part of this offer. Considered as an original work, it would be cheap at the price, but as it is offered exclusively to subscribers, in addition to the JOURNAL for one year, for $4 00, that is, for $1 additional, each purchaser subscribes to the JOURNAL for 1876 may receive a superb engraving worth fully five times the amount.

The engraving is entirely new It has never been for sale in the print-shops, and can only be obtained, except in connection with APPLETONS' JOURNAL upon the terms and conditions given above It will be mailed to subscribers, postage prepaid.

MAKE YOUR OWN

FERTILIZERS.

Farmers save from 20 to 40 per cent by buying the

CHEMICAL FERTILIZER,

equal to the best Guano at a cost of only

TEN DOLLARS PER TON.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

MR. WM. SIMPSON, SIR, I am so much pleased with the result of the fertilizer I made last spring of the chemicals which I purchased of you, that I feel it due to you and the farming community to say what I think of it. I used it side by side with the "Star" at the rate of 10 lbs of the home-made to 200 lbs of the "Star," per acre

The growth of the home-made was earlier, matured earlier and made more per acre.

If this can be of any service, use it, as I am fully satisfied of the merits of your fertilizer,

Very respectfully.

Signed, G. I. BANK.

RALEIGH, N. C. Nov. 24. 1875.

This is to certify that Dr. J. J. Penny, and A. Y. Bailey, after using the preparation of Guano recommended by Mr. Wm. Simpson, cheerfully state "that we gave it a fair test alongside of "Zell's Ammoniated Super Phosphate" "Bradley's Seafowl and Super Phosphate Star Guano," also "Phaine" and pronounce it equal if not superior to either, and the consideration of cost makes it by far more economical. We therefore recommend it to the consideration of farmers.

Respectfully &c.

Signed, J. A. J. PENNY,
A. Y. BAILEY.

"My Home is There"

[H. D. BENTON.]

Above the choking damps of sin
Above its wild distressful cry,
Where love supreme perfumes the air,
My home, my healthiest home is there.

Above the reckless foes of Truth,
Where not one life corrupts the air,
My home, my purest home is there.

Where not one loving heart is sore,—
By dear delusions pained no more;
Where all the Savior's beams share,
My home, my sweetest home is there.

Where my departed friends leave mine,
To sing while ceaseless time roll on
Where Christ's spacious throne they share,
My home, my happiest home is there.

Above all tears and sad complaints,
Where sparkling crowns adorn the saints,
Where white and shining robes they wear,
My ever blissful home is there.

Answers.

Sampson's riddle was "Out of the eater came forth meat and out of the strong came forth weakness." Found in Judges 14th chap. 14th verse. Mamie Fleming, B. T. Simmons.

"Lo this only have I found that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Found in Ecclesiastes 7th ch. 29th verse. Mamie Fleming.

The answer to the cross word enigma proposed by Fannie Sue Hodges is "Daniel." Mamie Fleming.

Questions.

B. T. Simmons asks where in the Bible is found "Go home."

Mamie Fleming asks where the following verse is found. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

R. F. B. asks the children who was the greatest fox hunter of ancient times.

ENIGMA.

On whom did a prophet's mantle fall?
Who disobeyed a monarch husband's call?
Who from his childhood's home was cast?
Who hoped to win her husband's love at last?
By their initials you will find
That which each day doth bring to bear,
A load sufficient for one hearts
Without the prophecies of fear.

JOHN L. RAY.

CROSS WORD ENIGMA.

My first is in dead but not in living.
My second is in walk but not in running.
My third is in viper but not in snake.
My fourth is in sleep but not in wake.
My fifth is in day but not in night.
My whole was one of the kings of Israel.

J. R. BETTS.

"Somebody Must be in."

Here is a little story which tells better than a dictionary can the meaning of the word "disinterestedness."

The late Archdeacon Hare was once, when tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, giving a lecture, when a cry of "Fire" was raised. Away rushed his pupils, and forming themselves into a line between the building, which was close at hand, and the river, passed buckets from one to another. The tutor quickly following, found them thus engaged; at the end of the line one youth was standing up to his waist in the river; he was delicate and he looked consumptive.

"What!" cried Mr. Hare, "you in the water, Sterling? you so liable to take cold!"

"Somebody must be in it," the youth answered; "why not I, as well as another?"

The spirit of this answer is that of all great and generous doing. Cowardice and coldness, too, say, "Oh, somebody will do it," and the speaker sits still; he is not the one to do what needs doing. But nobility of character, looking at necessary things, says, "Somebody must do it; why not I?" And the deed is done.—Chatterbox.

Teaching a Dog.

A dog can be taught to go into the corner when commanded, in the following way:—By attraction to a piece of meat held rather out of reach, and gradually enticing him toward the corner, then talking to him all the time, and instructing him how to stand frequently repeating the word we wish to particularly notice, viz: "Corner." After a second or two give the meat, lengthening the time of standing between each lesson. Now, point to the place and say, "Corner!" He walks in of his own accord, and of course is rewarded after.

Another trick is waltzing. This is done by holding a piece of meat high, and moving it in a circle, saying, "Waltz," and gently scolding when he jumps. He stands up and walks, or rather runs, upon his hind legs, exactly as you move the meat. Now, he will do it without meat when you say, Waltz." Another trick is jumping over, through and under the back of a cane-bottomed chair. Hold a piece of meat and stand some way behind the chair with him upon the seat; then show him, by pointing what you require him to do, and say "over," and he, of course, jumps over for the meat; the same "through" the bar, and "under." Of course dogs will try at first to do everything in the manner easiest to themselves, but by practice they soon find it is no use. Another trick is to arrange the chairs in a semicircle round the room and make him run over them upon the seats, this can be done by enticing him from one chair to another. Now allow some distance between each chair, and he will run round as quickly as possible and stand up upon the last one, waiting for his tit bit. A dog of ordinary sagacity can be taught almost anything by kindness and perseverance; but if you lose your temper or are impatient, they are ruined, becoming either stubborn or nervous. The great thing is to talk to dogs and encourage them and make companions of them.—From the Young Folk's Monthly.

NATIONS do not grow old, as men do, and every fresh generation is a new people ready for the care of the legislator.—De Tocqueville.

Rural and Domestic.

Small Farms And Thorough Culture

Although some of our Virginia farmers well understand the advantages of small, rich, compact farms, yet many seem to persist in adhering to old ruts: operating on extensive sterile surface (made so by exhaustion) with all the appertaining draw-backs such as keeping up extensive enclosures, slip shop, shallow and untimely plowing, scanty manuring, &c., resulting in poor crops, both as to quantity and quality; besides, loss of time, wear and tear in sowing, reaping, harking and housing, difficulty in keeping down the weeds, briers and bushes on extensive grounds, and numerous other disadvantages too tedious to mention. Better draw in fences, sell, or even give away the surplus fields, unless you have capital and force for larger operations.—Plow deep in the fall or winter, and manure thoroughly the reserved acres. If careful attention and high feeding produce fine stock, there is no good reason why high manuring and high culture should not produce great yields and profitable crops. There is, of course, a point beyond which manuring becomes waste, but it is hardly probable that any farmer is likely to reach it.

Each farmer had better find out, by experience, what fertilizer is best suited to his soil and crops. This can soon be ascertained, and trials in a small way are expensive. The experience of others, in this regard (soils being various) may lead to inefficiency and loss: the diversified character of soils render this course absolutely necessary to ensure the greatest benefit from almost any commercial fertilizer, and also to what extent it will profit him to use it.

As to barn yard and stable manure it is good everywhere, and the farmer is not apt to have it spread in quantities that would prove injurious. It is not too late to make compost pens, and to collect all available substances suitable for manure that can possibly be collected. If this is done there will be a big pile by the next spring suitable for the corn field, the orchard, the garden, especially good for orchards.

We repeat that in our present circumstances, and situation, and, in fact under almost any circumstances, the proper cultivation of small rich farms has so many advantages over large poor ones that it is really strange that more of our farmers do not adopt the system. Many of them have children, both sons and daughters, who unless provided for, will be compelled to seek homes in Western wilds, or remain here in almost hopeless poverty, unsettled and dissatisfied. Better divide and let them have the portions you expect to give them when you become old and will only want a surface 4x8 feet. They would then know what to be at. These different portions would soon be improved and utilized as they should be. And then the satisfaction of having one's children comfortably settled around and contignons to the old homestead can only be appreciated by those who have tried it. The seasons bring round the holidays. The Christmas turkey and the sweet potato pies come once a year, with all the living loved ones present under the paternal roof, where all can enjoy each other's presence and the good cheer of the bounteous board.

If our children are already dispersed, or ignore farming, better, by far, sell or give the honest poor man our useless broom sedge acres. Give them homesteads if they cannot buy; or at any rate, allow them easy terms and set them to work. They will soon make things look different. The State cannot afford to continue losing this valuable part of her population. Help them to homes: retain the population and aid in reviving the prosperity and in utilizing the vast resources that turn within her borders.

We always feel misgivings of ability to give valuable advice, but so confident are we in the advantages and good policy of the above suggestions that we feel we should no longer withhold them from the consideration of our brother farmers.—J. Fitz, of Albemarle Co. Va., in American Farmer.

If you have a stoppage from the nose, offensive or curative, partial loss of the sense of smell, taste, or hearing, eyes watery or weak, feel dull and stupid or debilitated, pain or pressure in the head, take cold easily, you may rest assured that you have the Catarrh. These subtle assaults without manifesting half of the above symptoms, invariably in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive, or less understood by physicians. R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., is proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy—a perfect Specific for Catarrh, "Cold in the Head," or Catarrh Headache.

Driven to Death

We are an over-worked people, The almighty dollar is pursued with a phrenzy which admits of few pauses or breathing spells. How frequently one hears the phrase "driven to death," implying all that it does of physical exhaustion and mental excitement. Among artificial recuperants of exhausted energy, there is not one that so powerfully counteracts the effects of fatigue as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and next to that natural rest for which nothing can wholly compensate, it is the best and safest resource of those who are obliged, or think that they are, to undergo an excessive amount of labor. Against the hurtful effect of exposure upon the sensitive organs, the Bitters are likewise an efficient protective. A dose or two will often counteract the effects which a severe wetting might otherwise produce, and the danger arising from unhealthy or fatiguing occupations is materially lessened by the daily use of this most reliable fortifying cordial, which possesses the additional recommendation of being an excellent antiseptic, or means of retarding bodily decay, a fact sufficiently proven by its recuperative effects in all diseases of a depleting and exhausting nature.

People who are obliged to take their meals in a hurry, or under circumstances which prevent that repose which the mind should enjoy during the process of digestion, are notoriously the victims of dyspepsia. They may, however, avoid in a great measure the varied torments inflicted by that Proteus of maladies by swallowing after each meal a wineglassful of the National Stomachic.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

Has long attracted the notice of the most eminent physicians, by its great efficacy in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc., and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Professors GIBSON, DEWEES and CHAPMAN, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and certificates of its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill to its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up but is worth many times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and, IN ALL CASES WHERE THE BLOOD IS NOT PURE, IT SHOULD BE USED FREELY.

Selected Poetry.

"My Lord and my God."

BY MARGARET E SANGSTER

'Twas evening and the door was shut:
To bar was that to him
Who came in kindly silence, through
The twilight folding dim.
In tones as tender as the dew,
He blessed them—"Peace be unto you."

It was the Master's loving word,
The Master's form they knew,
And nearer to the risen Lord
The glad disciples drew.
Who hope was in their hearts that hour!
What glory in his wondrous power!

How oft the matchless pity dwelt
In one repentant face,
Or one who knew not all the bliss
Of full believing grace
The soul still fettered fast with doubt,
The love of Jesus singled out.

"Behold," on each these wounds of mine;
See where the nails were driven."
And well he knew the voice divine,
As born with love was riven.
And deep, like thine, his answering word,
"I know thee now My God—my Lord."

Than e'en from Jesus lips there fell
A thought exceeding sweet;
Language to me he seemed to tell,
In loudness repeat.
"Thou hast believed, for thou hast seen,
Blessed are they who have not seen.
And yet have trusted."—We rejoice,
Dear Lord, and bless thy name;
More sacred now that time, when first
To us that insight came.
And we behold thee, crucified,
Thy pierced hands—thy riven side.

Yet seeing not, O'er eyes above,
But eyes were lifted high:
We know thee, sitting on the throne,
We list the coming nigh.
And all our doubts were stilled to peace,
Upon such faith what blessed release.

THE CONFERENCES AGAIN.

THE list below speaks volumes to the thoughtful, earnest, Christian: we shall allow it this week to speak for itself—shall have something to say in regard to its significance at another time. Short, thoughtful paragraphs, from the thoughtful, prayerful reader, are solicited. Brother, what train of reflections does this awaken in your mind? The list is subject to correction; we have been careful, but yet there may be errors, if so, we will gladly correct them. We asked last week for light as to the methods used in those Conferences which have gone to the front, and are happy to find on our table, just as we are going to going to press, the following note from Bishop McTyeire, who presided at the last session of the Virginia Conference:

DEAR DOCTOR:—You are calling attention to the relative contributions of the Annual Conferences to Foreign Missions. This will do good. It occurse to me that one item concerning the Virginia Conference, which stands in the front rank in your list, may not be known to you and therefore is not taken into the account in seeking for the cause of excellence

I observed, when the pastors were reading their reports in open Conference, the almos uniform fact that they reported the full assessment collected for Foreign Missions, and often more than the assessment—even where other collections fell behind—and was led to inqure into the cause. In addition to the intelligent and zealous spirit that prevailed on the subject, I ascertained these two causes in particular:

1. The collection on this account was taken up alone. There was no jumping. The appeal stood by itself, and was presented singly, and pleaded for upon its own merits

2. The collection on this behalf was taken up early in the year.

These two methods followed up elsewhere would, I believe, produce similar results. If you can make any use of this item in waking up the Church to duty, it is at your service. Yours truly,

H. N. McTYEIRE.

We reiterate with emphasis, at the close of this table, a statement made last week. Missionary intelligence is the need of the people. Where the preachers are in earnest so as to read, digest, and preach on the subject of Missions the people do give. Brethren of the ministry, this work is in our hands; Jesus Christ looks to us. Other reports from charges will follow. We shall be able in a partial way to show the zeal of pastors for Missions by giving the relative amount of missionary money to contributions for other Church purposes.

D. C KELLEY, Ass. Sec.

We observe a note from Dr A S Packard to the effect that specimens of the "hateful grasshopper" (Caloptenus spretus), indistinguishable from Californian ones, have occurred at Amherst, Mass.

The Small Worries.

One Christian world has long been guessing what Paul's thorn in the flesh was. We have a book that in ten pages tries to show what Paul's thorn was not, and in another ten pages tries to show what it was.

Many of the theological doctors have felt Paul's pulse to see what was the matter with him. We suppose the reason he did not tell us what it was may have been because he did not want us to know. He knew tant if he stated what it was, there would have been a great many people from Corinth bothering him with prescriptions as to how he might cure it.

Some say it was diseased eyes; some, that it was a humped back. It may have been neuralgia. Perhaps it was gout, although his active habits and a sparse diet throw doubt on the supposition. Suffice it to say, it was a thorn—that is, it stuck him. It was sharp.

It was probably of not much account in the eyes of the world. It was not a trouble that could be compared to a lion, or a boisterous sea. It was like a thorn that you may have in your hand or foot and no one know it. Thus we see that it becomes a type of those little nettlesome worries of life that exasperate the spirit.

Every one has a thorn sticking him. The housekeeper finds it in unfaithful domestics, or an inmate who keeps things disordered, or a house too small for convenience, or too large to be kept cleanly. The professional man finds it in perpetual interruptions, or calls for 'more copy.' The Sabbath school teacher finds it in inattentive scholars, or neighboring teachers that talk k and make a great noise in giving a little instruction. One man has a rheumatic joint which, when the wind is north east, hits the storm signal. Another, a business partner who takes full half the profits, but does not help to earn them. These trials are the more nettlesome because, like Paul's thorn, they are not to be mentioned. Men get sympatiay for broken bones, and washed feet, but not for the end of sharp thorns that have been broken

Let us start out with the idea that we must have annoyances. It seems to take a certain number of them to keep us humble, wakeful, and prayerful. To Paul the thorn was as disciplinary as the shipwreck If it is not one thing it is another. If the stove does not smoke, the boiler must leak If the pen is good, the ink must be poor. If the thorn does not pierce the knee, must take you in the back. Life must have sharp things in it. We cannot make up our robe of Christian character without pins and needles.

We want what Paul got: grace to bear these things. Without it we become cross, censorious, and irascible. We get in the habit of sticking our thorns into other people's fingers. But, God helping us, we place these annoyances in the category of the all things that work together for good. We see how much shorter thorns are than the spikes that struck through the palms of Christ's hands, and, remembering that he had on his head a whole crown of thorns, we take to ourselves the consolation that if we suffer with him on earth we shall be glorified with him in heaven.

But how could Paul positively rejoice in these infirmities? The school of Christ has three classes of scholars: in the first class we learn how to be stuck with thorns without losing our patience; in the second class we learn how to make the sting positively advantageous; in the class of this school we learn how even to rejoice in being pierced and [illegible] that in time we are near graduation into glory.—Selected.

First Fruits.

DEAR BROTHER MCFERRIN:—As the first fruits of the earth belong to the Lord, so I think the first fruits of a man's annual income belong also to the Lord. Below you have for the Master my annual contribution to Missions out of the first installment of my little yearly income: For China Mission, $3; for Sister Lambuth's school, $2; for Mexican Mission, $5; for Brother Ransom, in Brazil, $3. Total $13. The inclosed money-order for that sum is drawn in favor of Dr. Redford, the Treasurer. May God bless you and Dr. Kelley more abundantly than ever this year, and enable you through his grace and Spirit to touch the heart of the Church and awaken a mighty impulse for the cause of Missions. May the special blessings of Christ rest upon you! May you be strentgthened in body, in mind, and in soul, and may God sustain you yet many more years to work for Jesus. Give my love to your wife and all the children, and to all the McFerrin family—God bless them!

A. G. GOODLOE.

Barton, Ala., M. & C. R. R., Feb. 7, 1876.

Mr. Moody's Illustration.

Speaking of the goodness of God and of "grace abounding," he told a striking story of a rich man who sent to a poor friend in distress $25 in an envelope, on which he wrote, "More to follow." Now," said he, "which was the more welcome—the money or the gracious promise of further help? So it is with God's grace: there is always more to follow. Let us thank God, not only for what He promises—more to follow." Contrasting the law and the Gospel, he said, "Moses in Egypt turned water into blood, which is death. Christ turned water into wine which is life, joy and goodness." Speaking of future punishment, one of his sermons, he said, "God will not punish us. We shall punish ourselves. When we come before God, He will turn us over to ourselves. Go and read the book of your memory, He will say." Urging the duty of immediate repentance and the joy in heaven over a repentant sinner, he said, "If the President should die to night, or if the Governor of the State should be shot, that would make an outcry. But perhaps even so great an event would not be mentioned in heaven at all.—But," said he, raising his voice a little: "if some sinner in this assembly were just now converted there would be a great shout of joy in heaven."—Dwelling upon the certainty of future punishment, he remarked, "Some people doubt it; they think God is so loving that He will make no distinctions in another world. But do you imagine that when men had become so wicked that God sent a flood to extorminate them because they were not fit to live on earth—do you suppose that when the waters came and drowned them. He took all this wicked generation into His bosom. and left poor righteous Noah to drift about in his ark? Do you suppose that when His chosen people crossed the Red Sea, and Pharaoh's host were drowned, God took those idolatrous Egyptians directly to heaven, and let the children of Israel wander miserably over the desert for forty years?"

Everything in the wide domain of nature fulfills its destiny by the law of work. The seasons are constantly on the march of work. The Spring comes with its singing birds, busy in the production of the flowers, which paint the woods and perfumes the air. The radiant Summer is busy in pumping the sap and maturing its fruit. The Summer gives place to sober Autumn which is busy in preparing its germs, seeds and buds, folded up in their leafy sheafs, ready to open in a more abundant harvest on the next year. Before one crop of leaves falls, the buds are formed from which another will come and unfold their green banners. As one harvest decays, it scatters the seeds for another. The grape vines make the wood this summer which will yield the clustering fruit the next. The ocean in its unchangable boundaries, is ever busy in wafting the white winged ships on its ever rolling tides and ceaseless billows Water is a happy emblem of industry. When stagnant it breeds disease, when rolling on in its pebbly channel, it sings, sparkles, turns joy fully the mill-wheel, lines its meandering banks with green verdure, gathers force and volume as it flows, until it shoots in triumph over all opposition, and sweeps on in majestic beauty to its ocean home. The earth is ever busy in rotating on its axis, bringing us the silent shades of night for recuperating slumber, and bright days for labor. The winds blow, the clouds dy, the rain falls. So all nature is busy at work. And man to be healthy, wealthy and wise, must chime in with all nature and work. Industry keeps man in the paradise of peace, and idleness turns him out into the howling wilderness of want and misery.—Shelby Banner.

THE BEST SERMON.—People are always listening to the "best sermon they ever heard." At an advanced age, still hearing the 'best,' we might conclude that they started on very poor ones; for this superlative did not, perhaps, express the opinion of some other person equally able to judge. But there are various kinds of sermons. There is the doctrinal one, the biographical, logical, illustrative, and various other styles; and those men speaking of the 'best' will mean the best of those several kinds. Then men are in varying conditions for hearing. If they are full of joy, the best one will be glad and enthusiastic If they are borne down with sorrow, their praises are only for the consoling and sympathetic. Just in so far as the sermon is suited to the hearer, and is blest to his edification by the Holy Spirt, will he find it such as he will greatly praise. The really good hearer will find something helpful in all, and now and then he will be flooded with happy emotion.—Selected.

Pray More---Worry Less.

A lady correspondent inquires if this is not a good text for an article, "Pray more—worry less. Yes, manifestly, and the text "preaches itself." scarcely needs an extended homily for its illustration and enforcement.—Worry is the bane of the times. It is everywhere. It comes in a thousand forms, and from ten thousand sources, and its inlets are wide open in the hearts of the multitude. People fret, and fume, and chafe themselves into disease and wretchedness, and finally to inanition and an untimely grave.—[illegible] correspondent is right in the suggestion that the true antidote to excessive worry is more prayer.

There is a passage in the Divine word (Philippians iv, 6), of which a burnt out Chicago friend gave an impromptu and almost inspired analysis, as with his family he sat down in his hired residence on the evening after the great fire: "Be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be known unto God."—"There," said he, "that means just this, that we must be care burdened with nothing, that we must be thankful for anything. Let us pray." And he knelt down and poured out his heart in the spirit of that exegesis, and then went to his rest calm and tranquil as a lake unstirred by a ripple.—We commend the prescription to everybody, for these times and for all times.—Exchange.

STAND BY THE SABBATH.—There is no institution of greater importance in this country than our Sabbath. And consequently there is none that ought to be guarded and defended with greater zeal and watchfulness than this. As a matter of mere physical economy and safety, every toiling and laboring citizen in the land should defend the Sabbath, and insist upon its strict observance as a day of rest: for no laboring man, under this simple view, can do without this rest. Both his mind and his body need this. And it has been already demonstrated, without the least doubt, that both the health and the spiritual [illegible] proper observance of the Sabbath.

But higher considerations press the claims of this day upon us. We all need a day in every seven on which to reflect upon those great questions which tend to our spiritual and eternal peace. We must bring ourselves to these questions, and without this day, and its sacred moments and means of grace, it is impossible to accomplish a work so very momentous.

There are just at this time many attempted encroachments upon the observance, as a religions institution, of the Sabbath day Some are striving to turn this rest into a day of sport and pastime, and others are disposed to make it a day of profit and gain. No such encroachments as these are should be allowed; for no one can predict the fatal consequences of such an allowance. With the continued desecration of this day will come its total abolition. And this will surely be followed by its ultimate overthrow. And if you destroy your Sabbath, your undermine the Bible, the Christian church, the Sabbath school and the religion of Christ.—Christian World.

Life's Tragedy.

Sublimer in this world know I nothing than a peasant saint, could such now anywhere be met with. Such an one will take thee back to Nazareth itself; thou wilt see the splendor of heaven spring forth from the humblest depths of earth, like a light shining in great darkness. It is not because of his toils that I lament for the poor.—We must all toil, or steal (howsoever we name our stealing), which is worse: No faithful workman finds his task a pastime. The poor is hungry and athirst: but for him also there is food and drink; he is heavy laden and weary, but for him also the heavens send sleep, and of the deepest. In his smoky cribs, a clear, dewy heaven of rest envelops him, and fitful glitterings of cloud skirted dreams. But what I do mourn over is that the lamp of his soul should go ont; that no ray of heavenly or even of earthly knowledge should visit him; but only, in the haggard darkness, like two spectres, fear and indignation. Alas! while the body stands so broad and brawny, must the soul lie blinded, dwarfed, stupefied, almost annihilated! Alas! was this, too, a breath of God; bestowed in heaven, but on earth never to be unfolded? That there should be one man die ignorant who had capacity for knowledge, this I call a tragedy, were it to happen more than twenty times in the minute, as by some computation it does.—Carlyle.

Happiness is like a genial sunshine that brings out the buds and blossoms and covers the thorns with beauty and fragrance.—Duff Porter.

A Thought for Infidels.

No candid observer will deny that whatever of good there may be in our American civilization is the product of Christianity. Still less can he deny that the grand motives which are working for the elevation and purification of our society are strictly Christian. The immense energies of the Christian Church stimulated by a love that shrinks from no obstacle, are all bent toward this great aim of universal purification. These millions of sermons and exhortations which are a constant power of good, these countless prayers and songs of praise, on which the heavy laden lift their hearts above the temptation and sorrows of the world, are all the products of faith in Jesus Christ. That which gives us protection day and by night—the dwellings we live in, the clothes we wear, the institutions of social order, all these are the direct offspring of Christianity. All that distinguishes us from the Pagan world—all that makes us what we are, and all that stimulates us in the task making ourselves better than we are—is Christian. A belief in Jesus Christ is the very fountain-head of everything that is desirable and praiseworthy in our civilization, and this civilization is the flower of time. Humanity has reached its noblest thrift, its grandest altitudes of excellence, its high-water mark, through the influence of this faith.—Springfield Republican.

"YOU DON'T PRAY."—The following instructive anecdote, relating to President Finney, is characteristic:—A brother, who had fallen into darkness and discouragement, was staying at the same house with Dr. Finney over night. He was lamenting his condition, and Dr. Finney, after listening to his narrative, turned to him with his peculiar, earnest look, and with a voice that sent a thrill through his soul said, "You don't pray! that is what's the matter. Pray—pray four times as much as you ever did in your life, and you will come out." He immediately went down to the parlor, and [illegible] his heart up his soul to seek God as did Daniel, and thus he spent the night. It was not in vain. As the morning dawned he felt the light of the Sun of Righteousness shine upon his soul. His captivity was broken, and ever since he has felt that the greatest difficulty in the way of men being emancipated from their bondage is that they "don't pray."

THE LORD'S PRAYER.—How wonderfully the Bible condenses! Witness the the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer—the one the embodied moral law of God, the other the daily utterances of praise, intercession, supplication, and confession.

Prayer is the expression of desire; hence, there is no prayer which the offerer does not turn in practical action. Now, see how the [illegible] "daily" offered to God in compliance with the Lord's Prayer will control the life. How affectionate, reverential, spiritual, obedient, industrious, forgiving, watchful, must its offerer be. No doubt the Lord's Prayer is often employed as a mere form, by those who do not understand it or think of its meaning; and even as if it had a magic power, because it is the words of Christ; but no man ever prayed it who was not a Christian, and no Christian ever prayed it in vain.—Christian Observer.

When faith gets a view of the unsearchable riches of God's grace in, by and through Jesus Christ, then the believer longs to be in heaven to behold the fountain-head of grace and glory. Faith longs to cease to be faith. This is a strange and strong act of faith, a strange desire in a believer. O, when shall I cease to be a believer and become a seer! When shall the glass be done away, and the full-eyed vision of glory succeed? When shall both faith and hope cease, and love fill their room?—Traill.

IN a love-feast lately, a good man had been drawing out a long complaining strain of experiences about his trials and difficulties in the way to heaven. Another, of a different spirit, followed, who said, "I see our brother, who has just sat down, lives in Grumbling street. I lived there myself for some time and never enjoyed good health. The air was bad; the birds never came and sung in the street; and I was gloomy and sad enough. But I flitted. I got into Thanksgiving street; and ever since then I've had good health, and so have my family. The air is pure; the water pure, the house good; the sun shines on it all day; the birds are always singing; and I am happy as I can live. Now, I recommend our brother to flit. There are plenty of houses to let on Thanksgiving street, and I am sure he will find himself a new man if he will only come; and I will be right glad to have him as a neighbor.

Snow Rabbits.

The pine region abont the head waters of the Wind and Yellowstone Rivers abound in curious and rare specimens of animals. Among them is the snow rabbit. It differs essentially from the common rabbit found in the lowlands, having broad feet, nearly as large as a human hand. This peculiar conformation enables it to make its way with surprising swiftness over the snow, and also enables it to elude pursuit. Its principal food are juniper berries and the Alpine seed, which abound in the snow regions which it inhabits. But the most remarkable thing connected with this singular animal is that the male of the species nurse the young. This has been fully demonstrated by American scientists, and the statement has been made officially. It has been described by Dr. Hayden in the American Naturalist, and a specimen is on exhibition at the Smithsonian Institution.

THE MIDDLE AGES.—In the middle ages there were three great powers—the papal, the monastic and the fendal. Amid their constant combinations the monk ruled. No doubt there were among these men those of transcendent virtue, thought and intelligence; but that there were bad and unscrupulous men as well, and that they were in the majority, no one who has read the story of the richly-freighted middle ages can deny. Their wealth was boundless; their learning enormous and narrow; they were great in action, and wonderful as tools. They were masters of the ignorant feudal lords, and held them in the chains of a spiritual slavery which ruled Europe for a thousand years. They were grand when in Rome; they lived simple lives of self-denial, and forged the armor with which they afterward attacked idolatry, under the friendly shadow of imperial Jove, with the courage of Mars and with the cunning of Mercury. But were they grand when, in corrupted convents, they practiced an ignorant fanaticism, proud of an unnatural [illegible] filthiness; repulsive and loathsome in their uncleanliness, thinking their unwashed bodies a mark of sanctity? Idleness and solitude became the causes of morbid poverty of intellect and of narrow minded dissonsion. We do not need to turn to the corrupt pages of Rabelais for the sketch of a convent interior. Browning, in far nobler verse, has given us the little hatreds, the ignoble envy and jealousy, the crime and hidden sin which convent walls seem to foster instead of to shut out.—National Protestant.

SCIENTIFIC.

How popular ferns are is evidenced by the increasing number of books referring to them. Mr John Smith, for many years curator of the Kew Gardens and one of the leaders in pteridology, has just issued an illustrated work of 429 pages, under the title of "Historia Filicum." And then Newman has just given us a fifth edition of "History of British Ferns."

Woodland and Drude have lately published a synopsis of the palms of Australia. They find twenty-six species. On Lord Home's Island are four species. The headquarters for palms are in Arnhem's Land. Twenty-two species are scattered over the mainland. Livistona australis is one of the finest species, and reaches a height of about eighty feet. Most of [illegible] sea coast.

The power of gunpowder is shown by a recent writer in the Revue Scientifique. The velocity of a shell leaving the cannon is 1,300 feet per second. The height from which the projectile would have to fall to acquire this is 26,800 feet; consequently the power of the powder is equal to 219,000 foot-pounds. The heat evolved by the combustion of 11.4 pounds of powder is equal to 340.7 calorics.—The mechanical work of this amount of heat is 1,050,000 foot-pounds.

IF thon bear the cross cheerfully, it will bear thee, and lead thee to the desired end, namely, where there shall be an end of suffering, through here there shall not be. If thou bear it unwillingly, thou makest for thyself a new burden, and increasest thy load: and yet, notwithstanding, thou must bear it. If thou cast away one cross, without doubt thou shalt find another, and that perhaps a heavier one—Thomas a' Kempis.

Methodism---Its Origin and Progress.

In its origin, Methodism might well be symbolized by a "grain of mustard seed planted" in the earth It came into existence under the joint labors of Revs. John and Charles Wesley in 1729. In November of this year the first Methodist society was formed, ford, England namely, John Wesley, Fellow of Lincoln College; Charles Wesley, Student of Christ Church; a Mr. Morgan, Commoner of "Christ Church," and a Mr. Kirkham of Merton College. The next year two or three of John Wesley's pupils desired the privilege of meeting with them, and afterwards one of Charles Wesley's pupils. In 1732 Mr. Ingram of Queen's College and Mr. Brougham of Exeter, were added to their number. To these in April, was added Mr. Clayton of Brazennose, with two or three of his pupils. About the same time James Hervy was permitted to meet with them, and afterward Mr. Whitefield. The exact regularity of their lives, as well as studies, occasioned a young gentleman of "Christ Church" to say, "here is a new set of Methodists sprung up"—alluding, it is said, to an ancient physician's who were so called The name was new and quaint: so it took immediately: and the Methodists were known all over the University Thus the name, given in derision and by way of reproach, has clung to their followers in all parts of the world to which their influence has reached. Here was struck the little spark that soon set the kingdom in a blaze, and is still burning as intensely and far more widely than ever before.

Methodism in America has a later origin. In 1766 it crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and found a friendly lodgment in the house of Philip Embury, a local preacher from England in New York: then in a sail rigging loft—and at no distant day, in the John Street Church, the first Methodist Church built in America. Philip Embury, it seems, had backslidden in heart, and was brought back to a sense of duty by the importunity of a few pious women, who had also been members of the Methodist society in Ireland.—Yielding to their earnest entreaties, he preached his first sermon in the new country in his own house, to a congregation of four or five persons.—The Spirit of God so anointed him for the work that, like his illustrious namesake, of earlier times, he preached so effectually that many gave heed to the word, and there was great joy in that city. Such was its obscure origin, its feeble and flickering light, its early history on this side of the water. In this country, as well as in England, it was immediately assailed with intense ridicule and opposition. It was the object of scorn and derision, on the part of worldly and lukewarm professors and skeptical persons, in church and State, and the scoff of the profane. One single fact we mention to indicate the estimation in which it was held, and the kind of opposition it had to encounter.

There is a printed sermon published over 50 years ago, entitled, "A Funeral Sermon for Methodism." The author was Rev. Mr. Huntington, of England, a clergyman of considerable note in his day. His text is from Isaiah, chap. 32, verses 5-7:

"The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful. For the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the LORD, to make empty the soul of the hungry; and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail. The instruments also of the churl are evil: he deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy speaketh right."

The author admitted that Methodism was not quite dead, but away back yonder more than a half century ago, he affirmed it to be in a dying condition—in fact at the very point to die. And so certain was the event to occur in a very short time that, though somewhat unusual to preach a funeral sermon before the actual decease of the subject of it, yet, in this case, under existing circumstances, he thought it allowable. Possibly he hoped his effort might hasten the mortal pang, or feared that, by some mishap, he might lose the coveted privilege of consigning it to oblivion, or an immortality of infamy. In this sermon, famous or *in*famous, he applies the epithet 'vile person' and 'churl' to Mr. Wesley by name, and without qualification or mitigation. Indeed by other forms of expression, he seems desirous of magnifying them. So, also, the 6th verse he applies to the teaching and preaching of Mr. Wesley: "For the vile person will speak villainy, and his

The pastor says truly, who writes us: "In visiting my people for the first time, I enquire what papers they read I know how to talk to people when I know the literature they read."

A noonday prayer meeting is held in Baltimore called the merchants prayer meeting, which is attended by a large number of business men of the city, and which is one of great spirit and power. If men would turn away for an hour from the worry and hurry of money-making, and hold christian communion with their brethren, the effect upon their hearts, lives and health would be very different from that which the strife and turmoil of the busy marts usually produce.

An Advisory Council called for the purpose of determining whether the method which Plymouth Church adopts in disciplining its members, (notably in the case of Mrs. Moulton) is in accordance with Congregational usage, convened in Plymouth Church Brooklyn, last week. Delegates were present from all parts of the country North of Mason and Dixon's line. The audience that gathered at the church was very large and eager to hear and see everything that took place.

Rev. Dr. Winslow, the Boston forger whose flight we mentioned last week, has been arrested in London, England, and is held for examination and extradition under the treaties between England and this country. The greed of grain got him gold, but honor and honesty, name, fame and happiness were sold and swept away. Crime cannot long go unwhipped of justice—in Winslow's case the punishment is following quick.

The matter of punctuation is too little observed by writers, when we take into consideration the extent to which the sense of a composition depends upon the proper placing of the stops. Some writers use no punctuation marks at all, while others use them abundantly and drop them about in all parts of a sentence and let them and the meaning of the words take care of themselves. It has been the characteristic of some great men to pay no attention to penmanship or punctuation, and some men have thought that, because they write and punctuate badly, they have claims to genius or kinship with it. Sed non sequitur. A country paper lately contained the following startling account of the appearance of Lord Palmerston in the House of Lords: "Lord Palmerston then rose, and on his head, a white hat upon his feet, large but well polished boots upon his brow, a dark cloud in his hand, his faithful walking-stick in his eye, a menacing glare saying nothing. He sat down."

In distributing the Minutes of conference, we found that it was cheaper to send them by express than by mail—particularly so when we sent more than five to one address. Hence, we sent them by express to those parties whom the express messenger could reach conveniently. We have been mortified to discover that in some cases, though the express freight was paid by us, the messengers failed to deliver or give notice of their readiness to deliver the Minutes when called for. Such neglect on the part of the officials of a Company that professes to be conducted for public convenience, is inexcusable.

We are much gratified at the promptness with which our patrons are renewing their subscription to the ADVOCATE, and with the new names which are coming in daily. We ask the preachers to earnestly press the canvass.

☞ We will send the Advocate to subscribers, in clubs of ten, at two dollars a year, postage paid by us. We trust our people will take advantage of this proposition, at once.

Methodism has been justly called "a child of Providence." Not only has it continued to live and grow, but has become intensely active, wonderfully diffusive and marvelously aggressive. Although constantly opposed by sarcasm, by abuse from professed Christians and vile sinners, it has thanks be unto the great Head of the Church, extended its blessed influence and conquests to a degree that finds no parallel upon this continent. One hundred years ago, Methodism in this country was an exciting novelty, little understood and less appreciated. But to-day she sheds a halo of moral light throughout England and America.—As members of the Methodist Church, we call upon one and all to make some proper thank offering to the Church of your choice on this the centennial year of North Carolina Methodism

The Wonderful Wall.

THERE is a little town in Germany called Sleswick. About fifty years ago, its inhabitants were plunged in very great distress. It was a time when there was war in the land, and the people were every day expecting to be harrived of their homes and Nov. ——— ——— enemy, great trepidation and fear, for a party of reckless soldiers were expected to pass that way, and the people knew that their dwellings would be sacked, and, perhaps, some of the dear members of their families cruelly murdered.

Beyond the town, close to the high road on which the soldiers were to come, there was a solitary house, larger and better and more attractive than the rest. A pious old woman lived there, who knew and trusted in the Lord as the Keeper and Defender of His people. With her lived a widowed daughter and one grandson, and this constituted her entire family. In her prayers the pious old woman often used the words of an old German hymn, which had in it these lines:

"Surround us, Lord, and so,
Lest we should fall,
Raise up a wall,
And guard us from our foe."

"Grandmother," said the young man, on the morning to which we have referred, "what do you mean by praying that the Lord would build a wall around our house? Can you really be so foolish as to think that He will do such an impossible thing?"

"My dear boy," she replied, "I did not intend exactly what I said, but only that the Lord would defend us and our town by any means. There is nothing that is impossible with Him; and if He wills He can even build a wall to protect those who trust Him."

The night at length came down—a terrible night of winter, storm, and wind, and driving snow. In the darkness the aged widow and her family knew, by the tramping of horse and sounds of firing and shooting, that a party of wild Cossacks were passing their solitary house, and pouring into the unhappy and doomed town. They listened and trembled, praying for their poor neighbors, and expecting every moment that their own turn would come; but, to their great astonishment, no one even knocked at their door. It was a wonder they could not account for. But when daylight appeared they discovered the secret of their escape. The wind had drifted the snow into the form of a high wall between them and the road, completely concealing them from view, so that the passing troops could not even see their dwelling.

"My son," said the good old grandmother," didn't you see how easy it is for the Lord to raise a wall around His people?"

So it always was. So it always will be. All those who put their trust in Him may be sure, just as was His aged servant and her family in their time of sore need, that He is ever watching over them. No one need fear whom God doth keep, for "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him."

Push.

When Cousin Will was at home for vacation, the boys always expected plenty of fun. The last frolic before he went back to his studies was a long tramp after hazelnuts. As they were hurrying along in high glee, they came upon a discouraged-looking man and a discouraged looking cart. The cart was standing before an orchard. The man was trying to pull it up hill to his own house. The boys did not wait to be invited, but ran to help with a good will. "Push! push!" was the cry.

The man brightened up; the cart trundled along as fast as rheumatism would allow it, and in five minutes they all stood panting at the top of the hill.

"Obliged to ye," said the man; you just wait a minute,"—and he hurried into the house, while two or three pink-aproned children peeped out of the door.

"Now, boys," said Cousin Will, "this is a small thing; but I wish we could all take a motto out of it, and keep it for life." "Push!" it is just the word for a grand, clear morning.

"If anybody is in trouble, and you can help it, don't stand back; push!

"If there's anything good doing in any place where you happen to be, push!

"Whenever there's a kind thing, a Christian thing, a happy thing, a [illegible] pleasant thing, whether it is over, or over, whether it is at home or in town, at church or [illegible] with all [illegible]

At that moment the farmer came out with a dish of his wife's best doughnuts, and a dish of his own best apples; and that was the end of the little sermon on Push.

Rural and Domestic.

Brains and Method in Farming.

Could talking or writing have availed anything, enough has been said and written long ago to have depopulated the towns and established an impassable blockade for bread and meat around the Cotton States. We do not propose now to waste ink arguing the point. Our purpose is, if possible, to aid those who are content to stay in the country and work We believe that farming properly conducted, does pay—that its profits are reasonable and sure, when brain and brawn co operate cheerfully, intelligently and energetiedly. but we believe just as fully, that speculative, careless, routine, uncalculating, unwith, with normal speed, brake contrupts of those who practice it. Illustrations of the latter propositions abound on every side—those of the former, whilst far from being so numerous, may be seen in almost every community—a few farmers standing head and shoulders at ove the multitude ing crowd

Ever since the war, the land has resounded with complaints of labor; with more justice it should be of lack of Brains—brains to plan, brains to calculate, brains to execute—brains to decide what crops will pay, how much labor will pay, how much and what measure will pay—what rest should be given to the soil, what restitution made for its depletion by crops, what rotations will pay best and longest maintain fertility of the soil—what stock will pay, best and most economical modes of feeding—these and hundreds of other like questions call most loudly for strong, educated, throughly trained brains.—Away with the practice of making tenants or partners of negroes, and delegating to them the direction and management of our Southern agriculture. What would be thought of a merchant or a contractor who would put negroes in charge of his business? Does farming require less judgment, less perception, less tract than buying and selling goods?

Whilst brains are called for on the farm every day of the year, they are especially needed this month to plan the year's campaign. If the past has been a failure, what must be done to make the future a success? A decision on this point is not always easily reached. The weather, the kind of crops, the time and manner of plowing—the manure used and its mode of application, the lack of manure, using too much labor and paying too dearly for it—starting crops a little too late or lying by a little too early, a deep plowing when it should have been shallow, rows too wide, too many or too few stalks to the acre, good or bad seed—how great the factors that enter into the problem! Think you that any but a careful observer, a close calculator, a patient and profound thinker can solve it?

With the light of past experience before us, what crops shall we plant? A part of the answer is as plain as the noonday sun: provision crops of some kind, sufficient at least to run the farm. Everybody sees and admits that. In this connection, we would urge again the manuring of all corn lands, not likely to suffer from drought, to a very high degree. Very much is to be gained by pushing such lands to a yield of 75 to 100 bushels per acre. On dry uplands through drought. Not so with valley lands. Seventy-five to one hundred bushels of cotton seed and three to four hundred pounds of acid phosphate per acre, may be very safely and profitably applied. The cost will be from 15 to 20 dollars per acre—the gain (with same hoeing and plowing) from 60 to 75 bushels of corn. Will not those who doubt, try the experiment on one acre this year—or if their faith is very weak, on a half or quarter acre? We want, friends, to get you out of the old ruts—the drift is too heavy and you are about to stall. There is no wisdom, no common sense, in pursuing the same course year after year, when the end is nothing but failure—utter failure!!

Another proposition, palpable to every reflecting man, is that every one's operations should be brought sharply within the limit of his means. Credit at all times is hazardous—during periods of great financial disturbance it is almost inevitably disastrous. Creditors then become unusually clamorous, and property brings little when forced to sale. But what should be done if one is already in debt, it may be asked. Sell if need be everything over and above what is needed to run a one-horse farm, and start from the bottom. Show yourself honest and you will not need homestead or other laws to protect you. Creditors are exacting, because they fear dishonesty. When one firmly and cheerfully resolves to pursue a course like this, it is surprising how little is required to run a farm and support a family till a crop is made.—A cow and a garden will keep starvation a long way off.

[illegible] lighters that can be raised on a little [illegible] of grain [illegible] heavily in the season they are available—and how near-[illegible] to this latter can supply the place of bread. Whilst urging this heroic treatment, we [illegible] few will need it. We are sure, however, that very near-[illegible]ly all our farmers would be bettered by more or less contraction of business, selling enough to pay off old debts and then adhering firmly and inflexibly to the maxim, "pay as you go."—Southern Cultivator.

Driven to Death,

We are an over-worked people, The almighty dollar is pursued with a phrensy which admits of few pauses or breathing spells. How frequently one hears the phrase "driven to death," implying all that it does of physical exhaustion and mental excitement. Among artificial recuperants of exhausted energy, there is not one that so powerfully counteracts the effects of fatigue as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and next to that natural rest for which nothing can wholly compensate, it is the best and surest resource of those who are obliged, or think that they are, to undergo an excessive amount o labor. Against the harmful effect of exposure upon the sensitive organs, the Bitters are likewise an efficient protective. A dose or two will often counteract the effects which a severe wetting might otherwise produce, and the danger arising from unhealthy or fatiguing occupations is materially lessened by the daily use of this most reliable fortifying cordial which possesses the additional recommendation of being an excellent antiseptic, or means of resisting bodily decay, a fact sufficiently proven by its reciperal residents in all diseases of a depleting and e lienating nature

People who are oblized to take their meals in a hurry, or [illegible] are notoriously the victims of dyspepsia. They may, however, avoid in a great measure the varied torments inflicted by that Prince of maladies by swallowing after each meal a wineglassful of the National stomachic.

Selected Poetry.

'Go! Feel What I Have Felt."

A young lady of New York was in the habit of writing for the Philadelphia LEDGER on the subject of temperance. Her writing was so full of pathos, and evinced such a deep emotion of soul, that a friend of hers accused her of becoming a maniac on the subject of temperance: whereupon she wrote the following lines:

Go, feel what I have felt;
Go, bear what I have borne—
Sink 'neath the blow a father dealt,
And the cold world's proud scorn:
Then suffer on from year to year—
Two sole relief the scorching tear.

Go, kneel as I have knelt;
Implore a breach and pray;
Strive the besotted heart to melt,
Then onward course to stay;
Be mocked with bitter curse, aside,
Your prayers burlesqued, your tears defied

Go, weep as I have wept,
O'er a loved father's fall;
See every promised blessing swept—
Youth's—manliness turned to gall;
Life's trailing flowers strewn all the way
That led me up to woman's day.

Go, see what I have seen;
See the strong man bow,
With gnashing teeth, lip bathed in blood,
And cold and livid brow;
Go catch his withered glance, and see
There mirrored all his soul's misery.

Go to the mother's side,
And her crushed bosom cheer;
Thine own deep anguish hide;
Wipe from her cheek the tear.
Mark the worn frame and withered brow,
The gray that streaks her dark hair now—
The fading form and trembling limb,
And trace the ruin back to him
Whose plighted faith in early youth
Promised eternal love and truth,
But who, forsworn, hath yielded up
That promise to the cursed cup,
And led her down through love and light
And all that made the future bright,
And quenched her hope, and want and strife,
That lowly thing, a drunkard's wife;
And stamped on children's brow so mild,
That withering blight, a drunkard's child.

Go, mark, and see, and feel, and know
All that my soul hath felt and known;
Then look upon the wail o'ercap's glow—
See if its agony will atone;
Think it is thus you would cry,
When at procession, "'tis drink and die."

Tell me I hate the bowl?
Hate is a feeble word;
I loathe, abhor! My very soul
Is by its presence stirred
Rise—I pour on it—fear—or hell
Of this dark beverage of peril!

What are the Claims of the Pastor?

BY R.

NUMBER 2.

We propose in this number to consider the question, "Who is the pastor?" more fully, and to draw a distinction between the pastor and the preacher. We rather anticipated the whole subject in our first number; we now desire to discuss each question in a separate number.

The pastor and the preacher are not always one and the same person. The pastorate and the office of the ministry are generally lodged in the same person; but the moral obligations attendant upon each are as distinct as the labors involved in each are different.

Great preaching talents do not always make the best pastors. It some times happens, in God's arrangements, that men of the poorest pulpit abilities make the very best pastors. On the other hand, we sometimes see men whose renown, as pulpit orators, is in all the churches, who nevertheless, make the poorest pastors. Now, we believe in a distinct divine call to each of these offices. A call to preach the gospel by no absolute necessity involves a call to the pastorate. If this is so, then every local minister and every ministerial editor and professor in our colleges is a pastor. But these, in accordance with Methodistic usages, can have no pastorates. If, therefore, the ministerial office and the pastorate can be separated by the Church, it must follow that either there must be a distinct and separate divine call to each of these offices, or the usage of the Church is not morally and legitimately correct. We prefer to adopt the former conclusion, which leaves all ministerial brethren at liberty to decline a pastorate, though no man can decline the call to preach the everlasting gospel. In the case of Whitefield and Wesley, we have an example in point. Whitefield was called to the office of the ministry, but he was not called to be a pastor. Wesley seems to have been called to both, but especially to the latter. All who are conversant in the writings of Wesley must have noticed that his preaching talents fall far below his abilities as a pastor. To these under God he is mainly indebted for his grand success in founding the greatest ecclesiastical body upon earth. Whitefield flashed and sparkled in the moral heavens like a sun, converting thousands in a day to Christianity and Methodism; but for want of pastoral ability upon his part, they fell back to the "beggarly elements of the world almost in a day, and were lost to the Christian Church. When Wesley came, he moved slowly but surely, and through his great pastoral abilities, conserved all the fruits of his less brilliant efforts, and the result is seen in the mammoth proportions of the Methodist Church in America and Europe.

The claims, then, that we shall advocate in our next number, will be based, not so much upon the call to preach, as upon the divine call to the office of pastor.

In conclusion, we see the wisdom in Methodistic usages. The Itinerant system gives to all the churches, pastors as well as preachers. Circuit A. may have a preacher this year who is no pastor; next year, however, it may have a good pastor but no preacher: and so the system works till all the people are brought to a knowledge of divine truth.

May the Great Head of the Church make us all more efficient preachers and pastors!

"Fading, Still Fading."

MESS EDITORS: In my meditations to night these words came, almost unconsciously, into my mind. I was thinking of the "Hop" in which the elite of our town are engaged to-night, and where I might have spent the night in giddy and unprofitable pleasure, had not the 'grace of God been sufficient for me.' I was thinking of these Church members, and especially those Methodists who are there, mingling with the world in a wild twirl and shuffling of feet. I thought about the close proximity of the Church and the world—what a dread tendency they seem to have to compromise, and become one and the same. I asked myself the question: where are the lines of distinction? the musical silence of the midnight hour seemed to answer me, "Fading, still fading."

It is not my purpose, in this article, to discuss the question of the propriety of dancing; but merely to make a few suggestions. It is conceded by most, if not all good people, that dancing is inconsistent with Christian integrity. Whether this be true or not, it is the province of God's Revelation to decide. Let the man who desires to understand read for himself. But outside of this, it is no difficult task to prove that the time might be far more profitably spent. Dr. Watts says that it is the mind that makes the man; and surely that is the true philosophy which teaches us to make everything subordinate to the culture and full development of the mental and moral natures. On this very ground, dancing is sinful, if on no other. While I believe that social culture is very essential, I cannot think that the Ball Room is a more suitable place than might be found in select social meetings. If then there is no moral, mental, or social advantage, can we not safely term it a vain, unprofitable killing of time?

I believe that young people ought to meet together in a social capacity. Such things, if rightly conducted, are calculated to elevate young men and ladies, but why not substitute the reading-room in place of the ball-room?

We have no right to squander a moment of time. God has only given us a sufficiency of time for life's labors; then while we are laughing, let us be thinking. Let our sports be free, but innocent. Let us 'come out from among sinners and be separate,' and, by all means, let a definite line be drawn between the Church and the world. Let not the lines fade, though we are surrounded by the ungodly.—Heaven and hell are in sight, but there is an impassible gulf fixed between them. So let it be with the Church and the world.

Dead branches are detrimental to the growth of a tree, and when removed the tree comes forth as if with new life. So it is with the Church.—Dead, inactive members are detrimental to her prosperous growth.

Then why should we hesitate to remove them? Shall the Church be suffered to relax into a state of lukewarmness; or 'shall these dry bones of the valley live again?' O! let the Ark of God be brought back to the city of David; let the Church arise and prosper, and then, like David, we will "dance with all our might before the Lord."

CIVIS.

Hickory, N. C, Feb. 17th, 1876.

SPEAKING of a pastor who had been requested to preach to children, The Congregationlist says:

"He now replies that, having given the subject due reflection, he has concluded to preach regularly to the children, with a sermon one Sabbath afternoon in the month to adults. He says that the main hope of the Church is the rising generation; the thoughts and intents of his grown up hearers are in the main fixed; but those of the youth are yet to be shaped and directed. If he can get the boys and girls of to-day for Christ, he has made sure of the men and women of to-morrow. His business is to carry the lambs; the sheep must follow on."

Dying Faith.

I have chosen a subject that perhaps many will pass, thinking it too disagreeable to notice. We too often refuse to think of death, as being near us, because it is not agreeable to our natural feelings. Nevertheless, we know that death is an enemy we must all meet, and we know not how soon. Who can think of it with pleasure? Who can smile upon death? or meet the grave without fear? It is said that sin is the sting of death, and the fear of the grave. Yet I once thought it hardly posible for even the best to face death without a shudder, in connection with a chilling dread of the grave! especially the young and timid, who are relying on their parents for protection.

But the dying faith of a boy has convinced my mind of its error, and relieved it of many fears in regard to the terrors of death. Which instance I will partially relate, in hope that it may relieve the minds, and benefit the hearts of others also. The boy to whom I had reference was my favorite nephew. At the age of nine and a half, he was violently seized with a very painful and uncommon disease. His sufferings were so severe, the first week or more of his illness, that he could speak but little—was delirious a greater portion of the time.—That was the most trying time for those who loved him dearest! But a few days previously he was in his usual health, his firm quick step, his bright twinkling eyes, his clear loud voice, were all so fresh and dear to the memory, that we could hardly endure to realize his present condition, the victim of an awful disease, if not death itself, moaning and tossing, his cheeks burning with fever, his eyes weak and tremulous, his mind wandering, seemingly unconcious of every thing except the agonizing pains which were penetrating his body. We feared that he would pass into eternity unconciously, or in a fearful manner, not leaving us any token of comfort! But listen, he is the first to broach the subject—a sweet calm voice from the trunnel bed, saying: "Ma, I don't think I can live many more weeks.—" He became somewhat better for several days, in which period he spoke his mind quite freely. And although, others expressed hopes of his recovery, he did not seem much animated with the idea, neither did he complain of his unpleasant condition, but said that he had given himself to God, and was willing to do whatever He wanted. He said: "while I was so bad sick, I was praying a great deal, I prayed for everybody, and a whole lot for myself, but prayed more for others than for myself." During his illness he was the most perfect example of patience, resignation and cheerful endurance imaginable, especially for a child. And never expressed the least fear of death, but would often speak of going to heaven as though it were a pleasantant journey he was happily anticipating. He would frequently express himself of feeling happier when he was "bad sick," than at any other time. At intervals, when the paroxysems of his severest sufferings were relaxed, he would look into our anxious faces of sympathy, with a sweet smile, and say: "whenever I am bad sick I am so happy! I so often dream about heaven, and think so much about it, that I forget everything else, and just feel like I was up in the air—I feel like I could give up all my play things, and everything else"—alluding to his friends, brother, sister and friends. He seemed to have but one desire to live, and that was to do good, and to get others to be good. On one occasion, after expressing his willingness to go at any time, he said, "but if my work is not done, I would like to stay to do good—I would like to go and preach to the heathen."—His disease became complex, which baffled the skill of the physicians, and although his life was spared to the end of seven weeks, his sufferings were none the less severe; however, were most cheerfully borne. A few days before his death, after having an unusual paroxsys of suffering, being asked his feelings at that time, he immediately and brightly replied, "I am always ready, I am always ready, it is not just some times, but it is all the time, and I don't need anybody to tell me so, for I know it my self. And if I go a crying, or if I don't go a crying it will be all the same; but if I go a crying what matter is that? If I do go crying it will all be right anyhow." After he became too weak to speak but little, he would frequently greet us with a smile—would receive water always with a smile, or any little act of kindness that could be done for him. Even an indication of pain would be followed by a smile. Smiling in the very arms of death! with a countenance revealing to the world, that there was a crown of everlasting rejoicing awaiting him on the other shore! He was conquerer—he had won the prize, and was ready to go and receive it. That text, "Oh death where is thy sting? Oh, grave where is thy victory?' I had never so well appreciated as then. I was convinced that the grace of God is sufficient—that it can rob death of all its terrors, and that through faith we can rejoice ere we have reached the othershore.—Yet, without prayer, we have no promise of receiving that grace by which our faith is thus strengthened. The boy above mentioned prayed a great deal for himself, but more for others. We were assured they were answered, in regard to himself, and hope they may not be in vain for those others. So strong was his faith.

Against the Grain.

The other day I was planing a board, and by accident planed one shaving the wrong way of the grain. Of course the surface was left rough. Turning the board, I noticed that it took more than one driving of the plane to get the surface smooth again. It was necessary to go over and over it again. There thought I, is life illustrated. One wrong stroke eats deeply and roughly. An evil deed eats like a canker. Long weary years hardly efface the errors of a day. How rough, jagged, and unsightly, then, our lives must be! Standing beside the bench, plane in hand, guided by that carnal mind, powerful in its enmity, the strokes, alas, how often, run against its grain! When do we ever smooth them out? Shall the surface never be smooth? Let the Master workman advise a little. Seek his help. The Master workman—Jesus Christ—is able and willing to give the needed help. Working under his instruction, in obedience to his behests, with reliance upon his wisdom, with confidence in his help, the work hard as it seemed while the trust was in self, shall be accomplished satisfactorily.—Congregationalist.

NOTHING TO GIVE.

Well, neighbor Jones, you stayed away,
And missed a wholesome treat.
For really, Parson's talk to day
Was good enough to eat.

He bid us mark, in all deeds and words,
Showed truest Christian living;
And love for God and love to man,
Not promising but giving.

To give, as God had given us;
Not grudgingly, or spare,
But be our portion large or small,
With poorer brethren share.

And as I glanced a moment round,
I saw there, Thomas Brown:
Who is you know the richest, ye'
The treasurer man in town

Now he could well a hundred spare,
Nor care for where it went;
But would you think it, neighbor Jones;
He never gave a cent!

But Smith gave nothing, that I own
I wondered much to see.
For what he spent to buy those Greys,
Would just have ruined me.

And what did you give? How you talk,
Can one so poor as I,
Who needs must study ways and means,
His neighbors wants supply.

Why I've just built a nice new house,
And just began to live,
And bought a pair of oxen more,

Growing Old.

It is the solemn thought connected with middle life, that life's last business is begun in earnest; and it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that man begins to marvel that he let the days of youth go by so half enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn feeling; if is the sensation of half sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year is past, and every day that follows is shorter, and the light fainter, and the feeble shadows tell that nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave. So does man look back upon his youth. When the first grey hairs become visible, when the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon the mind that a man is no longer going up hill but down, and that the sun is always westering, he looks back on things behind. When we were children, we thought as children. But now there lies before us manhood, with its earnest work, and then old age, and then the grave, and then home. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than the first, if he will look on, and not look back.—F. W. Robertson.

At the late meeting of the London Religious Tract Society its chairman said that he owed a great deal to a tract. It was a narrative tract which a relative had placed in a box of novels and sent out to him in the Crimea. He had read the novels through more than once, and was at last compelled to turn to the tract. This, aided by the prayers of many, began a good work in him, which he was persuaded God would perform until the day of Jesus Christ.

He that finds a thing, steals it if he endeavors not to restore it.

The Economy of Temperance.

There are multitudes of people who regard the temperance question as one of morals alone. The men who drink say simply, "We will drink what we please, and it's nobody's business. You temperance men are pestilent fellows, meddlesome fellows, who obtrude your twopenny standard of morality upon us, and we do not want it, and will not accept it. Because you are virtuous, shall there be no more cakes and ale?" Very well, let us drop it as a question of morality. You will surely look at it with us as a question of national economy and prosperity, else, you can hardly regard your views as patriots. We have a common interest in the national prosperity, and we can discuss amicably any subject on this common ground.

France produces its own wine, and drinks mainly cheap wine. It is a drink which, while it does them no good, according to the showing of their own physicians, does not do them harm enough to interfere with their industry. Their drinking wastes neither life nor money as ours does, and they sell in value to other countries more than they drink themselves. During the year 1870, in our own State of New York, there were expended by consumers for liquor more than one hundred and six millions of dollars, a sum which amounted to nearly two thirds of all the wages paid to laborers, in agriculture and manufactures, and to nearly twice as much as the receipts of all the railroads in the States, the sum of the latter being between sixty eight and sixty-nine millions. The money of our people goes across the bar all the time faster than it is crowded into the wickets of all the railroad stations of the State, and where does it go? What is the return for it? Diseased stomachs, aching heads discouraged and slatternly homes, idleness, gout, crime, degradation, death. These, in various measures, are exactly what we get for it. We gain of that which is good, nothing—no uplift in morality, no increase of industry, no accession to health, no growth of prosperity. Our State is full of tramps, and every one is a drunkard. There is demoralization every-where, in consequence of this wasteful stream of fiery fluid that constantly flows down the open gullet of the State.

But our State is not alone. The liquor bill of Pennsylvania during 1870 was more than sixty-five millions of dollars, a sum equal to one third of the entire agricultural product of the State. Illinois paid more than forty-two millions, and Ohio more than fifty eight millions. Massachusetts paid more than twenty five millions, a sum equal to five sixths of her agricultural products, while the liquor bill of Maine was only about four millions and a quarter. Mr. Hargreaves takes the figures of Massachusetts and Maine to show how a prohibitory law does, after all, reduce the drinking; but it is not our purpose to argue this question.

What we desire to show is, that, with an annual expenditure of $600,000,000 for liquors in the United States—and all the figures we give are based upon official statistics—it is not to be wondered at that the times are hard and people poor. Not only this vast sum is wasted; not only the capital invested is diverted from good uses, and all the industry involved in production taken from beneficent pursuits, but health, morality, respectability, industry and life are destroyed. Sixty thousand Americans annually lie down in a drunkard's grave. It were better to bring into the field and shoot down sixty thousand of our young men every year, than to have them go through all the processes of disease, degradation, crime and despair through which they inevitably pass.

With six hundred millions of dollars saved to the country annually, how long would it take to make these United States rich not only, but able to meet, without disturbance and distress, the revulsions in business to which all nations are liable? Here is a question for the statesman and the politician. Twenty-five years of abstinence from the consumption of useless, and worse than useless, liquors, would save to the country fifteen billions of dollars, and make us the richest nation on the face of the globe. Not only this sum—beyond the imagination to comprehend—would be saved, but all the abominable consequences of misery, disease, disgrace, crime, and death, that would flow from the consumption of such an enormous amount of poisonous fluids, would be saved. And yet temperance men are looked upon as disturbers and fanatics! And we are adjured not to bring temperance into politics! And this great transcendent question of economy gets the go-by, while we hug our little issues for the sake of party and of office! Do we not deserve adversity?—Scribner for Dec.

A Wonderful Pastor.

An extraordinary instance of diversified ability, joined to unwearied industry, is presented by the life of Rev. Robert Walker, of Seathwaite, generally known as "Wonderful Walker."

Although he lived in obscurity, he found no less a biographer than the poet Wordsworth, who gives an interesting account of him in the notes to his "Sonnets of the Duddon." The parish priest so finely delineated in the "Excursion" is also a picture of Wonderful Walker. He was born in 1709, and was the son of a small statesman, who lived in Seathwaite. He was the youngest of twelve, and a weakly child, on which latter account his father gave him what schooling he could. At the age of seventeen he went to be schoolmaster at Gosforth, near Egremont, and remained there two yers. He then removed to Buttermere, where he acted both as minister and schoolmaster, and received the usual small salary and "whittlegate." Before and after school hours he labored at manual occupation. He wrote his own sermons and did duty twice on Sundays. In summer he rose between three and four, and went to the fields—in hay time with his scythe, in harvest time with his sickle. He plowed, he planted, he tended sheep on the fells; at other times he clipped or salved—all for hire. When engaged in these employments he would be at work long before the regular laborers, and remain after they had finished their day's work. Nor was he less skillful than diligent. In all such labors he excelled. In winter he occupied himself in reading, writing his sermons, spinning and making his own clothes and those of his family (he was an excellent spinner,) knitting, and mending his own shoes, the leather of which was of his own tanning. In his walks he never neglected to gather and bring home the wool from the hedges. He was the physician and lawyer of his parishioners. He drew up their wills, conveyances, bonds, etc., wrote all their letters and settled their accounts, and frequently went to market with sheep or wool for the farmers. The next step in his career was his removal from Buttermere to Torver, on the banks of Coniston Lake, and, taking priest's orders, soon after which he married a respectable maidservant, whose affections he had gained at Buttermere, and who brought him a fortune of £40, which he forthwith invested in the funds.

Shortly after his marriage he obtained the curacy of Seathwaite, where he lived and officiated for sixty seven years. At the time of Wonderful Walker's appointment, and for many years later, Seathwaite Church was without pews. He used it as a school-room, and is described as seated in his favorite place, near the communion table, wearing a cloak of his own making. His greatgrandson tells us that when the family was in want of cloth, Mr. Walker would take his spinning wheel with him to the school, where he also kept a cradle—of course of his own making. Not unfrequently the wheel, the cradle and the scholars claiming his attention at the same moment, taxed the ingenuity of even Wonderful Walker to keep them all going. The chapel was afterward pewed, and a new chapel built. To the already long catalogue of his attainments and pursuits, must be added a knowledge of fossils and of plants, and a habit of observing the stars and winds. Indeed the atmosphere was one of his favorite studies. He made many experiments on its nature and properties. In summer he used to collect flies and insects, and by his entertaining descriptions of them amuse and instruct his children. After a long and useful life, which extended over nearly the whole of the last century, he died on June 23, 1802, in the ninety-third year of his age. In the course of his long life he had, besides bringing up and settling in life a family of twelve children, amassed the sum of £2,000, the result of marvelous industry and self denial. He was a hero in humble life—a greater hero than many in whose honor monuments have been erected.—Fraser's Magazine.

NURSING GOD'S LITTLE ONES.—About seventy years ago, a girl eleven years old, gave evidence of loving the Savior. She had been reared by a mother and elder sister, who greatly desired that she should profess Christ. Accordingly she came before the session of their church, and was examined as to her faith and religious knowledge. This was satisfactory; but those church officers hesitated to admit her on account of her youth. The elder sister said, "Receive her into the membership of the church, and we will nurse her at home.' They consented, and she lived to be over fourscore, serving her Lord earnestly.

DISCONTENT is a sin that is its own punishment, and makes men torment themselves; it makes the spirit sad—the body sick—and enjoyment sour; it arises not from the condition, but the mind.

Drunkards who Shoot.

Criminals get off on many pleas in these days. It is quite common to plead insanity in murder cases. No doubt this plea ought to be made sometimes, but, as we suppose, people who are sane enough to kill people, and too insane to be hung, ought to be "locked up." Dogs that bite people who are going about their business, must be killed or chained. So with people who violate law; something must be done. If they hurt people—sane or insane—they must be stopped. Sometimes we hear of a defense grounded on the plea of "emotional insanity." Call it by whatever name the skilled in such things may invent, it comes to this at last—people who shoot and stab other people must be taken in hand. Their emotions are dangerous. Wherein are the widow and orphans of a man, shot down in the streets, bettered by calling the rage of the man who killed him, "emotional insanity?" People who have such emotions must not go about loose. If they are too crazy to be hung, they are too crazy to go at liberty.

Our attention has been called to these things by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Georgia, Mr. Justice Jackson delivering the opinion. The whole country owes thanks to the honorable Court for this decision, and to the learned Justice who delivered it. It is a model of vigor, terseness, and clearness. Few are too insane to understand it. It ought to be read in every schoolhouse, and printed in every paper. Indeed, upon reflection, we think it would be wise to read it from our pulpits. It would be certainly in better taste than the "notices" of lectures and other things preachers are often requested to read.

Here is the decision—from Capt. Jackson's official report published in the Atlanta Constitution of November 17th:

"Edward Estes vs. The State. Assault with intent to murder, and motion for a new trial from Whitefield.

"Jackson, J.

"1. A person, sober enough to intend to shoot at another, and actually to shoot at him, without any provocation or justification whatever, is to be deemed sober enough to form the specific intent to murder; and mere drunkenness, whatever its degree, will not negative intent.

"2. Unless the evidence suggest some other motive for the shooting to be compared by the jury with the State's theory of a malicious intent, the offense has necessarily the same grade with, as without, drunkenness; and consequently, in such a case, there is no grading to be done, and any charge to the jury in reference to drunkenness, as a separate element in grading the offense, would be inapplicable, and need not be given by the court.

"3. Voluntary drunkenness is no excuse for crime.

"Judgment affirmed."

Thanks to the Court, we say again, and to Judge Jackson for putting the decision in such a form that all may understand it. "Voluntary drunkenness is no excuse for crime." Let judges and juries stick to that text, and the temperance reforms will be greatly promoted. If drunken people will shoot, they must be stopped.—Southern Advocate.

BUDGET OF HUMOR.

"But why do they call it 'crooked' whiskey?" asked Martha Jane. "Because," answered Fitzboodle gravely, "although it is generally taken straight, those who consume much of it are nearly always on a 'bender.'" She was satisfied.

Two colored citizens recently had a little disagreemnt. "Sir, I stigmatize you as a falsehoodfier!" exclaimed the first. "And you, sir, are a cantering bipelerite!" replied the second. 'Ah! talk away,' growled the first, 'but my character is beyond disproach.' 'And your influence don't detach from my reputation one Iowa!' growled the other. And thus they parted.

The judge at a court in Maine recently sentenced a culprit to twenty five years in the State prison. This fact was communicated to the prisoner's mother, who was struck at the magnitude of the sentence. 'What did they do that for?' she exclaimed. 'Twenty-five years! Why, he won't be contented there three weeks."

'Benjamin,' shouted Mrs. Toodles to her husband, who was going out of the gate, 'bring me up five cents worth of snuff when you come.'—'Snuff! Mrs. Toodles, snuff!' he ejaculated, as he paused with his hand on the latch. 'No, no. Mrs Toodles, the times are too hard to admit of such extravagance; you must tickle your nose with a straw when you want to sneeze.'

Rome and the Bible.

We distinctly charge Rome with hostility to the free use and circulation of the Bible. Among their converts they reckon sixty tribes of heathen, but nowhere have they translated into their language the Scriptures they go out to preach; or if they have, all notice of the fact has eluded our most diligent search. If seems strange that out into the midst of sixty different peoples they should so freely go preaching a gospel, but never showing a single copy of the documents.

There is no papal Bible society, either. Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and all other sects, include this among the objects of their gifts and care; but show us the papal Bible society. Thousands of infidel patriots, notwithstanding their infidelity, help on the distribution of the Bible for their country's sake; but show us the Papist high in authority who ever does it. Some pious priest in his simplicity may, but where is the bishop that ever has included this in the list of his beneficences? Many earnest petitions for funds go from our land to the Leopold Society for crucifixes and images to scatter among the Indians, but not a penny is bespoken for a Bible to give them.

They oppose Bible reading in the schools—not the Bible that we use alone, but Douay, as well. is objected to. In the edition of 1840, approved by four bishops, is the admonition to men not to read it without permission from their spiritual guide—not ignorant men only, "men accomplished in all kinds of learning" are warned away. Washington, Marshall, Franklin, must not read! This is not in the edition of Naples, or of Lisbon, with 1340 marked in the title page, but of Philadelphia, in 1840. Other people's Bibles, of course, they do not less oppose. Pope Leopold III warns all men against Bible societies, and quotes Pius VII. to the same effect. Gregory XVI. was in sorrow, night and day, on account of them. Poor old man! made sad by the growing universality of the diffusion of God's word! The ruling Pope is no more favorably disposed. He speaks of the insidious measures of the Bible distributors, and regrets the recent improvements in the art of printing, which so greatly increase the facilities of the distributors of the Scriptures among other dangerous books. The Council of Trent, the highest authority of the Romish Church, is very guarded in allowing the reading of the Scriptures to learned laymen at the bishops' dictation.—Church Union.

The Magic of Silence.

You have often heard "it takes two to make a quarrel." Do you believe it? I'll tell you how one of my little friends managed:

Dolly never came to see Marjorie that there was not a quarrel. Marjorie tried to speak gently, but no matter how hard she tried, Dolly finally made her so angry that she would soon speak sharp words too.

'O, what shall I do?' cried poor little Marjorie.

'Suppose you try this plan,' said her mamma; 'the next time Dolly comes in, seat yourself in front of the fire, and take the tongs in your hand.—Whenever a sharp word comes from Dolly, gently snap the tongs, without speaking a word.'

Soon afterward in marched Dolly, to see her little friend.

It was not a quarter of an hour before Dolly's temper was ruffled, and her voice was raised, and as usual, she began to find fault and scold. Marjorie fled to the hearth, and seized the tongs, snapping them gently.

More angry words from Dolly.

Snap went the tongs.

More still. Snap.

'Why don't you speak?' screamed Dolly, in a fury. Snap went the tongs.

'Speak!' said she. Snap was the answer.

'I'll not come again, never!' cried Dolly.

Away she went. Did she keep her promise? No, indeed. She came the next day; but seeing Marjorie run for the tongs, she solemnly said if she would only let them alone they would quarrel no more forever and ever.—Working Church.

It was like the song of some wonderful bird, and it made the air shine after the sound had died away; and yet it was just the remark of a brave young man who walked past me one day, arm-in-arm with a companion: "Depend upon it, Tom, St. Edmund of Canterbury was right when he said to somebody, "Work as though you would live forever; live as though you would die to-day.

RECEIPT FOR DIPTHERIA.—A lady who has had considerable experience in treating diptheria, recommends the following receipt, which she says has never been known to fail to effect a complete cure, even in the most malignant cases: Take as much of the bark of alder root as can be grasped between the fore-finger and thumb, same quantity of dogwood and pepper simmon root bark, and one ounce of alum. Boil down in a pint of strong vinegar to a half pint. Before cooling, add three tablespoonfuls of cold water. Sweeten with honey. Use as a gargle.

Important Announcement

Our readers will be delighted to learn that the facile pen of Rev. H. T. Hudson will contribute to our columns a "History of the Pioneer Methodist Preachers in North Carolina." The first number will appear in the first issue of the Advocate in April.

Such a history is greatly desired by our people and its appearance will be greeted with favor if we mistake not. Bro Hudson is well known as an able and polished writer, patient in research and accurate in statement. In order that the history of the men who started Methodism in North Carolina may be known to and read of all, let subscriptions to the Advocate begin at once. We beg that our preachers will announce to their congregations the forth coming History and urge upon them the importance of subscribing. The publication will be likely to run through the year, perhaps longer.

Evils of Intemperance.

It is a lamentable fact that many of our most promising young men are slaves to intemperance, and by its impetuous torrent are swept away to infamy and the grave. Many have yielded to the solicitations of their associates and taken a glass, who never intended to take another, or at least never to make a practice of it. But having once tasted the cup they ventured again and again, and thus led on step by step they soon became drunkards. The vice of intemperance hurries its victim with the violence of passion, and captivates him by the allurements of pleasures. He yields to the impulse merely because he cannot resist it. Reason remonstrates—conscience endeavors to check him. But all in vain. Having once allowed the strong passion to gain the ascendant, he throws himself in the middle of a torrent, against which he may sometimes faintly struggle, but the impetuosity of the stream bears him away. In this condition he is so far from being free that he is not master of himself. He does not go, but is driven, tossed and impelled like a ship by the violence of the waves. How often have unworthy friendships, imprudent and vicious associates engaged young men unsuspectingly at first, and then habitually, in a fatal course of folly and crime! The question arises, where has the dissolute young man contracted these vices, which in spite of his convictions are dragging him captive at their wills? Where the worthless gambler reared his infamous trade? Where the contemptible lounger acquired his habits of idleness? Where the prodigal, the intemperate, the profligate, corrupted all their powers both of body and soul? Was it not in vicious society, where pleasure is sought in the intoxicating bowl? Stop and think young man—fly from the haunts of club rooms, saloons and tippling shops. Perhaps you may feel unconcerned on this subject, because you never were drunkards. But beware—all drunkards felt just as you do, before they were enslaved and brutalized by intemperance. What young man can calmly look upon the picture we have but imperfectly drawn and not perceive his danger? A mournful cry comes from the prison cell, and cautions all to flee from the accursed enemy of our peace and liberty. The grave into which so many have gone down, the unhappy victims of inebriation, speaks in solemn tones to escape from the unrelenting enemy. The voice of conscience also warns all to beware of the insidious foe. All speak in a voice like the rushing of mighty waters against intemperance.

Young man, whose eye may chance to read these lines, we pray you to heed the council which they give.—Avoid the dens of darkness and destruction. Go not near the sinks of iniquity. Pass by them as you would a pestilence, which is sure death.—Your good example will do much towards checking the practice of drinking. Abstain from the practice yourself and do all you can to save your associates from falling into the vice of intemperance, which will rob them of their character, blunt their minds, harden their hearts, and sear their consciences. Oh! the evils of intemperance will never be told this side the day of final reckoning.

Brethren are earnestly requested to collect for renewals to the ADVOCATE at as early a date as possible.

Centennial Offering

Will not each minister who attends the Centennial celebration in March bring with hi a a club of ten or twenty subscribers to the Advocate at $2 a year, each? Dear Brethren, endeavor to bring at least that number. It will cheer us greatly to be thus remembered

And cannot those who stay at home (we hope they will be few) send us similar clubs? Remember that in clubs of ten we furnish the Advocate at $2 a year to each subscriber.

To render the Centennial movement a success in our Church this year, the Advocate will be needed on every charge in the Conference. Let every service, during this year, be supplemented by an appeal for the Advocate. The people must have it. Send or bring clubs of subscribers, at once.

The Church at Washington.

A few weeks since Bro. Culbreth, in charge of the Church at Washington, N. C., made an appeal through the ADVOCATE for one dollar from each of one thousand persons, for the purpose of completing the church building in that good old town. That church is needed to finish the work which was commenced some years ago. The building is in an unfinished state, and is suffering on that account. A few hundred dollars spent on the building now, would finish and preserve the church from decay and ruin. The congregation cannot afford to wait,—the cost of the ultimate completion of the building increases ever day. They have done what they could and now appeal to their friends throughout the State. It is an object deserving liberality and we trust Bro. Culbreth will not be disappointed in his efforts. Responses to his appeal have come from many quarters, but more are wanted, and must be had. Remember that Bro. C. only asks of you one dollar. That is a small amount, but it may prove a good investment for you. Try it.

Post Mortem Falsehoods.

When a wicked man, or a man of bad influences, dies it is too commonly the case that his wickedness is glossed over and apologized for by those who preach his funeral or write his epitaph. It is thought necessary to do this in order to spare the feelings of the afflicted relatives, already grieved perhaps beyond measure. Respect for the lacerated feelings of the surviving friends is proper and humane, and it is better, oftentimes, to say nothing about the deceased unless something good can be said. De mortuis nil nisi bonum is a precept that has its foundation in humanity, and it is one of poor abused human nature's highest praises that it forgets the foibles and stains of one who has closed his eyes in death and remembers what was good and attractive—chanting, with unquestioned sincerity, its mournful Requiescat in Pace.

But to eulogize one who was known to the world to be wicked—to give such prominence to what are called "redeeming traits" as to make the deceased appear as a saint and his character and career "worthy of emulation, is to violate truth and honesty and to do injustice to the living. Funeral sermons are too of ten panegyrics, when truth requires there should be either silence or condemnation. To spare the feelings of the living and sorrowing friends, the crimes or evil course of the dead are too often coated over with some extenuating plaster, and hopes encouraged when there is nothing on which the prongs of the anchor can take hold.

The preacher who in his funeral discourse, gives a good send off to the souls of men who have lived wicked or questionable lives and have died with out hope in Christ, will not encourage many to holy living or gather many into the fold of the church.

Obituaries, and funeral sermons, and epitaphs are allowable and in good taste, provided their statements are not outside of the region of fact and wholly within the realm of fiction. Lies are abominable always: but especially so in the presence of death. They should not appear anywhere,—certainly not in so solemn a place as a pulpit, an obituary column, or graveyard.

The Centennial Mass Meeting is near at hand, and the citizens of Raleigh are getting ready to extend a hearty welcome to our ministerial and lay brethren who may find it convenient to be present.

The Christian Standard, of Philadelphia, last week contained cheering news from that city and vicinity. The Churches of all denominations are enjoying gracious revivals. Large numbers are being converted

THE Central Methodist, of last week, says:—"At no time, we believe, within the history of our Church in Kentucky and West Virginia, has there been so deep, wide spread, and powerful a revival as at the present. From almost every charge reports of the most cheering character reach us, and the numbers converted and brought into the church are unprecedented. The ministry seem to be throughly aroused, the membership awakened to a higher sense of obligation and duty, and a united effort is, under God, resulting most gloriously.

Church Performances.

Upon this subject, the Alexandria Gazette, a secular paper, of excellent reputation, publishes the following rebuke. We are inclined to coincide with the writer in his views relating to fairs, festivals, and entertainments of like character, to raise funds for benevolent purposes. One good, faithful collector is usually worth a half dozen festivals:

"The giving of performances, holding of fairs, and such like, for the purpose of raising money for religious objects seems to be a growing evil in our day and generation, and I am fully aware of the displeasure which any one will incur who shall dare to protest against such worldly minded schemes. Now, I am fully persuaded if each individual member of any Church would contribute each week in the same ratio as the Lord has blessed him, there would be a surplus always in every Church treasury and no need of going to the outside world for money for the propagation of the cause of Christ. I am sure that, in Apostolic times, when believers sold their possessions and laid the money at the Apostles feet, had such wordly means been devised the originators would have incurred the just disapprobation of the ministers of Christ. But the heralds of the gospel tell us we live in an age much to be preferred to primitive times, under the mid day light of the sun, &c., with ancient manners and customs to improve upon, and yet we fail so signally to come up to their standard in the matter of giving to the support of churches. Of course I do not mean to make this charge against any single church—they are all guilty, more or less, of the practice. Holy Writ, speaking to those who have taken Jesus Christ as their portion in this world, calls them the children of the Highest, partakers of the Divine nature, and many other exhilarating titles which, properly comprehended, would cause us to eschew the folly and foolishness of a world lying around us in sin and wickedness, and not bring the Church down to its level for pecuniary motives. At the present rapid rate which this monstrous practice is traveling, it will not be many years before theatrical performer and Church member will be synonomous terms; for the day has come when, if an organ is needed, a Sunday School library, or anything else for religious purposes, the church immediately opens a restaurant, or an icecream saloon, or gives a public exhibition in order to raise the desired amount.

"Now, to take young people—for of such the performers generally consist—young immortals, many of whom have taken upon themselves the vows of the Church, and who should be taught to regard themselves as strangers and pilgrims upon the earth and not be of this world, even as their Divine Head is not—and place them upon the stage before a promiscuous assemblage to make ludicrous attempts to ape performers, is radically wrong, and a great responsibility rests upon any who engage in it, whether they be clergy or laity. I know the reply many will make to me, "that it's only among ourselves; there is no harm in it." Couldn't you get up a bull fight on the same principle? Now, we all know how prone young people are to walk in forbidden paths, and how many of us have seen the young ones put on sad countenances when forbidden to engage in some unchristian amusement. And now, ought any one who has the Spirit of the Master, and who professes with Paul to be crucified unto the world, and the world unto him, to engage in himself, or allow those in his household to participate in worldly diversions (though they be conducted in the name of Christ) which it is his place as a Christian to denounce? I know that many good people commit these errors, supposing that when the children delivered to their care shall arrive at maturity they will become sober-sided and all will be well: but the history of the world certainly shows the contrary If we, as Christian people, in order to bring our little ones prominent before the world, sow the tares, we will be held to a fearful account. Now, it is earnestly to be hoped that there may be a reform in these matters, and let us no more be compelled to go to the world for money to carry on our churches.—Let us ever remember that our Church is the Bride of Christ, and we are sure to incur his displeasure when we bring her down to the level of this world in order to make money.

Muddy

The man that wrote the following for the Ashville Expositor may possibly have known what he meant to say, but if he did, the same clearness of mental vision which he possesses is not enjoyed by many. We agree with Bro Hussy, of the Landmark, who says that "though it does not bristle with that vigorous intellectual vitality which characterizes Western (N. C.) journalism, it is full of the most striking originality:"

"The fact, however true as it is, that when 1876 will have been numbered among the things that were, and only 24 years more is needed to bring the nineteen hundredth year of our existence as a people, or since the building up of the present world, is seldom ever thought of. How many there are now living whose heads are frosted with old age, and, indeed, many who young in years, old fair to live a long while, who may never live to see the approach of 1900! Blessed, as those may be who live to see this time, with every luxury bestowed by Nature and Providence, a possible reformed government, &c., that the future may wrought; but, on the other hand, cursed be they if Time does not wrought these changes, particularly in a political point of view. Twenty-four years hence may prove a tell-tale story compared with the present date."

Rev. Z. Rush sends us the following interesting item:

"Rocky River Church, one of the appointments on the South Guilford Circuit, in the N. W. corner of Chatham county, was deeded to Rev. Francis Asbury, Bishop of the M. E. Church, on the 2nd day of July 1789, and Asbury dedicated the Church.—It is a log building, about 20 by 30 feet, with a very well preserved wall yet. A tolerably large grave yard is on the lot."

Church Dedication.

MESSRS EDITORS: A few lines with reference to the dedication of our new church at Weldon, may interest some of your readers.

The church is quite respectable in size and appearance, and well located, —entire cost about three thousand dollars.

The morning—13th inst.,—was favorable, and Dr. Deems being quite a favorite hereabout, the congregation was large. To say that the Dr. met expectation, does not meet the case; he went beyond it.

The sermon over, the indebtedness upon the house was put at $500; he entered the field to secure it, and in a very short time the amount was paid and pledged, with $50 over. Dr. Closs, P. E., of the Dist, then dedicated the church formally, being assisted by Rev Root. O. Burton, P. C. of the ct.

The Choir, though recently organized, did admirably—selecting such tunes as were familiar, and rendering them well. On Monday this people responded to the call of your correspondent, and completed their proportion of the College fund. Well done Weldon! But this is just what it should be. Let churches be built and repaired in every part of our territory, where there is demand for it, but let these general enterpises not be forgotten. They are just as necessary to the prosperity of our Church in N. C., as these local improvements are to success in particular sections. "It is the sword of the Lord, and of Gideon."

I was brought under peculiar obligations to Messrs Southall and Styll, the gentlemanly proprietors of the "Emry House," whose hospitality I shared during my stay.

From Weldon via Tarboro, this place may be reached by Capt. Smith's line—Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

V. A. SHARPE.

To the Preachers and Laity on the Newbern District.

DEAR BRETHREN: In obedience to a resolution in the report of the Committee on the Centennial passed by our last Annual Conference, requiring the Presiding Elder of each District to designate the month for celebrating the Centennial of Methodism in North Carolina, I hereby give notice, that, from the last Sabbath in March to the last Sabbath in April, will constitute the centennial month on the Newbern District. Also, in part, the mass-meetings ordered, will be 1st, During the District Conference at Kinston; the time yet to be fixed. 2nd. At Snow Hill, Friday the 11th of August. We invite the College Agents to be present during the month and at mass meetings; and also, the pastor of Edenton Street Church, in person or by proxy to represent the interests of a church in Raleigh, which ought to be built, and that soon. Dear Brethren, if the mountain will not come to us, let us go to the mountain; and as the banner District paid, per member, over one third more than any other District last year, so, let it not be said that she fell behind in this great enterprise of the Church.

Yours fraternally,

E. A. YATES, P. E.

"Centennial at Home."

MESSRS EDITORS: I see in your last issue that "A Layman" suggests that every Methodist minister in the State deliver, during the month of March—the centennial month, "one or more sermons on the rise and progress of Methodism in this country, and especially in the State of North Carolina." This, I think, is a good suggestion. We need such sermons.—Our people do not know enough of our history as a Church.

But as the mass meeting in Raleigh extends through the following Sabbath, and as some of our Bishops are to remain over and preach on that day, and as many of our ministers would like to remain to hear them, and in order that we may all have an opportunity to preach these sermons on the same day, would it not be better to designate, or agree upon Sunday the 19th of March as the day for the delivery of these sermons? This would be the Sunday before the mass meeting in Raleigh. What does "Layman" say to this suggestion? It is made by

A MINISTER.

DEAR BRETHREN: We publish the above as the Programme for our Centennial celebration in Raleigh. It is not fully completed—*some*few changes may be made in reference to the pulpit exercises. It is however substantially arranged. As the people generally in N. C. feel a deep interest in this celebration, we most respectfully request the Press of the State to copy this Programme.

Other important announcements will be made next week. Let there be a grand rally at Raleigh: and let all our ministers and people pray for a "tidal wave" of salvation to sweep over the whole state.

THE HOME OF WASHINGTON.—It is understood that the home of Washington at Mount Vernon is to be put in thorough repair before the arrival of visitors to the Centennial, after plans drawn by Mr Van Campen Taylor, the architect, of New York. Mr. Taylor visited the homestead recently, and is now engaged in drawing plans of the entire building, so that in case of its destruction by fire, it may be rebuilt exactly as it now stands. Along the entire east side of the house runs a high piazza facing the river. The length of this is ninety four feet, and the width fourteen. The balustrade above the piazza is somewhat rotted, and requires to be rebuilt, and the same kind of wood will be employed in the reconstructions as was originally used. At the south end of the house, and opening from Washington's library, there is a portico about ten by sixteen feet in size. This was erected about the year 1790, when Washington added two wings to the original house of Lawrence Washington. This, too, is to be rebuilt, and the necessary repairs will be made early in the coming spring. On the piazza stands the pillar and the bell with which Washington used to summon his horse, which was kept saddled and bridled in readiness for his call.

CENTENNIAL NOTICE.

To the Ministers, Members and Friends of the M. E. Church South, in North Carolina: We expect a "grand gathering" at our Centennial Celebration in Raleigh. The exercises will begin Tuesday, March 21st, at 10 o'clock, A. M., in Metropolitan Hall, and will be continued until Sunday night, March 26th, 1876. Three of our honored Bishops will be present. Rev. Dr. Wadsworth of Mobile, Ala., and Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Richmond Va., former pastors of Edenton Street Church, are expected to be with us, with many other distinguished ministers and laymen whose names are not in our programme. We expect to do all in our power to make the occasion a great blessing to the church and State. That we may not be disappointed, we beg you all to unite with us in humble, devout prayer to Almighty God for His benediction upon us.

Dear Brethren, please note the following points, viz: 1. We expect to entertain all the ministers of the State, who may attend, free of charge. Let all those, who expect to be here, notify me at once.

2. All our hotels and private boarding houses will entertain those who may come to the Celebration, at greatly reduced rates.

3. We expect all the R R. Companies in the State to sell tickets for round trip at one full fare This arrangement is not yet perfected, but we hope it will be in due time.

L. S. BURKHEAD,
for Committee.

Jos. S. Spinney, Esq.

This prince of laymen a few years ago, at an expense of about $22,000, erected a spacious and beautiful Church on Long Island N. Y. On the day of its dedication there was no collection or subscriptions asked for: The entire cost had been paid by this noble brother, Jos. S. Spinney. Now look at the result:

"At the Great Neck, Long Island, M. E. Church, the revival spirit is being remarkably manifested, and special services have been held for the past two weeks—sometimes five nights during the week—and are still continued. At every meeting more or less penitents bow around the altar, most of them adults—several heads of families—in one instant at one time a brother, sister, and niece, all of mature age—many of whom have professed the new birth.' Services are largely attended, so fully that an old resident remarked that he couldn't see where all the people came from. A holy atmosphere seems to provade every corner of the neighborhood. These blessed efforts have followed the faithful preaching of the pastor, Rev. Charles Bickman, who besides his pulpit labors, with some active laymen has gone extensively from house to house, and talked to the people on their eternal interests. We cannot say whether this is a usual procedure, but, should it not be, would respectfully advise all Church members to do likewise."—Exchange.

Conversion of a Catholic Priest.

We find in the French correspondence of our exchanges an account of the conversion of an influential Roman Catholic priest. An anxious penitent confessed to him that she had been to a Protestant service. He questioned her closely, for his curiosity was greatly excited. She gave him a full account, and acknowledged that a great impression had been made upon her mind. The impression communicated itself to him; and shortly after he requested his own sister to go to the nearest place where Protestants assembled, to listen as with his ears and under his responsibility, and to bring him a full detail of every thing. Reluctantly she did so, but faithfully reported all.

The priest was convinced there were truths of which he was ignorant, entered into communication with the pastor appointed a secret place for a prolonged interview; and found peace in the finished work of Jesus then and there. The secluded place in which he labors allows him comparative freedom of action. He preaches Jesus: all his parishioners have the New Testament; the children learn more of Christ than of ceremonies, and confessions are stopped short; and belief in the full satisfaction wrought by the Lord Jesus is substituted for penance.

The Baltimore Methodist says: The revival at Mount Lebanon Independant Methodist Church, which commenced at the watch meeting, has resulted in the conversion of about forty persons—all of whom are adults, and many of them heads of families. The pastor, Rev. H. E. Johnson, reports the Church in a flourishing condition—both the congregation and the Sabbath-school greatly enlarged. Such prosperity is the best evidence of God's blessing on the work.

THE New York Christian Advocate says: Revs. J. W. Hamilton, of Boston, and T. L. Flood, of Jamestown, were at our Book room last week, perfecting arrangements for the publication of their Lives of the Bishops. The work, which has been several months in preparation, will be issued from the press during the ensuring autumn.

THERE is a gracious revival now in progress in our Church at Kansas City, under charge of the Rev. Mr. Bourland. Many are seeking Christ.

CUT IT SHORT."—People nowdays must pack all they have got to say in as small a space as possible, or they will fail of having an audience. This is the rule in private as well in public. Mr. Greville, in his Memoirs, tells us about a bishop who rose to speak in the House of Lords, and announced that he should divide what he had to say into twelve parts, when the duke of Wharton interrupted him and begged indulgence for a few minutes, as he had a story to tell which he could only introduce at that moment. A drunken fellow was passing by St. Paul's at night, and heard the clock slowly chime twelve. He counted the strokes; and then looked up to the clock and said, "Why couldn't you give us all that at once?" The story put an end to the bishop's speech.

THE BLUE RIDGE BLADE.—A Blade, new, bright and sharp, has been opened in Morganton, and our esteemed friend, W. F. Avery, Esq., holds the handle.—He knows how to sharpen and how to use a journalistic blade, now making a clean gash through some political foe, now thrusting sharply at a social folly, and at another time, and with as much ease, smoothing the temper of lord or lady with gentle and unctuous stroke. It is an edge tool, but in his hands it is safe. We wish him well with it and trust that it may prove not only a well tempered, offensive and defensive weapon, but that in time of peace he may whittle to his heart's content. We always look anxiously for his chips and shavings.

A SAD AND FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Sunday evening, a week ago, the family occupying a part of the Smith house, near Person St. Church, went to church leaving Virginia Smith, a girl 13 years of age, in charge of one of the rooms. She went to sleep, lying upon the floor near the fire, and when she awoke her clothing was discovered to be on fire. She screamed and ran into the street and back to the house. Mr. Julius Taylor, who also occupies a part of the house, caught and threw a quilt or blanket around her, thus quenching the flames, but the poor girl was so badly burned that she died the following day. Mr. Taylor's hands were badly burned in the attempt to rescue her.

RALEIGH HIGH SCHOOL.—Maj. Scott, one of the principals of this excellent school, paraded his corps of scholars on the streets of Raleigh on the 22d February. The military uniform worn by the boys is tasty and becoming and the corps made an excellent appearance. They exhibited marked proficiency in drill and the manual of arms. We are glad to learn that the school is doing well under the wise management and excellent instruction of Messrs Atkinson and Scott.

DEATH OF HON. ABRAM W. VENABLE.—This aged and honorable son of North Carolina, breathed his last at Oxford, on the 19th ult. For several years he had been in feeble health, and lately his decline had been very rapid. He has occupied a prominent place in the political history of the State, for the last half century, and was always regarded as a of man unimpeachable public and private virtue.

Everybody should be careful to give prompt attention and rational treatment to a severe Cold—or a racking Cough—as these are commonly the chief primary symptoms of a disordered state of the Lungs, involving a tendency to develop into a settled Consumption. Persons of a delicate constitution, or those having weak or unsound Lungs, should be especially solicitous to treat the earliest symptoms of a Cold, in order to head off more dangerous complications; prudently keep by you therefore, Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, that you may administer at once a judicious curative, during the first stages of any Throat or Lung disorder, for not only are special symptoms of these complaints more tractable and easily controlled then, but the general strength and tone of the system has not had time to be seriously affected, and is therefore more amenable to the recuperative and healing properties of the Expectorant. A little attention to what may seem a trifling Cold, may save you from the fate of a lingering Consumptive.

The Struggles of Life.

From the cradle to the grave life is full of struggles. Some struggle for riches, some for place, some for honor, and others struggle to regain that great set of all blessings—health—and in their efforts they often resort to means which places it farther and farther out of their reach. They take drastic compounds which shock the system, or potent in means which poisonply degrees and on the vital energies are weakened and the very fountains of the political. Nature provides remedies for every disease, and it is on the vegetable kingdom that Dr. Tutt's Pills relieve their ingredients, and in our use there is the happy certainty that it may do good but they do no harm. But of their efficacy, in hundreds who have been carried to the verge of the grave with diseased liver kidneys spleen, stomach and bowels, lice to-day to testify.

Died, at Straits, Carteret co, N. C. Nov. the 9th 1875, Tomar F. Hancock, in the 56th year of his age.

Sister Hancock gave her heart to God early in life and joined the M. E. Church, South, in which she remained consistent member until she was translated to the church above.

Her suffering was severe, and long protracted, but her faith in our Lord Jesus was unshaken. A short time before she breathed her last, she said "I am going home, I am going home to glory," she seemed to stand where Moses stood, in full view of the Heavenly Canaan. She seemed anxious to go over and drink of the vivifying stream and join in the universal fruit.

Her pious life, and her triumphant death will be long remembered by many.

The world our sister is gone

To the green the triumph above;

Exalted to Jesus's throne,

And crowned in the arms of his love.

G W HARRISON.

Sister Sarah Hovis died at her residence Ar Dover, Saturday morning Jan 15th 1876.

The deceased departed christian woman not personally known but from what items we could gather from her the day previous to her death, I infer that she was 70 or more years. She was a member of the Methodist Church about 50 years

I have been informed by her associates, friends and friends, that she was a devoted christian, making herself of every opportunity of going to church until she became too feeble to attend the sanctuary.

During the latter part of her life she was deprived of her sight, but under all moments affliction she was never known to murmur, was patient and submissive, but she might appear trouble to her friends. She expressed a willingness to die, long before her change came saying that she would rather depart and be with Christ "I went to see her the day previous to her death, I found her wandering very much. I introduced myself to her and said, sister Hovis, how do you feel in reference to your future state?" said she, I am ready to die," and I it is the Lord's will I would rather depart." I had prayers with and for her after which she never to meet me again in this life. Saturday morning soon was heard upon by her nephew, Mr. Alex Rayne, to preach her funeral, which I did this morning in the Methodist Church, to a large congregation of attentive and serious hearers, from 90th Psalm, 5th verse. Her remains were then carried to the Presbyterian graveyard in Dallas, where they were deposited to sleep "in peace," we trust until the resurrection morn when she can triumphantly take her crown, and wear it until the last one. Earth pleasures, no heaven is nearer.

Adieu, adieu, to the years of our pilgrimage

Adieu

A few weeks months and seasons toll silently by.

Our days are soon numbered, and death will soon overtake us.

Let us be always ready and then we'll bid them farewell.

Lake Sides died in Bladen, Co. N. C., near Elizabethtown, Nov. 29th 1875. He was 80 years and 11 days old and had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church 10 years. His life bears testimony that a good man has gone to his reward. Although unexpected till a few days before his departure, death had no terrors. He was calm and tranquil and met the dark hollows and expressed himself fully on his prospects of Heaven and a abiding faith in Jesus to sustain him. As a life, so in death, his religious experience was clear and satisfactory, and his last expression directed to his companion who still lingers on the shore, is a precious legacy to around the loved ones left behind. Calling his only living son a few moments before he died, he said with emphasis,—"I know I am dying, and am perfectly willing." Then turning to his wife, he exclaimed, triumphantly, "I am almost over." These were his words:

"Behold the waves of Jordan roll,

Death stands with open gate;

Yet I am not afraid to go,

For Christ has conquered fate."

Died on the 7th of Feb 1876 in Person county, N. C. was married to Richmond in the 30th year of her age. She was a sufferer for more than three years, struggling against and finally away by that fell disease, consumption. She was naturally of a frail feeble constitution, but always active, lively, cheerful. She leaves the broken hearted husband and deeply afflicted relatives and her numerous friends a legacy of a good example, a pure life and character. For some time before her departure, it was apparent to all, that she was to be called hence, never to meet us again in this life. Saturday morning soon was heard upon by her nephew, Mr. Alex Rayne, to preach her funeral, which I did this morning in the Methodist Church, to a large congregation of attentive and serious hearers, from 90th Psalm, 5th verse. Her remains were then carried to the Presbyterian graveyard in Dallas, where they were deposited to sleep "in peace," we trust until the resurrection morn when she can triumphantly take her crown, and wear it until the last one. CONSUMPTIVES, and sufferers from Throat and Lung diseases, Scrofula, Debility, etc., will find speedy relief in using BAKER'S COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATE OF LIME. It is decidedly pleasant in taste, and highly commended by physicians. The objectionable features in the Oil are removed. See that you get that prepared by Jno. C. Baker & Co., Philadelphia.

Rural and Domestic.

BONE AS MANURE.—The bones of all animal creation are composed of three substances: Phosphoric acid, lime and gelatic or glue—three of the best fertilizing substances to produce good seed. But where do the bones of animals come from? Certainly from the soil, through the grass, hay, grain &c., consumed as food. Therefore every horse, bullock, cow, sheep and hog sent off the farm without returning a like quantity of bone to the earth, causes our land to yield less and less every year, till the land becomes what is termed worn out. Besides, every load of hay and every bushel of grain sold off the farm carries away the same material, as it is the hay and grain that make the bones of our cattle, horses, etc.

Five per cent. of all plants are composed of ten mineral substances, of which bone forms a large part, and which comes directly from the earth, while the fat of animals is composed of carbon, oxygen, and hydrogen, three of the gases that plants take exclusively from the air, in the form of carbonic acid and water, and which constitute about 94 per cent. of all plants.

ABOUT BOILING POTATOES.—Potatoes form a staple article of diet in all homes. They require as careful cooking as anything does, to bring them to perfect eating condition, yet as a rule they are not carefully cook ed: indeed I may say they are very shabbily treated, and yet expected always to be good. They are generally put into hot water, and boiled until soft; and many housekeepers think this is all that is needful, or that can be done. If they are water-soaked, or rank to the taste, it is the fault of the potatoes, it is argued, when oftener the fault is in the cook.

To begin with, old potatoes, if wanted for breakfast, should be pared the night previous, and put to soak in cold water. In the morning they should be taken out and put into boiling water, plenty of it, and care must be had to see that the water is kept boiling, or begins boiling speedily again after they are put in. Salt may be put in the boiling water before the potatoes are put in, or any time afterward before the boiling is finished, but should not be omitted. When the potatoes are done the water should be carefully drained off, and they should be set on the back of the stove to dry.

This soaking in cold water is absolutely essential for old potatoes, and will not make them heavy, as some might suppose. If wanted for dinner they should be put to soak at least two hours before time to set aboiling.

I am aware that many cooks boil potatoes with the skins on; but this, I think, ought never to be done, unless the potatoes are actually new. I should never attempt it, any more than I would stew or steam apples with the skins on.—P. G. Fisk.

Bring out the Vital Energy.

There is generally, even in the most delicate constitution, a latent reserve of vital energy. The medical stimulant of all others best calculated to rouse this vis inertia is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The impulse which that inestimable preparation lends to the action of the various organs insures a more vigorous and consequently healthy discharge of their various functions, than they would be capable of without its aid, and the "slip to nature" thus communicated is never excessive, but always equable and regular. Just so much stimulation is imparted as is required, and no more. In raptures as is the speed of the healthful gentleness of their action, the Bitters are immeasurably superior to the enmedicated stimulants of commerce, which, though they produce a powerfully resuscitating effect for a few minutes, are invariably followed by a reaction, corresponding to depression to their primal effect. They excite so much at first that nature is wearied by the effort, and is apt to sink under the exhaustion. Physicians who have made the stimulative action of the Bitters the subject of experiment, declare their decided preference of them over any other similar article. An equally high opinion is entertained of their regulating qualities by medical men who are acquainted with their combe effects. They speedily rectify an irregular habit of the digestive disorders, and destroy constipation, biliary derangements of the liver, or irritation of the kidneys, which are the usual precursors of nervous affections are also greatly alleviated by Hostetter's Bitters. Rheumatic affections are also greatly alleviated by their blood depurifying and anti inflammatory action.

Dr. Sucess ful Physician.

There is probably no man to whom the community owes a greater debt of gratitude, than a skilful physician, who, each his actual duty to do to himself and to his patients, daily, skilfully, practically, and not as an experiment that their virtues need to be tested, and hence the only settlement of the reader's attention. We, therefore, may well claim the reader's attention. We, therefore, may well claim the reader's attention. We, therefore, may well claim

Selected Poetry.

From Tears to Pearls.

BY REV. FRANK W. LEWIS.

The following lines were suggested by a statement made by Hugh Miller in his autobiography, that the common pearl-bearing muscle, found at low water in the friths of Scotland, is much more apt to contain pearls when it lies in shallow fords, than when it reposes in calm, still depths. They say it is the irritance which forms the pearls.

Ye shells that lie so still, and sleep
In glassy pools, clear, calm and deep,
Whose waves the breading willows sweep,
And gently stir.

A fretful life is this you lead.
Like violets in some sheltered mead,
Sunshine and food is all you need,
And that is near.

But in your shells there hidden lie
No gems to stay the passer by,
And with their brightness charm his eye.
The scene we'll change:

The waves rush and hurry past,
O'er your shells, whose lot is cast
Mid scenes far different from the last.
More wild, more strange.

Ye here are tossed by every tide,
Tossed when they swell and when subside;
While rough waves often o'er you ride,
And wild winds sweep

Pressed down by every passing wheel,
Trod by each horses iron heel,
You daily pain and anguish feel.
And then you weep.

But see! God's providence hath planned,
Those tears should waste not on the sand,
But, fashioned by an unseen hand
Forms gems of light.

Then when to greet the rising tide,
Your rocky shells are opened wide
These pearls are seen within to bide,
And glitter bright.

By Nature here a use is writ,
That sorrowing one, your case may fit,
And nurse a glorious joy to flit
Athwart your view.

Young eyed by anguish oft and fear,
Though the God wipe your eyes with many a tear,
And in each year's [illegible] from year to year
With softest's dew;

Yet comfort take; and your heart
[illegible] have gained a part
Of Glory pearls, by heavenly art
Your tears they'll burn.

Then, when at last from sorrow's night,
Your pathway leads to fields of light,
Upon your crown of glory bright
For ye they'll burn.

The Brown Towel.

'They must be very poor who have nothing to give,' said Mrs. Jarvis, as she deposited a pair of beautiful English blankets in a box that was being filled by the ladies of the church, to be sent to the poor.

'And now, ladies, as you are nearly through, I would like to tell you an incident in my history: I was once very poor.'

'You once very poor?' said a lady.

'Yes: I was once very poor. There came to our village a missionary to deliver a lecture. I felt very desirous to go, but having no decent apparel to wear, I was often deprived of going to church, although I was a member.

'I waited until it was late, and then slipped in and took a seat behind the door.

'I listened with streaming eyes to the missionary's account of the destitution and darkness in heathen lands. Poor as I was, I felt it to be a great privilege to live in a Christian land and to be able to read my Bible.

'It was proposed by our pastor that the congregation should fill a box and send it out with the missionary on his return.

'Oh! thought I, how I would like to send something. When I returned home my poor children were still sleeping soundly, and my disconsolate husband waiting my return, for he had been out of employment for some time. After he had gone to bed I went to looking over my clothes, but I could find nothing that was suitable that I could possibly spare; then I began looking over the children's things, but could find nothing that the poor dears could be deprived of; so I went to bed with a heavy heart, and lay a long time thinking of the destitution of the poor heathen, and how much better off I was.

'I got to thinking over my little stock again. There was nothing I could put into the box except the two brown towels.

'Next day I got my towels, pieced out the best one, and when it was almost dark, put on my bonnet, went to the church, slipped my towels into the box and came away thinking that the Lord knew I had done what I could.

'And now, ladies, let me tell you, it was nothing after that till my husband got into a good situation; and prosperity has followed us ever since. No, I take back my prosperity to this pocket out of the brown towel.

'The story was done, and, as her carriage was waiting at the door, she took her departure, leaving us all made with surprise that one so rich and powerful as she had been trained to give and go.—Christian Woman.

Victory Over Trials.

Religion is worth a good deal more than philosophy. God forbid that I should despise the latter. It has been the habit of my life to sit in the school of philosphy, and to learn all that she could teach. I admire the principle which she inculcates—the best that she has—when she strengthens a man's will to bear up against the inevitable; when with her voice of wisdom, she shows how foolish it is to sit down complaining of trials which I admire the greatness of the resolution which shall gird itself to the discharge of all the high duties which devolve upon us in life, and shall patiently endure all that man is called upon to suffer here below. But, at the very best, all that philosophy can do is simply to teach us to endure. Christianity enables us to triumph! "Glory in tribulation!" Where is the philosophy that ever said anything in comparison with this? Bring before you all the schools; bring them from out of the Academy, bring them from the Porch, let it be Epicurean, or Platonic, or Aristotelian: where is the master that ever taught the soul to say, when it was quivering in its anguish, "I glory in tribulation: knowing that tribulation worketh patience: and patience and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed: because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Romans v. 3 5.)

As for myself, I am ambitious to be a conqueror. I desire to walk this earth with the firm tread of a man who feels that he is superior to it—superior to its pleasures, superior to its pains, superior to its gentiles to its superior to its judgments superior accusations. Where I plant my foot on this globe, I desire to feel that I am its master. When I go through the gateway of death, may it be with the step of one who knows he triumphs; who is able to say, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." When I walk the streets of the heavenly city, I wish to march with the elastic step, and with the erect stature of a bold mien, of one who feels that he is MORE THAN CONQUEROR through Him that loved him. It is the Gospel and the grace of God alone that make a man superior to himself, superior to the world, stronger than Satan and all his allies, and certain that he will tread him at last beneath his feet. Philosophy is worth what it is. Let it have all the applause it deserves. But let us bring the triumphs of philosophy and lay them upon the altar of the Gospel, and bless God that He gives us a grace which is superior to all the principles of human wisdom.

In the second place, let us make the most of our trials. They may be severe; but in this severity, they may be the particular form in which it pleases our Father that we shall give our testimony. In that case our sorrow is our glory. There is many a bed ridden saint, who for years has been tossing upon the couch of weariness and of pain, and experiencing a thousand martyrdoms. He is a witness for the grace of God. He is, as truly as Daniel in the lion's den, a prophet for God. He is, as truly as the three children in the flames of the furnace, a witness for God. Oh! it is a crown, brother, for you, not of shame nor of dishonor, in if the patient endurance of affliction and reproach, you are able to turn to God and feel that he will at last make you MORE THAN CONQUERON through Him that loved you. Do not be afraid, in the utmost severity of God's discipline that He will pass the bound of a just measure. The human heart is like a harp, and all these affections are but the chords of that harp; and the only being who knows skillfully to play upon that harp, is He that made it. If He, the Master of the song, turns the screw, and strains the chord even until it threatens to snap, do not fear! "The man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," who went down into the bowels of the curse for our redemption—He is the musician whose hands are upon the chords and keys of this mysterious instrument. He will turn those screws, and stretch those chords to the point when they should crack and part. But no, He only brings them to the right tension; so that when His blessed finger shall sweep across the strings, each shall give its proper note—and all shall blend in eternal harmony of praise unto "HIM THAT LOVED US."—Dr. Palmer's Discourses.

The cause of the sleep of flowers forms the subject of an article by M. Ch. Boyer, in a late number of the Journal de la Societe Centrale Horticulture de France. The writer advances the idea that the expansion of flowers in the morning is due to a swelling of the cellular tissue, which is occasioned by heat. After the disappearance of the swelling by evaporation the flowers close again. This, in M Boyer's opinion, accounts for the early closing of flowers under a high temperature or in dry soils.

Genteel Work

A prodigious amount of laziness, false pride, and greed, are concealed under this phrase. Many thousand hands are to-day idle, waiting for something to do. And in spite of commercial depression, the country has work enough for a million of hands. The farmers are calling for help; the trades are deficient in first class workmen; our kitchens are poorly supplied with domestic service: and yet the market place is full of the unemployed.

If a merchant advertises for a bookkeeper, a hundred competent persons step forward at once. If an author seeks for an amanuensis, he must choose between as many eager applicants. Every government officer who controls the appointment of clerks, has more names on his list than there are details in a month's work. The demand is for something that will not soil the hands, that will not start perspiration, that will secure a livelihood without involving much exertion. Genuine hard work is regarded as only semi-respectable. Men do not seek work, they look for a "situation," in which they may avoid work. They do their best to maintain the appearance of enjoying elegant leisure. But if an absolute sinecure cannot be found, they endeavor to give their employments an air of dignity, of repose, of freedom from homely fatigues. In a word, they seek a "light" business.

This false standard of respectability indicated by the word genteel, degrades manhood. Young men are ashamed of that which should be their glory. It is not he who does the least for the most money, who can wear the best clothes while at his daily avocation, whose business involves the least display of strenuous effort, it is not he that is to be the most respected. The salary without real labor is a disgrace. Partial idleness, however concealed under a show of business, is a misfortune, and if purposely indulged in a shame not to be countenanced. Clean hands that will not engage in genuine labor, are already covered with a stain that water will not wash out. The refinement that draws back from manual employment and prefers mental dawdling is a shame, and should not have social recognition. Better be a grimy blacksmith, doing thorough work, than a titled officer enjoying a large income as a return for nominal services. Better be a day laborer than a pensioned loafer. Better be earning a comfortable livelihood by the sweat of one's face on a farm, or in the kitchen, than depending on the uncertainties of the desk-work in an overcrowded city. Better be a simple carpenter than a hair-splitting scribe or pharisee.

We wish this evil spirit of "genteel" laziness might be exorcised, driven out of common conversation, expelled from popular thought, and cast down from its shameful throne of power. Its sway is anti-Christian, and its cry is the old one.—What have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth! There is not a "genteel" idler in the land who does not wish to be let alone. They ought to be stirred up.—Working Church.

DISCRIMINATIVE PREACHING.—A young minister had gone to a prosperous church in a certain town to preach his first sermon. Before leaving the house the gentleman who was entertaining him suggested to him not to preach against Universalists. "There are," said he, "several Universalist families who have pews in our church, and we don't want them offended." The young minister promised. At the church vestibule one of the deacons drew him aside and said: "Do you see those gentleman just passing in? They are Spiritualists, but come here to church occasionally. I wish you would be a little careful not to say anything that might hurt their feeling." The minister promised. As he was ascending the pulpit steps one of the elders buttonholed him for a moment to whisper an additional caution: "The leading liquor dealer has just come into church, and he gives us a lift sometimes. I wish you would be particular not to allude to the whiskey business or the temperance question." The young minister, getting fairly frightened to see the moral ground thus steadily narrowing before him, inquired: "Pray, who or what shall I preach against, then?" The elder's reply came with an air of triumph: "Preach against the Jews; they haven't got a friend in town." If preaching is the art of not hurting anybody, that certainly would have been an effective direction. But if, on the other hand, it means the application of truth to mind and conscience, then that is the most effective which lays the arrow on the string for present effect, which aims at the sins and sorrows that are straight before it, and which determines the effectiveness of the aim by the fluttering of the birds.

The Influence of Reading

If I were to pray for a taste that would stand me in stead under every variety of circumstances, and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to me through life, and a shield against its ills, however things might go amiss and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading. I speak of it, of course, only as a worldly advantage, and not in the slightest degree as superseding or detracting from the pledge, office and anger and ple; but as a taste, an instrument, and as a source of pleasurable gratification. Give a man this taste and the means of gratifying it, and you can hardly fail of making him a happy man, unless indeed you put into his hands a most perverse selection of books. You place him in contact with the best society in every period of history, with the wisest, with the tenderest, the bravest, and the purest characters that have adorned humanity. You make him a denizen of all nations, a contemporary of all ages. It is hardly possible but the character should take a much higher and a much better tone from the constant habit of associating in thought with a class of thinkers, to say the least of it, above the average humanity. It is morally impossible but that the manners should take a tinge of good breeding and civilisation from having constantly before one's eyes the way in which best informed and the best bred men have talked and conducted themselves in their intercourse with each other. There is a gentle but perfectly irresistible coercion in the habit of reading, well directed over the whole tenor of a man's character and conduct, which is not effectual because it works insensibly, and because it is really the last thing he dreams of.—Sir John Herschell.

The Bright Forever.

O, the sweet, the bright Forever!
Let my mind upon it dwell;
Let it, like rainbow circles—
Dream the joys it cannot tell.
O, the unfettered freedom
By the angels of the eternal deep,
O, light eternal beaming
On the eyes that never weep.

O, the sweet, the bright Forever!
With its music laden breeze,
Wafted thro' the vales celestial,
Kissing all the holy trees
O, the light of ever beaming;
From those sinless, happy eyes!
And the soft angelic pinions
Rustling thro' the radiant skies.

O, the sweet, the bright Forever!
With its harps and crowns of gold,
With its gilded pathways shrieking
Where new glories still unfold,
Whith angelic forms and voices,
Thro' the gemmed and starry plains,
Music, rapture, radiance, glory,
Filling all the holy places.

O the sweet, the bright Forever!
Everywhere is written Love
Not a thought, or wish, or footstep
From the bright domain can rove,
Onward ever to new glories,
Things grander and eternal,
Upward, onward, ever onward
To joy and bliss supernal

O, the sweet, the bright Forever!
Let our minds upon it dwell,
Angel spirits we would whisper
To our earthly home, farewell,
We are striving, we are waiting,
When 'tis finished hear us over
To the music, radiance, glory,
Of the bright Forevermore!

Watching for Souls.

A young lady called to see a friend who was ill, and on leaving, one of the children, a sweet, intelligent little girl, took her down stairs. She was her own especial favorite and pet, and yet, being naturally of an extremely reserved disposition, she had never spoken one word to her on the subject of religion. Looking down into the thoughtful, loving eyes, under a sudden impulse, she asked the question, "Maud, my darling, do you love Jesus?" To her astonishment the child stopped abruptly, and drawing her into a room which they were passing, she shut the door, and clinging closely to her, burst a into flood of tears. Looking up at last with a glad, happy face, she said, "Miss Alice, I have been praying for six months that you would speak to me of Jesus, and now you have! Every time I have been to your house, I hoped you would say something, and I was beginning to think you never would." It was a keen reproach to her friend, and one that she never forgot. Little Maud is now an earnest young soldier in Christ's army. No one who knows her, doubts the reality of her religion, and certainly it gives her character an attractive grace which nothing else could give.

Fifty acres a day is the rate at which J. B. McKee, of Gonzales, Cal., puts in his wheat. He sows wheat on 4,500 acres of land, ploughing it under and getting it done in time to get the benefit of the fall rains.

Living the Truth.

The one truth you live is worth a great deal more than the twenty truths you only profess to believe. Fidelity to objective truth has its uses; but nothing can take the place of the lived truth, the experienced verity, the soul-transforming word of God. You are ready to kill other people for infidelity to the truth; are you willing to die a little in your personal self will for any truth of Jesus? You can see the lurking atheism in yourself the lurking hostility to God's Peace? No creeds, no public professions, no solemn rites, are anything to you without the clean heart and the pure spirit, except they be helps to these actual fruits of religion. If they are ends, wo to you; for you have mistaken the altar for the sacrifice, and the confession of sin for true faith in Jesus.

Live the truth. Begin to-morrow with something you understand, with the near and demonstrable facts of religion, and live them. For instance You believe in the power of prayer. Pray, then. You tell us it can perform wonders. Show us these wonders in your own life. Get close to the throne, live there and that life will shine through you. You attach much importance to right faith. So do we; but the best kind of faith is that which comes ont of a man in words seasoned with grace, in deeds clothed in righteousness. The blessed end of right believing is right living; do not be satisfied when a man can say his catechism without falter ing; lead him on to live his catechism without stumbling. And do not disparage any more such choice fruits as common honesty, truth-telling, and good neighborhood. They are all truths of life that are worth everything as proofs that the kingdom of God is indeed among men.—N. Y. Methodist.

The Debt to Mother.

Mothers live for their children, make self-sacrifices for them, and manifest their tenderness and love so freely that the name Mother, is the sweetest in human language. And yet sons, youthful and aged, know but little of this anxiety, the nights of sleepless and painful solicitude which their mothers have spent over their thoughtless waywardness. Those loving hearts go down to their graves with those hours of secret agony untold. As the mother watches by or prays in the privacy of her closet, she weighs well the worlds which she will address to her son in order to lead him to a manhood of honor and usefulness. She will not tell him all her griefs and deadly fears which bests her soul. She warns him with trembling, least she should say overmuch. She tries to charm him with cheery love while her heart is bleeding. No worthy and successful man ever yet knew the breadth and depth of the great obligation which he is under to the mother who guided his heedless steps at the time when his character for virtue and puity was so narrowly ballanced against a course of vice and ignominy. Let the dutiful son do his utmost to smooth his mother's pathway, let him obey as implicitly as he can her wishes and advice, let him omit nothing that will contribute to her peace, rest, and happiness, and yet he will part from her at the tomb with his debt to her not half discharged.

Scientific.

The committee appointed by the British Association "for the purpose of investigating the underground waters in the new red sandstone and the permian formations of England, and the quality and character of the water supplied to various towns and districts from these formations," have issued as a circular an abstract of their preliminary report. They state that they hope next year to report on the water bearing properties of the whole of the English new red and permian formations, on the nature and chemical characters of the waters obtained, and on the effects of these waters on the sanitary condition of the people using them.

Prof. R. E. Rogers, at the meeting of the American Academy of Sciences held during the present month in Philadelphia, presented a very interesting paper on the "Temperature of the Comstock Lode Mines." In the deeper drifts the heat is almost intolerable, being frequently as high as 150 degrees. Life is supported by pouring ice-water on the head. The water which trickles from the rocky roof is so hot as to be almost scalding, and the workmen are protected by sheet iron screens. This heat is due to the decomposition of sulphides. There is trace of salines in the rock, and the contact of the sulphide of silver with the chloride of sodium produces, by chemical action, the higher temperature.

Dangerous Literature.

Better place a serpent in the hands of your children, or on your centertable, than the light, popular reading of the day. A serpent or stinging adder is far less dangerous. Its demoralizing tendency is positive and wide spread. The brains of authors and writers are taxed to their utmost to write and rewrite tales of the most extravagant and startling description, to meet the popular taste. Cross eyed and feverish visions are invoked. Ling beverage is called into play, to furnish sensation stories and tragic tales of love, seduction, desertion, suicide, and death—murders, elopements, assignations, and crimes of damning line—all written in order to sell the sheet and to "sell" the purchaser. The tale written, immense placards decorate the walls of the city, illustrated with pictures of assassinations, or desperate leaps from mountain cliffs, or midnight plunges into the sea, while the pale moon looks down upon the saddening spectacles. And the eye and heart of the young, as they pass along the streets, are educated into familiarity with the base and sensual passions of the vicious, and the abandoned and the lost.—The reading of these exciting and "thrilling" tales follows, and a serpent-snare is wound around the heart, and looses not its hold until thousands are swept into the damning pool, whence so few return to the atmosphere of purity or of hope. It is the duty of every Christian father and mother, who wish to keep their children unspotted from the filth of the world, to exert a positive influence against this class of pernicious literature.

Lifting Effects of Earthquakes.

Another feature of these phenomena is the upheaval of the ground observed during the prevalence of most earthquakes, which is one cause of the sea retiring, another being the suction of the approaching wave when the center of convulsion has been removed from the shore. During the great earthquake at Lisbon the bar at the mouth of the Tagus was laid bare by the upheaval, and the master of a vessel, lying in the river at the time, stated that his large anchor was thrown up from the bottom, and seemed to swim on the surface of the water. Other results of the upward movement during this catastrophe were observed elsewhere. The water in a pond at Dunstal, in Suffolk, was jerked up into the form of a pyramid. At some places the water was tossed out of the wells. At Loch Lomond a large stone was forced out of the water. Rocks were raised into the water from the bottom of the Atlantic, and on board a vessel, about forty leagues of St. Vincent, in the West Indies, the anchors, which were lashed, bunched up and the sailors thrown a foot and a half perpendicularly from the deck, the ship sinking into the water immediately afterward as low as the machines. At Riobamba, in South America, on the fifth of January, 1797, the bodies of many of the inhabitants were thrown, by this vertical action, upon the hill of La Cullca, which is several hundred feet high, and on the opposite side of the river. During some of these convulsions in Italy paving stones have been tossed into the air and found with their lower sides uppermost; and at the time of a late convulsion in South America the rising of the ground caused the sea to retire, which returned like a wall in appearance, carrying before it inland vessels that had only a few minutes before been left dry, towns and people being overwhelmed by the resistless recoil.—Professor Locke, in Popular Science Monthly.

LORD BACON ON STUDY.—Crafty men condemn studies; simple men admire them; and wise men use them, for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute; nor to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attection. Reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man and writing an exact man. And, therefore if a man write little, he need have a great memory; if he confer little, he need have a present wit; and if he read little, he need have much cunning to know that which he doth not.

"Pa, are you in favor of the Bible in public schools?" asked a youngster the other morning. "Why, of course I am." responded the father, pleased that such an important subject should engage the attention of his youthful offspring. "What makes you ask such a question, my son?" "Oh! nothing, rejoined young hopeful, "only I thought may be you wasn't, as you never have had one at home."

Systematic Giving.

The best plan will not run itself.—Ministers and people must see that the plan chosen is worked efficiently. No plan will make up for lack of consecration, faith and prayer. Try Sabbath offerings in the house of God as an act of worship. It reaches everybody. It comes as you can pay—often. It mingles giving with your prayers. Make your offerings as in the treasury of the Lord.

Let each member of the congregation large as may be, to be given each Sabbath, and solemnly agree to increase it, if possible. If absent on the Sabbath, make the amount good the very first Sabbath you are there. Let the pastor set apart a few moments of the morning service for this specified act. Make it worshipful. Offer a consecrated prayer of two or three minutes—it wonderfully sweetens and stimulates this act of worship and service, indeed, seems quite indispensable—then pass the plates. Don't be squeamish about this. Such, substantially, is the plan adopted by the First Presbyterian church of Cleveland, and several others in the vicinity. The Second church takes pledges at the beginning of the year, places boxes in the pews to receive offerings in numbered envelopes, and keeps accounts with subscribers. With them the plan works well. Some put boxes in the slips, take no pledges, offer no special prayer, but leave the boxes to appeal and collect. They always fail. They have no soul. The worship is always left out. Adopt the plan that best fits you, only let it be weekly and with prayer, that alms and prayer may come up together before God. Be sure to get information before the people. Hear missionaries and secretaries, if you can. Study up the work of the Church and make it glow before your people.

Godless Choirs.

Mr. Sankey bit a truth squarely on the head when he recently uttered the conviction that fully four fifths of the traditionary trouble with choirs arises from committing the musical branch of the service to a choir most, if not all, of whom are unconverted people. We certainly know no more disgraceful feature in connection with our churches and church music than the indecent scramble to get a good quartette choir, i. e., those who can sing well, having little or no regard to their moral character. We know of some instances where habitual drinkers and avowed infidels are employed to conduct the sacred service of song, by churches who would be scandalized at the slightest reflection upon the orthodoxy of their minister or the social standing of the church generally. It is this trifling with one of the most solemn services of the church which has brought quartette and other choirs as well into disrepute. When the purity of a minister's character is so much as doubted, a prompt investigation follows. But our churches of all denominations employ in their choirs those who not only have no religious character but who are known to lead immoral and offensive lives. It is about time churches took hold of this question and settled it in the interests of true religion and a common decency as well.—Christian at Work.

It is said of Norbury that he would at any time rather lose a friend than a joke. On one occasion he began the sentence of death in this wise: "Prisoner at the bar, you have been found guilty by a jury of your own countrymen of the crime laid to your charge, and I must say I entirely agree with the verdict, for I see 'scoundrel' written in your face." Here the prisoner interrupted with "That's a strong reflection—from your Lordship!" whereupon the judge, keenly appreciating the joke, commuted the sentence into transportation for seven years.

"How is it," said Bishop Wilberforce to one of his Roman Catholic servant-girls, "that you can feel so kindly toward me when you believe that I shall certainly be lost?" "Oh! no," said she. "But how can I be saved," said the bishop, "when your church teaches that there is no salvation out of its pale?" "You will be saved through your hinvincible higonrance," was the reply.

CHEAP POULTRY YARD.—Set posts firmly in the ground, six feet high and eight feet apart. Take No. 9 wire and stretch it from post to post ontside, fastening with staples made of wire driven into posts. Take common laths and weave in, leaving taree inches space between the sides of each. This makes the fence four feet high. Then take other laths, pic[illegible] one end, chamfer the other like a [illegible] blade and interweave among the top of the top wires; then shove the chamfered edge down beside the top of the bottom lath, lapping under wire two inches. This makes a cheap, durable and pretty fence, ssven feet and ten inches high, and is fowl tight. The wires should be left somewhat slack, as interweaving the laths will make it up.—Poultry World.

Rural and Domestic.

Household Helps.

Toothache of the most excruciating sort may be relieved by alum and salt, pulverized mixed in equal quantities, and applied to the hollow tooth in a plug of cotton.

When color on a fabric has been destroyed by acid, ammonia ie applied to neutralize the acid, after which an application of chloroform will, in almost all cases, restore the original

New linen may be embroidered more easily by rubbing it over with a fine white soap. It prevents the threads from cracking.

A screen or blower of wire gauze, from thirty six to forty wires to the inch, placed in front of range or stove fires, will prevent, it is said, smoke coming into the room when the chimney fails to draw well.

To take mildew from linen mix soft soap with starch powdered, half the quantity of salt and a piece of lemon, and lay it on both sides with a paint-brush; let it be in the open air—on grass is perferable—till the strain is removed.

Another method is to use chloride of lime. Dip the mildewed article in the lime-water and dry quickly in the sun. This process may be used without rotting the cloth or destroying delicate colors.

Yellow stains, commonly called iron mould, are removed from linen by hydrocholric acid or hot solution of oxalic acid. Wash well in warm water afterward.

A small piece of paper or linen, moistened with the spirits of turpentine and put into a bureau or wardrobe for a single day, two or three times, is said to be a sufficient preservative against moths.

For bad breath here is a recipe; Three hours before breakfast take a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Chlorate of potassa, two drachms, sweetened water, four ounces. Wash the mouth occasionly with the same mixture, and the breath will be as sweet as an infant's of two months.

In washing windows, a narrow-bladed wooden knife, sharply pointed will take out the dust that hardens in the corners of the sash. Dry whiting will polish the glass, which should first be washed with weak black tea mixed with a little alcohol. Save the tea leaves for that purpose.

Plants are not unhealthful in sleeping apartments or sitting-rooms. Of course, if the flowers exhale a strong perfume—such as that of tuberoses, hyacinth, and daphnes—they make the air too odorous to be desirable at night: but healthy, growing plants absorb the carbonic acid in the atmosphere, and keep it pure and agreeable. They are, in fact, the best disinfectants that can be employed.

To make artificial coral, take two drachms of vermillion, one ounce of resin, and melt them together. Have ready the branches of twigs, peeled and dried, and paint them over with this mixture while hot. The twigs being covered, hold them over a gentle fire, turning them around until they are perfectly smooth. White coral may be made with white lead, and black with lampblack.

Grease or paint spots in clothes are easily removed by oil of turpentine, or a hot iron pressed on the place over coarse brown paper, after scraping all that can be got off with a blunt knife. Stains may be removed from light colored clothes, such as drabs, buffs, or whites, with fuller's earth; but this is apt to take the color out of dark clothes. It should be dissolved in a little boiling water, put on the spot when hot, held to the fire to dry, and then brushed out. Pitch is removed, first by rubbing the place over with grease or oil, and then taking out the oil by the application of spirits of turpentino.

HOW MUCH IS A HORSE POWER.—"A Young Farmer" inquires of the New York Herald, "How much is a horse power?"

Reply.—This question is frequently asked: What is understood by a horse power, and why that way of reckoning came to be adopted and brought into general use? Before the power of steam was generally known and applied to mechanical purposes, horses were used to raise coal and other heavy bodies. Mr. Mocte, in his experiments, carefully compared the relative power of the different breeds of horses, and found its average equal to raising 33,000 pounds one foot per minute or, what is equivalent, to raise 330 pounds 100 feet, or 100 pounds 330 feet during that space of time, when attached to a lever or sweep of a given lenght. This afterward became the standard of measuring power or force applied to mechanical purposes, and which is still retained in common use.

Uncivilized.

It is a painful fact that a very large per cent of the people in so called Christian countries are not in the proper sense christianized. This is a sad state of affairs to acknowledge after nearly nineteen hundred years have elapsed since the advent of Christ It is not owing to any want of efficiency or adaptation in Christianity itself to improve humanity.—There is no true civilization that is not traceable to the influence of our holy religion, and there is not a citizen who has attained to a position of usefulness and distinction in society who is not largely indebted to the gracious influences of Christianity.—The difficulty is not found in the Christian system, but in the rejection of that system as it is offered in the gospel of Christ. We, however, confidently believe that Christianity, the great civilizer, has a more controlling influence on the world than it ever has had at any previous period. Under a republican form of government, we are working at the grand experiment of civilization, and in many respects we have made great progress, but our success has fallen far short of what might have been realized. Different causes have operated adversely, among which, perhaps, intemperance has been the strongest. Upon the evils of intemperance we wrote in our last, and the magnitude of this growing evil justifies us in recurring to the subject again.

As the civilization of a people is to be measured by the degree of true manhood developed, whatever tends to degrade man most is the greatest obstacle in the way of realizing the desired result. Drunkenness is an evil that speedily degrades the whole man, his body, mind and conscience. This wholesale work to human nature that has been going on ever since we became a people, can scarcely be over estimated. Its manifestation among public men is only a reflection of it as it exists among the people who support them for office. The political corruption and social immorality that exist are traceable in a large degree to the great evil of intemperance. The multitudes of liquor manufacturers and sellers, together with those who patronize and countenance them, are so many enemies of civilization in this country. It all tends to barbarism. There may be apparent prosperity and improvement while men are being degraded and brutalized. So it was in certain nations that once existed and boasted of high civilization, but at last fell by their own corruption.—It is said of an ancient philosopher who went about in open day with a lantern in his hand as if intently searching for something, that when the question was asked, "what are you looking after, replied, "I am trying to find a man." Surrounded as he was by a multitude of human beings, who boasted of their national superiority, he nevertheless had difficulty to find even one possessing true manly character.

Human degradation, though found amidst great material prosperity, will most assuredly bear its legitimate fruit It was Oliver Goldsmith, we believe, who said:

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and MEN DECAY."

The great need of this country is men with sound minds and good hearts in sound bodies. Without such our best form of civilization is only a farce and name without reality, and must end in failure. The character of a nation is what that of the individuals is, that compose it. The slaves of degraded appetites are not prepared to govern themselves as American patriots, much less to make laws for the government of others.—The question then for calm decision is, can we hope for the highest state of civilization in this or any country, so long as drunkards are promoted to places of trust and responsibility? We unhesitatingly answer no! If all the true friends of our common Lord and humanity would arise as one great party, Zion's party so to speak, and determine to vote for no man of intemperate habits or who did not sustain a good moral character, very many of the sore evils which threaten the highest interests of society would be overcome. From many years of close observation, we are persuaded that a great sin lies at the door of the Church in voting for men to fill offices of high trust and to make laws for the government of christian people, who are habitual drunkards, and who are destitute of the restraining influence of the Christian religion.

A National Disgrace.

There have been, since the close of the war, many developments of corruption and malfeasance on the part of those holding positions of high public trust in our Federal government. Offices have been prostituted to the building up of private fortunes, and the influence and power of place bartered for money and houses, horses and lands. Gold has bought legislation, lobbyists have directed ballots, gifts have procured lucrative stations, courts have been degraded and become engines worked by designing and avaricious men. Bribes, open and sordid, have been offered and accepted and in high and low offices, with chiefs and subordinates, the trusts which were confided to their keeping, have been opened and robbed by golden keys. For the past few years, revelations of frauds and unseemly conduct on the part of high officials, have been so frequent and revolting that the cheeks of Americans may well burn with shame when they reflect upon the appearance our Republic makes among the nations of the world.

The latest scandal which is on the tongues of our own people and other nations, is the revelation of the bribery and corruption of Mr. Belknap, Secretary of War of the United States. The public was totally unprepared for the disclosures. No accusations had been made against him that had reached the public and no suspicions aroused The report, therefore, of the House Committee on Expenditures, which made known Belknap's disgrace, and demanded his impeachment, was sudden and astounding.

The facts are, briefly, as follows: Post traderships in the West are lucrative and are controlled by the Secretary of War. For one of these, Caleb P. Marsh of New-York City has stated to the House Committee on Expenditures of the War Department that he had paid $20,000 to Secretary Belknap in different sums. A post-trader named John S. Evans was to be discharged to make room for Marsh, but Evans contracted to pay $12,000 a year (afterward reduced to $6,000) to Marsh to be allowed to keep the place. He paid $40,000 to Mr. Marsh under this contract, of which the latter paid half to Mr. Belknap. Mr. Belknap was summoned before the Committee last Wednesday, and confessed to the charges. On Thursday, he resigned. President Grant accepted the resignation at once, and placed Secretary Robeson in charge. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Clymer presented resolutions of impeachment, with the full testimony of Mr. Marsh and various documents. There was some debate on the right to impeach under the circumstances; but the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The Cure for Gossip.

The following recipe for gossip is from the pen of J. G. Holland, who seems to understand the nature of the disease and practically applies the remedy. Gossipers are among the greatest pests with which any community can be afflicted, and they need the pity, counsel and prayers of all good people:

What is the cure for gossip? Simply, culture. There is a great deal of gossip that has no malignity in it Good-natured people talk about their neighbors, because, and only because, they have nothing else to talk about. As we write, there comes to us the picture of a family of young ladies. We have seen them at home, we have met them in galleries of art, we have caught glimpses of them going from a book store, or a library, with a fresh volume in their hands. When we meet them, they are full of what they have seen and read They are brimming with questions. One topic of conversation is dropped only to give place to another in which they are interested. We have left them after a delightful hour, stimulated and refreshed; and during the whole hour not a neighbor's garment was soiled by so much as a touch. They had something to talk about. They knew something and wanted to know more. They could listen as well as they talk. To speak freely of a neighbor's doings and belongings would have seemed an impertinence to them, and, of course, an impropriety. They had no temptation to gossip, because the doings of their neighbors formed a subject very much less interesting than those which grew out of their knowledge and their culture.

And this tells the whole story. The confirmed gossip is always either malicious or ignorant. The one variety needs a change of heart, and the other a change of pasture. Gossip is always a personal confession either of malice or imbecility, and the young should not only shun it, but by the most thorough culture remove themselves from all temptation to indulge in it. It is a low, frivolous and, too often, a dirty business. There are country neighborhoods in which it rages like a pest. Churches are split in pieces by it. Neighbors are made enemies by it for life. In many persons it degenerates into a chronic disease, which is practically incurable. Let the young cure it while they may.

It is with pleasure that we notice the steady growth and prosperity of Person Street Church, of this city, in all her interests. Rev. W. C. Norman, the pastor, is fully enlisted in his work, and by his excellent preaching, and faithfulness in pastoral work, he is attracting large congregations. He is greatly beloved by his people.

Starling Gunn.

A REVOLUTIONARY HERO.

MESSRS EDITORS: In attending a burial at the old Gunn family burying ground, I fell upon a centennial item, which I thought would be of interest to your readers. It was the inscription on the tomb-stone of the above named gentleman, and read somewhat as follows:

'Sacred to the memory of Starling Gunn, who fired the first gun at York, and who was an eye witness of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis. He was for more than forty years a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church—died in 1852 in the eighty ninth year of his age.'

I learned from his sons, Dr. Allen, and Mr. James Gunn, that his father came to America as a soldier under Braddock fell in love with the country and never returned. Such was his sense of honor and integrity that he always refused to take the oath of allegiance to the new government, because he had sworn to support the king, though he paid double tax willingly as long as he lived, and gave his son to the cause of liberty.

After the war ended, young Starling came to North Carolina from Virginia, and was among the first settlers of this section. The established church having gone down with that of King George, he joined the Methodist, and was a zealous member of the same the remainder of his life. He was a true friend of the preachers—his house was their home. He was noted for his integrity and honesty, and the poor ever found in him a kind benefactor. He reared a large family, one of whom married Ira Ellis, the son of Bishop Asbury's traveling companion

His descendants are numerous—are among our best citizens, and many of them remain to bless old Caswell and the M. E. Church, South.

Talk about our Church being made up of the lower stratum of society!—Humph!

Yours truly,
J. W. JENKINS.

Yanceyville, N. C. March 1, 1876.

The first quarterly meeting for Edenton Street Church was held on last Saturday and Sunday. Rev. J. P. Moore, the Presiding Elder, was present and conducted the services—His sermons were able and impressively delivered. In the afternoon the Sunday school connected with this church held their regular monthly meeting. The exercises were of a highly interesting character. The Superintendent, W. J. Young, and his assistant, are doing much to awaken a deep interest in the Sunday-school cause, and we are glad to know that the school is in a flourishing condition. Dr. Burkhead, the pastor, who looks carefully after all the interests of his charge, gives special attention to the Sunday school work.

Bro Shell writes from Newton Circuit (his new work), to the effect that the congregations are large and attentive and that there are indications of religious prosperity. One new church is in process of erection, another will soon be commenced. Bro. Shell starts out well in the canvass for the Advocate, sending new subscriptions and promising others. We bid him God speed in all good works!

From Shelby Circuit.

MESSRS EDITORS: Please say through the Advocate, that we have now in operation, on the Shelby Circuit, two flourishing Prayer Meetings—one at King's Mountain, the other at El Bethel Church.

Our Prayer Meetings are well attended: good order is observed, and the people show by their actions that they are interested.

Prayer, the most prominent element of Christianity, is the most neglected of all religious duties. Let our preachers, both Local and Itinerant, impress upon the minds of the people, the importance of prayer. We hope to be blessed with a glorious revival of religion, on the Shelby Circuit, before this year shall have closed. May the Church become more prayerful, and less worldly minded.

A Correction.

MESSRS EDITORS: Will you allow me to call attention, to an omission in our Conference Minutes? On page 12, it is stated that Wm. H. Watkins, passed the examination of character, was approved by the examining committee, and elected to deacon's orders; but on page 22, in the Bishop's report of "Traveling Deacons ordained" the name of Bro. Watkins, does not appear. Now as Bro. W. was ordained, it is but right that this correction should see the light.

Centennial at Home.

MESSRS EDITORS: I readily assent to the proposition made by "a minister" that Methodist clergymen throughout the Old North State deliver sermons on Sunday, the nineteenth of March, on the rise and progress of Methodism particularly in North Carolina. I hope the proposition will be generally accepted and carried out, as our people need instruction upon church history, and centennials being the order of the day those of our communion who are unable to go to the Raleigh celebration, can thus enter into the spirit of it at home.

Yours,
A LAYMAN.

LETTER FROM BISHOP PIERCE.

MY DEAR BRO. Your letter inviting me to your Centennial of N. C. Methodism, has been received.

Oh, that I could be with you! My time is filled up with other engagements. If I were to give you my schedule, you would see that I have no freedom to go here or there, but must stick to the line of things made ready for me.

Though absent, I shall rejoice with you. I love you all, and pray the divine benediction upon you.

I have great hopes of the future—am looking for a tidal wave of mercy and salvation to sweep over the earth soon. Let Methodism gird herself for fresh and more glorious conquests!

Your bro. in Christ.

LETTER FROM JUDGE BROOKS.

REV. L. S. BURKHEAD—My dear friend and Bro: Your letter of 26th inst. was duly received. I esteem it both kind and complimentary to be invited by you to take so prominent a part in your celebration.

I regret that a combination of circumstances (some of them misfortunes) will not allow me the pleasure of attending and complying with your request.

I have been a sufferer from dyspepsia for some years, some part of the time in its worst and most painful form. I have suffered much since I was last at Raleigh. In the early part of March I will be obliged to go from home for a short time—and then your Centennial comes off so shortly before I will be obliged to hold the spring District courts, it would interupt me too seriously in the business I am obliged to perform, to go to Raleigh at the time you indicate.

Be assured, my dear sir, that I would take great pleasure in attending and complying with your wish, if I could do so without very serious inconvenience.

I am, sir, yours truly and fraternally,
G. W. BROOKS.

Apportionments on Greensboro District.

At the Dirtrict Stewards' meeting held at Greensboro March 1st 1876, the following apportionments were made to the several charges in the district, of the "Bishops Fund," "Conference Fund," "Foreign Mission," and "Domestic Mission."

	Bishop's Fund.	Conference Fund.	Foreign Missions.	Domestic Missions
Greensboro Sta'n.	$15 50	$80 00	$50.00	15 00
South Guilford ct.	12 50	60 00	35 00	30 00
Thyatira & Pl'n	10 00	45 00	30 00	25 00
Davidson circuit	17 50	70 00	40 00	35 00
Randolph circuit.	12 50	60 00	35 00	35 00
Forsythe circuit	12 50	60 00	35 00	30 00
Thomasville station.	12 50	60 00	35 00	30 00
Trinity station.	7 50	30 00	20 00	15 00
Stokes circuit	10 00	45 00	30 00	20 00
Yadkin circuit	12 50	60 00	40 00	30 00
Madison circuit	12 50	60 00	40 00	30 00
Total amounts	$150.	$620.	$425.	$335.

If the preacher in charge of each circuit and station, and each official member, and all the private members who read the ADVOCATE, will cut this from the paper and paste it in their memorandum books, this point will be gained, namely, those who feel the most interests in the matter will have it before them and know what is needed Please do this much to begin with Then remember that these figures represent the smallest amount with which we can meet these several necessities, and let each charge see to it that not a dollar of its part is uncollected. To do this begin early in the year to collect, and be sure that every congregation is appealed to at a time favorable to success. If need be, call upon the friends one at a time till at least this sum is raised. Don't pass by those in our congregations who are not members of our church. This is a false timidity and hurts their feelings. They are generally willing to help us. But if they are not, they should be persuaded to become so, as many of them are enjoying, unconsciously it may be, the benefit of the past and present labors of the church for the common good of all.

In the department of missions especially, I have this to add: Some of the charges will raise much more than is assessed. In some of them the Sabbath School will pay the entire assessment In all the circuits and stations this might be done, if a little more care was given to each School, and a little more teaching and money given to the children for the promotion of that liberality with which every christian parent should desire to have his and her child trained. We should object to fixing a specific sum for missions upon any other idea than that upon which our Church bases our present assessments—a minimum sum for which she cries in her distress to do good! She calls for this as the very least that will do; but exhorts our whole people to look at the opening mission fields, hear the cry of the millions who have not the Gospel, and as christian men, women and children, to give prayerfully, cheerfully, liberally, as "God has prospered us," till those little boundaries of figures are all lost sight of, the Lord's treasury full, and the gospel preached to all.

CENTENNIAL NOTICE.

To the Ministers, Members and Friends of the M. E. Church South, in North Carolina: We expect a "grand gathering" at our Centennial Celebration in Raleigh. The exercises will begin Tuesday, March 21st, at 10 o'clock, A. M., in Metropolitan Hall, and will be continued until Sunday night, March 26th, 1876. Three of our honored Bishops will be present. Rev. Dr. Wadsworth of Mobile, Ala., and Rev Dr. Edwards, of Richmond Va., former pastors of Edenton Street Church, are expected to be with us, with many other distinguished ministers and laymen whose names are not in our programme. We expect to do all in our power to make the occasion a great blessing to the church and State. That we may not be disappointed, we beg you all to unite with us in humble, devout prayer to Almighty God for His benediction upon us.

Dear Brethren, please note the following points, viz: 1. We expect to entertain all the ministers of the State, who may attend, free of charge. Let all those, who expect to be here, notify me at once.

2. All our hotels and private boarding houses will entertain those who may come to the Celebration, at greatly reduced rates.

3. We expect all the R. R. Companies in the State to sell tickets for round trip at one full fare This arrangement is not yet perfected, but we hope it will be in due time.

L. S. BURKHEAD,
for Committee.

NOTICE.

The Centennial Meetings ordered by the N. C. Conference, will commence in the Raleigh District on the 21st inst, and continue throughout the District one month.

FARMER.—The agriculturist's life is the purest and holiest of all. Pure, because it is the most healthful, and vice can find no time to contaminate it; and holy, because it brings the Deity always before his view, giving him thereby the most exalted ideas of the supreme power, and the most fascinating and endearing views of moral benignity.

DEAR BRETHREN: We publish the above as the Programme for our Centennial celebration in Raleigh. It is not fully completed—some few changes may be made in reference to the pulpit exercises. It is however substantially arranged. As the people generally in N. C. feel a deep interest in this celebration, we most respectfully request the Press of the State to copy this Programme.

Other important announcements will be made next week. Let there be a grand rally at Raleigh: and let all our ministers and people pray for a "tidal wave" of salvation to sweep over the whole state.

Religious Intelligence.

Many churches in Philadelphia are blessed with revivals.

Deep and powerful revivals are reported in West Virginia and Kentucky.

The United Presbyterians hold their next General Assembly in Philadelphia.

Rev. W. M. Green is collecting materials and will write the Life of his father Dr. A. L. Green.

Bishop Keener has gone to Mexico to visit our Missions. He will be absent about six weeks.

The three principal Baptist pulpits of Chicago are now vacant.

The revenues of the Church of England from its vast aggregate of property amount to over $26,000,000 yearly.

The United Presbyterians have now ten churches in Egypt, with an average of more than forty communicants in each.

It is said that the paid choir of Dr. Willitts' church, West Arch street, Philadelphia, will be dispensed with after March 1. It costs $2,200 per year.

The members of the African Methodist Episcopal Church have ordered a statue of Bishop Allen, the founder of the church, to be made at a cost of $3,500. This will be their contribution to the American Centennial.

The Irish Presbyterians have a most interesting mission among the Dheds, at Basud, India. Within two years Christianity has spread rapidly. The number of villages occupied has arisen from 4 to 27, the number of communications from 40 to 71, and that of candidates from 54 to 444.

THERE is this difference between those two temporal blessings—health and money—money is the most envied, but the least enjoyed; health is the most enjoyed, but the least envied; and this superiority of the one is still more obvious when we reflect that the poorest man would not part with health for money, but that the richest would gladly part with all their money for health.

We see it stated that the New York City Mission and Tract Society has, in the forty-nine years of its existence, spent about $1,000,000 in work has established five mission stations, at a cost of about $100.000. During the past year its receipts have been $41,060; 63,718 visits have been made, and 675,000 tracts distributed, 534 Bibles and Testaments given away, and 944 volumes loaned from their libraries; 1,304 children were led to Sabbath schools and 224 to day schools; 619 persons were induced to attend Bible classes and 6,912 to attend church, 230 of whom united with different churches, and 70 who had backslidden were restored to church fellowship; 4,500 persons were aided with money, food, clothing, medicine, etc, at a cost of $6,178.28 outside and independent of the regular receipts of the society. This is a good showing for Protestant mission work among the destitute and degraded of the city.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. Z. I. Lyon contemplates leaving Durham for Winston, whereat the PLANT grieves.

Person county was the childhood home of the Editor of the Durham paper. The PLANT bidded there: way it always be GREEN.

The patience of the tax-collector in Durham is exhausted and he notifies delinquents that he will advertise their property in the next issue of the PLANT Death and taxes are veritices: men may come and men may go, but they go on for ever.

☞There is a celibate Geer in Durham, a large property owner and a good citizen, whom the PLANT wants to see in matrimonial gear.

W. T. Blackwell & Co., have nearly completed their handsome hotel building at Durham. The old hotel has been moved and fitted up for a store and Masonic Lodge.

Some incendiary applied the torch to the fence of Mr. John Barbee in Orange county week before last and destroyed 300 panels of fence.

Mr. W. W. Ramsey came near losing his life at Mill Creek Church in Person county recently. He was running a circular saw and falling accidentally upon the carriage was drawn on to the saw. It first struck his hip, passing all the way down his leg, cutting the flesh off to the bone and in one place fracturing the bone. Though painful the wounds are not considered fatal.

Mr. Sam Crawford's Mill in Orange county was entered and fifteen bushels of grain were stolen, by the same thieves, perhaps, that broke through and stole six pieces of meat from the smoke house of E. M. Jones, Esq., of same county.

Capt. Kirkland, Esq., for ten years a resident of Uruguay, South America, reached his old home at Hillsboro week before last.

Concord, through the Sun, puts in a bid for the Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention will be called the 21st of June—but nothing is yet is said of the place.

The name of Malone's Store, on the Western N.C. Railroad, has been changed to Henry's in honor of Judge James L. Henry.

The engine Junaluskie, on the Western N. C. Railroad, is being remodelled, and will henceforth bear the name of Gov. Brogden.

They say that a Mr. Parker, living in Stanly county, last week killed four wild turkeys and four crows at one shot.

Jacob Pruden, of Bertie county, while insane, committed suicide by shooting himself with a gun.

All of the Wilmington papers suspended publication for one day, in honor of the Centennial of the battle of Moore's Creek.

The Shelby BANNER says that a few days back, a citizen of Cleveland, Mr. James Bridges lost two of his youngest children about the same time—so near that both were buried in the same coffin.

The Asheville Expositor is informed that on last Friday night a week ago a young white girl, about 15 years of age, the daughter of a Mr. Doniphant, near Old Fort, eloped with a negro man by the name of Ellison, (who was a married man at the time.) They have not been heard from since their departure. The girl was said to be quite beautiful, and was reputed of good character.

Now here's something sensible. Mr. Nat. Johnson, of Concord, told the Register, the other day, that he had been farming forty-two years, and that he had not, since the first year, bought a pound of meat, a bushel of corn or a sack of flour; but had not failed, a single year, to have those necessaries to sell. Mr. Johnson's farm is situated on Coddle Creek. He makes but little cotton, but what he does make is clear grain.

WHILE WAITING FOR A COUGH to go as it came, you are often laying the foundation for some Pulmonary or Bronchial affection. It is better to get rid of a Cold at once by using that sure remedy Dr. J. Jayne's Expectorant, which will cure the most stubborn Cough, and relieve you of all anxiety as to dangerous consequences.

Old Age is Honorable.

The Aged [illegible] have been brought into requisition in Life Insurance Companies, whose agents are sent for that purpose, which inflict serious injury on the community. Especially is this the case with a large majority of the Life Companies of the present day. For an excellent paper and statistics bearing upon this point, see Life Insurance Journal, Hartford Conn. Also for the best home company in the world, we commend that made by Dr. Tutt of New York. It possesses qualities that no other Pill does, and as a cathartic it proves itself as mountain spring water.

Robert McIlwaine, was born July 21 and died on his home in Bladen co. Dec. 31st 1875. Another good man has gone from earth, leaving the irresistible impression that the grace of God is sufficient in the great trials. He joined the Methodist Church about 1830, and for 45 years lived a quiet, unexemplaining christian. Death no stranger in his family, God gave the large family of children but the mother had gone before. For more than a year a halt, he was a help to parents, brothers and all the dark clouds which so often surround and frighten the ungodly he was prepared and could say to the last, "Thy will be done, O God, not mine." During the exercises with him he always got happy and going home "was deeply exercised in soul, and the persuasion arises as to the place he gained the place where I expect to find him of home, where wicked cease from troubling and the weary shall be at rest.

Died in Fulton, Davie Co., N. C., at the residence of her Son Dr. W. R. Sharpe, 5th of Feb. 1876, Mrs. Mary A. Sharpe, David Sharpe, in her 81st year. She professed faith in Christ when only seventeen years of age, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and remained a pious, devoted christian to her death. She sustained a serious fall several weeks before death, from which she seemed to be slowly recovering, when she was suddenly seized with alarming symptoms, supposed to be the result of the rupture of an internal blood vessel, and expired in a few hours. She leaves many friends and relatives to mourn her loss.

Thou art dead: shine earthly honors,
But with God thy soul is living now.
Old tree, gentle spirit rest now free
Freed from sorrow, toil, pain, and care

Thy tottering steps no more we hear,
Thy feeble voice can never cheer
Our burdened heart's in the dark tomb,
When grief will crush with mighty [illegible]

The National Art Co. of Cincinnati, O., have made arrangements which secure to the patrons of this paper the grandest ART PREMIUM ever offered in this country. It is entitled one of the largest pure steel engrav. the grandest ART PREMIUM ever offered in this country. It is entitled one of the largest pure steel engravings ever produced, being in size 20x32 inches—more than 3 feet high and 2 feet 2 inches wide—and is entitled

THE THREE GRACES.

It portrays three of the most gracefully beautiful women, representing the three Christian Graces—FAITH, HOPE, and CHARITY. As a picture more than one-third the size, and all are wonderfully beautiful. Its value may be determined by the following card, issued by the National Art Co.:

OFFICE OF NAT'L ART CO., Cincinnati, O., Oct. 23, 1875. Agents all over the U. S. Dear Sirs: We desire to say to all subscribers that the splendid proof of the foreign impressions of "The Graces" is Thirty Dollars each, and that we will pay $30 for each and every copy equal to our Premium edition, outside of our issue.

This grand Premium is given to each subscriber to this paper who cuts out the Premium Certificate found below, and sends it to the Nat'l Art Co., together with 25 cents, twenty-five cents. It is sent at once, securely packed, and will arrive at its destination unharmed.

Cut out this Certificate and send it to the National Art Co. It is worth $5.

Premium Certificate.—On receipt of this certificate, together with 25 cents, to pay postage and mailing this, we will mail to the subscriber, or owner of the Premium, a copy of the Premium Picture, entitled

THE THREE GRACES.

This Certificate is good to Dec. 31, 1876, after which 50 cents additional will be charged. No copy will be sent without this certificate, except on receipt of $5, the retail price for one, and the only American edition. All certificates must be sent directly to

THE NATIONAL ART CO., 26 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Note these Instructions. All Certificates should be sent in by Dec. 1, 1876. All sent in thereafter require 50 cents additional, as now selling will then be discontinued. The Certificate Blank, in all cases, for each additional, as no duplicate copies can be had. Persons intending to subscribe for the pictures of "The Graces" will do well to send in their subscriptions at once, as the publishers will be overwhelmed with orders during the last month. Persons sending Certificates after Dec. 1, 1876, will receive a receipt for the 25 cents, but the picture will not be sent until after Jan. 1, 1877. This course is necessary, as orders will come in so fast during December that it will be impossible to attend to them. Certificates should be sent carefully enclosed in envelopes, and postage will be prepaid. Direct to the National Art Co., 26 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and you will receive in return the largest and best Premium Engraving you ever saw.

Answer.

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," is found in Rev. 2d chap. 10th v. Mellie J. Colson, Tullia B Reeks, F. B. Jones.

Sampson was the greatest fox hunter. Mellie J. Colson, F. B. Jones.

"Go home" is found in Mark 5th chap and 19th verse F. B. Jones.

Mellie J Colson sends the following as answer to the enigma proposed by Jno. L. Ray: The 1st is Elisha; 2d Vashti; 3d Ishmael; 4th Leah. The whole is "Evil."

Questions.

Mellie J. Colson asks what book in the old Testament in which the name of the Lord does not appear. Also, where is found "Teach me the number of my days."

Fletcher B. Jones asks where is found "Pray that ye enter not into temptation." The same says that we read of only one in the Bible who prayed to a saint, and asks who was he and to whom did he pray.

ENIGMA BY F. B. JONES.

My 1st begins the name of one who prayed for Hezekiah when sore distressed with a dangerous bodily distemper.

My 2d begins one of the false prophets whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire.

My 3d a city where Ishbosheth fixed his residence during his short reign.

My 4th the place where the robbers who gave Herod the Great so much trouble, sheltered themselves.

My 5th the place where the rebellious Hebrews were grievously defeated the second year after their coming out of Egypt.

My 6th the one who drew Jeremiah out of the dungeon.

My 7th, No persons named in the Bible.

My 8th the city where the prophet Jeremiah was born.

My 9th the fourth word of the 3d verse of the 1st chapter of Galatians.

The whole is a text in the New Testament.

For the Children.

BY JAMES A. DEAN, MYSTIC, CONN.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: I have never seen a single one of you, yet with the fathers and grand fathers and great grand fathers of some of you, I was acquainted, before you were born.—For their sakes I take an interest in you. But that is not my chief reason for writing to you; I am interested in all children everywhere; and especially in those who love the Bible and desire to become acquainted with its blessed truths I have been glad to see in the Advocate from time to time that many of you are studying the Bible, and that some of you are reading it through. Don't read it merely to be able to say you have read it, but think much of what you read, and ask the good Lord to help you to become wise unto salvation. I hope you will do as several boys and girls are now doing in the church where I belong.—For several weeks there has been a revival among them, as well as among the older ones, and many of them are already rejoicing in the forgiveness of their sins, and in their adoption as the children of God. You may all have the same blessed experience.

But I sat down to tell you something which I trust will deepen your interest in the Bible. I propose to take you with me to visit some of the scenes of the labors and sufferings of one of the writers of the Bible, the Apostle Paul. In August last I visited the places I shall describe, and now I will go back with you, and take another look at them, for I never grow weary in revisiting, in my mind, again and again the scenes where I have witnessed so many objects of interest.

We will go to the city of Rome, one of the most interesting places on the face of the earth. Now take your Atlas, and I will tell you what route we will take to go there. We go on board of a great steam ship at New York and sail across the ocean to Liverpool in the western part of England. From there we take the Great Northwestern railway to London in the south eastern part, and from there by railway to Dover, still further to the South east, here we take a steamboat across the straits of Dover to Calais, and then by railway to Paris, and on toward the south east, through Dijon and Mucon and Chambery up into the Alps, and through the great Mont Cenis Tunnel into Italy. I cannot stop to describe anything that we see, except the Tunnel just named. This is cut through the solid rock for about eight miles, directly through a great mountain. It is more than four thousand feet (nearly a mile) above the level of the sea, and about the same distance below the top of the mountain. It takes just about half an hour to pass through.

In Italy we pass through Turin to Alessandria. Here we could go southward to Genoa, and follow near the sea coast to Rome; but we will take a ronte a little south of east, through Placentia, Parma and Modena to Bologna, thence southward over the Appenines to Florence, and then south east through Areggo and Perugia and Spoleto to Rome.

Now if you have traced our entire route on the maps, we will consider that we have made the tour, and are ready to look for traces of the Apostle Paul. It has taken us a little over two weeks to make the journey. The Apostle came to Rome from Jerusalem and you will find an account of his journey in the 27th and 28th chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. I hope you will read that account before going any further. He did not travel near so far as we, but it took him many months.

There are four places in Rome where we shall look for Paul; 1st on the Appian way, by which he came to the city. 2d in the Pretorium or soldiers' camp, where he was delivered to the "captain of the guard." 3d in the court room, where he was tried for treason before Nero; and 4th, in the Mamestine Prison, where he is supposed to have been confined after he was unjustly sentenced to death.

We know that Paul came to Rome by the Appian Way, because that is the road that leads down the peninsula into the region of Puteoli, the place where he landed, which was not far from Naples; and because Appie Forum and the Three Taverns, little villages through which he passed, were situated on that road.

Now let us start at the Roman Forum which was in the midst of the old city, and going eastward, passing through the Triumphal Arch of Constantine, we soon find ourselves on the Appian Way. Let us follow the road for a few miles into the country. What immense heaps of earth and stones are these which we see all along the road on each side?—These are the ruins of old tombs, which were all in perfect condition when the Apostle passed them more than eighteen hundred years ago.—But look at these large flat stones with which some parts of the road are paved. We don't see very many, for most of them are covered. In the course of ages they had become buried with earth several feet deep, and it is only in places that they have been uncovered These are the same stones that paved the road when the Apostle was led over it a prisoner, and probably some of them are the very stones upon which he walked. We look upon them with great interest, wishing we knew on which ones he stepped, for it would be a satisfaction to put our feet upon the very places where his weary feet rested as he was on his way to this wicked city to be put to death. We cannot discover the prints of his feet to place ours upon them, but we can do far better. In the example that he has given us, and in the writings which he has left us, we see the very track that he followed, and here can see his foot prints at every step Far better to discover and walk in these tracks than in those which he made upon the stones. He himself has said: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." 1 Cor. XI: 1; and "I beseech you, be ye followers of me." 1 Cor. IV: 16; and "Yourselves know how ye ought to follow us." 2 Thess. III. 7. Yes, we know how we ought to follow him: not by trying to walk upon the same stone pavement that he did, nor by gathering up his bones and garments, as the Roman Catholic Church professes to do, and making them objects of reverence and even of worship; but by being faithful to God as he was, and living according to the directions he has given us in his letters. While we are interested in looking at the stones on which he walked, let it lead us to greater interest in studying the path of life that he traveled, as we find it given in the Acts of the Apostles and in his Epistles. Then will it be not only a pleasant, but a profitable thing that we have taken this little stroll on the Appian Way, to accompany, in our thoughts, the Apostle as he is approaching Rome to stand before the judgment seat of Cæsar. In my next we will look in upon him as he stands before the cruel Nero.

Bring out the Vital Energy.

There is generally, even in the most delicate constitution, a latent reserve of vital energy. The medical stimulant of all others best calculated to rouse this vis inertia is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The impulse which that inestimable preparation lends to the action of the various organs insures a more vigorous and consequently healthy discharge of their various functions, thus they would be capable of without its aid, and the "ebb tide of nature" this communicated it never excessive, but always equable and regular. Just so much stimulation is imparted as is required, and no more. In respect of the healthful gentleness of their action, the Bitters are immeasurably superior to the unmodified stimulants of commerce, which, though they produce a powerfully reanimating effect for a few minutes, are invariably followed by a reaction, corresponding in depression to their primal effect. They excite so much at first that nature is worried by the effort, and is apt to sink under the exhaustion. Physicians who have made the stimulative action of the Bitters the subject of experiment, declare their decided preference of them over any other similar article. An equally high opinion is entertained of their regulating qualities by medical men who are acquainted with their tonic effects. They speedily rectify an irregular slot of body, digestive disorders, and dyspepsia of the primary organs, which added to their strengthening influence, renders invaluable aid in dyspepsia, constipation, biliary derangements and weakness or irritation of the bladder or kidneys. Rheumatic affections are successfully alleviated by their blood depurating and anti-inflammatory action.

Unlimited Remedial Resources.

People sometimes suppose that Dr Pierce's Family Medicines represent the entire extent of his resources for every disease. This is an error. Experience proved that while the Golden Medical Discovery, Favorite Prescription, Pleasant Purgative Pellets, Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, and Dr Sage's Catarrh Remedy, each if faithfully used, cure a large variety of chronic complaints, there would be here and there a case which, from its severity, or from its complication with other disorders, would resist their action. These exceptional cases required a thorough investigation into their symptoms, to ascertain the exact nature and extent of the disease, under which the patient was labouring, and the use of specific remedies to meet, and overcome, the same. This led to the establishment of the World's Dispensary, at Buffalo, N. Y., with its Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, each of whom is skilled in the treatment of certain disorders in general and those belonging to his own special department in particular. To one in need of advice of the utmost importance, the question of the kidneys and associated organs to all other diseases of the system; and to another diseases of the throat and lungs. To another, the use

Selected Poetry.

"He Leadeth Me"

He leadeth me! O blessed thought,
O words with heavenly comfort fraught,
Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
Still this is God's hand that leadeth me!

He leadeth me! He leadeth me!
By His own hand He leadeth me;
His faithful follower I would be,
For by His hand He leadeth me.

Sometimes the scenes of darkest gloom,
Sometimes where Eden's bowers bloom,
By waters still, o'er troubled sea—
Still 'tis His hand that leadeth me!

He leadeth me, &c.

Lord, I would clasp Thy hand in mine,
Nor ever murmur nor repine—
Content whate'er I see or be,
Since this my God that leadeth me.

He leadeth me, &c.

And when the dark rolls all be gone,
When I shall reach the shining throne,
Where by the river, the victory's won,
Even death's cold wave I will not flee,
Since through it I go to Jordan leadeth me,
I shall with joy shout, &c.

Letter from Mt. Airy.

MESSRS EDITORS: An item or two more from this mountainous section may not be objectionable. We trust they may be of interest. We write this time not to speak so much of Mt. Airy, as of the revival meeting that closed at Dobson last Monday night.

Our 1st Quarterly Meeting passed off with comparatively little impression owing to the exceeding inclemency of the weather. The preaching was good, but the congregations very small.

On Tuesday and Wednesday following, the 1st Quarterly Meeting for the Surry circuit was held at Dobson, the county site. The "preaching was [illegible] with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." The impression was so great and the interest so manifest that it was thought best to protract the meeting, which was done for thirteen days. The congregations were very good and attentive. The interest steadily increased until last Sunday before the close on Monday night.

There were nineteen souls happily converted to God. Fourteen white and five colored persons were added to our church. Six will join by letter. So that from a membership of ten, we now number thirty-five. More will doubtless join soon. On Sabbath we had Love Feast and the sacrament. These were well attended and were of much spiritual profit. I believe I never attended a love feast where there was more religious feeling and enjoyment.

At 11 o'clock Sunday we repaired to the Court House, the congregation finding no large and the church small. This was my first sermon, or speech, or attempt at a ministering the sacrament in a Court House. The congregation was quiet and orderly, looking on with intense interest. This was one of the most powerful revivals ever known in Dobson. The town occupies a central position in the county, is "beautiful for situation," and from it a mighty tide of influence has gone out upon the surrounding country for the cause of christianity in general, and for the cause of Methodism in particular. The Methodists have no church edifice here; but a most desirable lot, two thousand feet of lumber, and a subscription of over $200, have been procured for building one. I think the Methodist Church at this place is firmly planted, and like leaven and like the whole lump," will spread and extend itself until its power shall be more sensibly felt in all this hilly country.

Our Baptist friends have recently become exultant over the immersion, or baptism of a few converts to the Baptist Church. On the occasion it was boastingly declared in substance by the waters side, that the whole world is coming over to the Baptist Church! That Infant baptism, or [illegible] sprinkling has been given up, or that it has "gone by the board"! or that there are so few baptized now that it is only a question of time, when it will "play out." Hold on my friend! Not quite so fast. Infant baptism is not given up. It has not "gone by the board." Nor is it likely to "play out." The doctrine is cherished by the ministry and laity of our denomination and others, as much as ever. It is a safe tenet and too well authenticated to be given up. If the sheep are in the fold protected against the enemy without, why not the little lambs?

These need much more the protection and fostering care of the church. A decrease in the number of infants baptized in one or two years from that of those baptized during the previous year, may argue a sad neglect somewhere, either on the part of the ministry, parents, or both, but not that the rite has been given up, or that parents are less inclined to have their children baptized. A decrease in one place does not argue that the same is true in another, or everywhere else. Let us look at facts. The statistics of the N. C. Conference show that in 1872 there were 1 307 infants baptized, which is a decrease from 1871 of 240—the number baptized is 1871 being 1,067. In 1873 the number baptized is 1,750, an increase from 1872 of 443. In 1874 the number of baptisms, is 1,631 decrease from 1873 of 119. The number for 1875 is 1,590 a decrease of only 41 from 1874. Now these figures show no relative decrease, but an increase of 523 in the last four years. That is, there were 523 more infants baptized by the ministry of the Methodist Churches within the N. C Conference in 1875 than in 1871. Our own statistics show that upon an average there were twelve infants baptized to every pastor in the Conference. Besides the general statistics of the M E Church, south, for 1874 show that there was an increase from 1873 in the number of infants baptized, of 2 154. I say nothing of those baptized by Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Protestant Methodists and other churches, or of those baptized in the counties in N. C. lying within the bounds of the Virginia and Holston Conferences. Given up! Never. We don't preach that way. Facts do not show it. Other statistics might be given, but I confine myself to my own church and conference.

The whole world coming over to the Baptist Church! I didn't know that before, really I don't know now. I think the expression must have been a sudden outgush from the exuberance of the man's heart.

Let us lay down a few facts and reflect upon them a little. I believe the world's population is estimated at upwards of one billion and a half. A large majority of this number is under the influence of the Pagan, Mohammedan, Jewish, Buddhists, and other Asiatic religions. Only about four hundred millions are under the influence of the christian religion. Over one half of these are under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church. The remaining part—less than two hundred millions—is divided among the various protestant denominations of the world. The Baptists then, claiming to have originated with and descended from John the Baptist, and to have had an existence for 1875 years, can only claim a small fractional part of the above number divided, and subdivided among the various denominations making claims upon it. But yet "the whole world is coming over to the Baptist Church!" O ye Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics &c hide your diminished heads!

It is possibly forgotten that the Methodist Church (all sorts included) within these United States, claiming to have originated with the Revs. John and Charles Wesley in 1729, and to have had an existence for not quite a century and a half, now numbers over three millions of communicants, while the Baptist Church, within the same territory, and claiming an existence of nearly nineteen centuries, numbers (all sorts included) but little over two millions and a half! And yet 'the whole world is coming over to the Baptist Church!'

But I must beg pardon for this long digression.

The meeting was commenced by our P. E., Bro. Bruton, and was conducted by Bros. Creasey, Long, Holcomb and the writer. Brother Creasey, who has charge of the circuit as a supply, is a live man—full of energy and work—and of untiring perseverance. His constitution seems as if iron, his lungs as if brass. They seem not to wear out or get out of tune. He is very popular with the people and will doubtless, under God, do much good on the Surry circuit.

Yours truly,

JAMES WILLSON.

For the Advocate.

"The Shadow of the Rock."

MESSRS EDITORS: Lenoir is highly favored in more respects than one. It is the home of North Carolina's greatest artist. The only man, perhaps, in the State who is entitled to take rank along with the great masters in picture-thought is Johannes A. Oertel. Mr. Oertel is by birth and education a German, and is a minister in the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is devoted to his profession as only the true artist and the man of genius can be.

Like some star in occultation he suddenly disappears. We hear, occasionally, that he is in his studio. We do not know what he is doing. Weeks and months pass away, when, suddenly, his genial face appears again, marked with something like carelines; but they gradually fade out as he points his visitors to the last achievement of marvelous patience and industry.

His last and greatest work is now complete and on exhibition. For the last four days eager admirers have been coming and going. It is estimated that in this short time not less than five or six hundred persons have paid their respects to "The Shadow of the Rock." The painting is eight feet by ten, supported by a magnificent gilt frame, itself a work of art, which cost the neat sum of two hundred and fifty dollars. The idea so magnificently embodied is the prophetic thought with which the 32nd chapter of Isaiah opens: "A man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest: as rivers of water in a dry place: as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." The wind, the tempest, the dreadful simoom in the distance, the boundless, barren desert, the great rock, and its shadow, and the exhausted traveler in that shadow, are all there; and there as the hand of genius only can draw them. But we can undertake no analysis or detail of the work. This must be left to the inimitable artist himself. For years this idea has been throbbing with the excitement of this vision. For years an untiring zeal or unquenchable enthusiasm has been at work, gathering and digesting the fine material here woven together into a harmony only second to that of Nature itself. For years this hand of peerless skill has trembled over this canvass elaborating each of the ten thousand minute particulars with such critical exactness that you forget, as you gaze, that you are only looking at a picture. You feel like stepping forward to pick up some of the pebbles in that shadow, or to pluck that gorgeous Oleander, or that purple Iris, or that feathery Fern; or to congratulate the exhausted stranger on his fortunate escape from yonder terrible tempest of sand; or you grow thirsty, and feel inclined to sip of that pure water that trickles from the rock.

The price set upon this painting by the author is ten thousand dollars.—To those who only look upon the size of the canvas, or the amount of paint on it, or the time it has taken to execute it, this will appear a fabulous price. But to those who can translate all this into thought and realize its æsthetical value, it will not seem at all improbable that he should realize this amount of money, even at no distant day.

It is a matter of pride to us as a people that this great work of art should go from our little mountain village to our national centennial exhibition. North Carolina's patriotic sons who attend that great national pageant, will not fail to seek out in the gallery of art "The Shadow of the Rock;" nor, as they stand before it, will they fail to hold up their heads in the face of the assembled nations, in honest pride that their honest native State is the home of a genius whose sublime conceptions and patient toil can render classical her obscurest hamlets.

But there is another fact, which, in our view, commends Mr. Oertel as an artist. He is a christian artist. Not only a christian man, but a christian artist. He draws his inspiration from religion. His genius is consecrated to the cause of religion. It grasps and embodies the great thoughts of revelation. True, it lays all Nature under contribution, but it never fails to recognize Nature's God.

The rock and the desert, the tempest and the ocean, the land scape and the mountain, are not merely grand, or beautiful, or curious objects: they are teachers—teachers of divine truth. They mean something—they have a language—they appeal and point to God. They warn—they plead they promise. They not only please, but they instruct. They not only elevate thought, but they chasten and subdue the heart. The artist not only follows his fancy, and exhibits his taste; but he follows his conscience, and shows us his convictions. He would not only please the world, but he would improve it. In a word, he seeks continually and always to combine æsthetics and religion.

If it be asked why so bright a genius deliberately prefers the quiet retirement of a mountain village instead of seeking some great social center where it may shine, we answer, Is it a new thing for true genius to be modest and retiring? Is it a new thing for genius to be so absorbed in the object of its pursuit as to despise and repudiate all [illegible] radiate? Is it not one of the marks of genius to work rather than to shine? Is it a new thing for the richest and rarest flowers to bloom in the obscurest places? Genius seeks the places and circumstances best adapted to its growth, and develops itself, not to its exhibition.

Its work is seen and read and admired of all men, but it hides behind its work. This is a lesson which the world is slow to learn. Every age and country has its generation of Nathaniels who [illegible] saying, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth" To all such we would reply in the language of Philip, "come and see."

Silent Men.

Washington never made a speech. In the zenith of his fame he once attempted it, failed, and gave it up ever after. He refused to be a member of the Constitutional Convention, whose labor was almost wholly performed in the Committee of the Whole, of which George Washington was chairman, but he made two speeches during the convention, which were of a very few words each. The convention, however, acknowledged the master-spirit, and his actions affirm that, but it was not from his personal popularity, and the fairly words of his first speech, pronouncing it the best that could be united upon, the Constitution would have been rejected by the people. Jefferson never made a speech. He could not do it. Napoleon, whose executive ability is almost without a parallel, said that his [illegible] were deeds rather than words.

A Name in the Sand

Alone I walked [illegible]
A pearly shell [illegible];
I stooped and [illegible]
My name, I wrote not there.
As onward from the spot I passed
One lingering look behind I cast—
A wave came rolling high and fast
And washed my name away.

And so the thought I will not check,
While every mark I may not trace on me:
A wave of dark [illegible]
Will [illegible]
Where I have [illegible]
Of Him, and be to me no more;
Of me, my day, the name I bore
To leave no track or trace.

And yet with Him who counts the sands
And holds the waters in His hands
I know a lasting record stands
Inscribed against my name,
Of all the deeds done in the body
Of all this thick-coming fancies
And from these lips and from this life
For glory or for shame.

Interesting Dialogue

A religious exchange gives the following dialogue on the subject of giving to Foreign Missions:

'I don't believe in foreign missions and I won't give anything except to home missions: I want what I give to benefit my neighbors.'

'Well,' replied Dr. Skinner, 'whom do you regard as your neighbors.'

'Why, those around me' replied the brother.

'Do you mean those whose land joins yours?' inquired Dr. Skinner.

'Yes.'

"Well," said Dr. Skinner. 'How much land do you own?'

'About 500 acres.'

'How far down do you own" inquired Dr. Skinner.

'Why, I never thought of it before, but I suppose I own half way through.'

'Exactly,' said Dr. Skinner. 'I suppose you do, and I want this money for the chinese—the men whose land joins yours on the bottom.'

The hardened brother had never thought of that, and gave a good sum for the cause of foreign missions.

Stealing from God.

Is there any sadder thing than to see a man have money, and plenty of it; such a plenty of it that he can thoroughly afford the glorious luxury of giving, and giving largely, and giving often, to make his fellow men better and happier—to infuse his own volition as a beneficent force into the mingling agencies of the coming years on away down into the far, far future—to be a worker together with God in the most God like function, so to speak, of God himself—to have this grand, glorious possibility, and miss it, and instead of expanding into a great heart and a noble and generous and God-like soul, to grow hard and grow small, and grow moulding and stingy and contemptible, and shrink and shrivel and wizen into a mean and miserable thief! Sel

Mirages in Colorado.

A correspondent of the Denver News writes: 'During our rides among the farms and stockmen in different sections of Saguache and San Luis valleys, we have several times been treated to unequalled views of those most wonderful of landscape phenomena—mirages. On one occasion, a bright, cool morning, while on the opposite side of the valley (San Luis) from Saguache, and eighteen miles distant, we [illegible] distinctly outlined, between [illegible] in the neighborhood of the town mentioned, the broad, unruffled surface of a lake. So perfect was the illusion and so wonderfully transparent that, even at the great distance named, could plainly distinguish the pavement buildings upon the opposite and their full outlines distinctly mirrored in the translucent depths. Other objects over hanging the bright bosom of the lake cast shadows beneath, which were as perfect and plain to the naked eye as though they were within stone's throw of the spot. And another time bunches of haystacks and strings of fences seemed suspended in mid air at a distance of two or three miles. Beneath them could be seen the sharply-outlined horizon, and above the bluest of blue alone filled space. 'An unconscious journey to dreamland,' some inconsiderate reader may exclaim, but such a one can see enough in a week's visit here at this season to convince him of a queer reality. The experience of a prominent ranchman in the upper end of the valley, though of a different nature, is quite remarkable and apropos here. He was out hunting cattle a short time ago, and was suddenly enveloped in a severe rain storm, with the wind blowing directly toward him. He rode in this manner for quite a distance, when the rain changed to snow, and the current of air as brisk as before, but directly opposite. He retraced a few yards to see whether he could be mistaken, but found his rain-storm the same as before, with the wind still in its original direction. Then, in again proceeding on his way, [illegible] enormous amount of food for [illegible] by the storm of snow still persisting in its travel towards that of the sun. Believing the gentleman to be thoroughly reliable, I give this for what it is worth, and if one scientist be influenced to rack his brains in regard to the whys and wherefores of the singular freak of the storm king, a worthy object will have been attained."

Temperance Congress.

The National Temperance Society at its last annual meeting adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That, in consideration of the world wide prevalence of the evils of intemperance, and to devise means for their more effectual suppression, and in view of the gratifying increase of interest in the cause of temperance in foreign countries, as well as in our own, we deem it expedient to call an International Temperance Conference to be held in the city of Philadelphia, in 1876, during the progress of the International Centennial Exhibition, and that a committee of fifteen be appointed to make the necessary arrangements for such a Conference.

The committee appointed in pursuance of this resolution made arrangements to have a series of papers, historical, scientific, social, legislative, religious, &c., on the temperance cause, prepared by able hands, and presented at the Congress, which will convene Philadelphia the second week in June. A full list of the subjects, which will also be topics for discussion, has been prepared, and issued at the publication rooms of the Society. It is the intention of the Society to publish a Centennial volume containing all these papers, which will include a complete history of the temperance movements during the last century.

TOBACCO AS A MEDICINE.—Tobacco will conceal the unpleasant symptoms of some diseases and yet accomplish nothing towards their removal. There is not the least doubt but that tobacco will relieve pain and remove discomfort in many instances. Any narcotic possesses this power. Before intelligent person inquires further and demands to know whether or not the disease is cured. If it is, then no occasion for any further use of the tobacco. If upon discontinuance of the tobacco, the symptoms return, it clearly demonstrates that the tobacco has not effected a cure, but has only for the time being concealed the symptoms. All that tobacco can do as a remedial agent, will be experienced in a very short time, long before any appetite has been formed for it. When an appetite begins to be formed for it, then it has commenced its morbid action upon the system. There is not a case in which the habitual use of tobacco can be justified, upon rational grounds, for its remedial action. Its habitual use is not remedial in any sense of the term. Its action is inverted and produces diseased states. —Science of Health.

About Hating.

HATE not. It is not worth while. Your life is not long enough to make it pay to cherish ill-will or hard thoughts towards any one. What if this man has cheated you or that woman played you false? What if this friend has forsaken you in your time of need, or that one, having won your utmost confidence, your warmest love, has concluded that he prefers to consider and treat you as a stranger? Let it all pass. What difference will it make to you in a few years, if you go hence to the undiscovered country? All who ill treat you now will be more sorry for it then than you, even in your deepest disappointment and grief, can be. A few more smiles, a few more pleasures, much pain, a little longer hurrying and worrying through the world, some hasty greetings and abrupt farewells, and our play will be "played out," the injured will be led away and [illegible] forgotten. Is it worthy to hate each other?

THE CONQUERORS OF THE WORLD. The aim of Genhis was literally the conquest of the world—as he conceived it—and was never its accomplishment in his own life, and in that of two of his descendants, Kublai and Timur, than it had ever been before, or is likely to be again. The empire which he created counted within its limits probably one half of the whole human race, and extended from the Sea of Okhotsk, at the northeastern extremity of Asia, over the whole breadth of the continent, as far as the Black Sea. Insane as such ambition seems, it must have its source in some perennial springs of action common to our nature, since it constantly reappears with a certain periodicity in successive ages—fortunately far apart—and in races still more widely separated by ethnographic characters and surrounding conditions. Assyrian, Babylonian and Persian, Greek, Roman and French, have each in turn sent forth heroes on this quest for universal empire. With the Romans it became the insanity of ambition of a people, who for successive ages sought to be the rulers of the world, and actually founded an imperial sway over Europe, from the Rhine to the Danube, and in Asia and Africa nearly as far as Alexander had penetrated on either continent. The whole of Asia and eastern Europe had not, however, been under the scepter of a single ruler until Timur swooped from his Mongolian steppes, the heir of the first Great Mogul, and usurped in the heart of Hungary and Poland, and with a mixed multitude of tribes and nations for his army.—Fortnightly Review.

Consecration as a Pulpit Power.

Ever since the Gospel was first preached, there have risen those whose success has far surpassed that of others trained in the schools and skilled in all that is usually understood as essential to success. The secret is not hard to find. It is not because small endowments and little education are better than large gifts and a thorough discipline, but because there is a complete consecration in the one case, while in the other it is not found. If a man is to preach Christ with power, he must give himself wholly to his ministry. It must be to him the sweetest, truest, noblest thing on all this earth.—Sel.

English speaking people understand the science of government better than any other races; they rule one quarter of the earth's territory, containing one fifth of its total population. Over one third of all the vessels in the world are owned by them, with a tonnage equal to more than two thirds of the entire tonnage of the globe. Of rail roads they control over one half, and of telegraphs nearly one half. They expend annually on their governments over one fourth of the total expenditures in the world for such purposes; their imports are equal to one third of the aggregate of all the imports by all nations, and their exports are nearly equal to one half of the total exports of the world.

STARTLING FACTS.—If men ask your reasons for desiring Prohibition, show them the following statistics: In the United States, statistics show over 8,000,000 barrels of malt liquors are annually consumed, costing $200,000,000. 250,000,000 gallons per year are produced by distilleries. Market value of rum, etc., is $739,000,000 annually, or over $120,000,000 more than the value of all the flour, cotton goods, boots and shoes, woolens, clothing, books, newspapers and printing more than the above six principal industries per year. 100,000 licensed rumsellers 2,000,000 habitual drinkers.—600,000 hopeless sots. 100,000 confirmed drunkards made every year. 60,000 drunkards die annually. Nearly all the murders committed are the result of drunkenness.

A remarkable religious revival is prevailing in nearly all Southern Minnesota. Many heads of families and some in middle life, who professed themselves unbelievers in the Scriptures, are among the converts.

Conversion of an Infidel.

An interesting account of an infidel's conversion was recently given in the daily prayer meeting in Chicago, Illinois. It is said that the man, while on his way to take the cars for the East, heard a little Irish boy, who was sitting on the door step, singing:

"There'll be no more sorrow there,
There'll be no more sorrow there."

"Where?" inquired the skeptic, whose mind was more impressed by the words "There is it there'll be no sorrow?" The boy answered:

"In heaven above,
Where all is love
There'll be no more sorrow there."

The infidel hastened on to take his seat in the cars; but the simple words of that hymn or chorus had found a lodgment in his mind. He could not drive them from his thoughts. They were fixed. A world where there is no sorrow! This was the great idea that filled his mind. He dwelt upon it—revolved it over in his thoughts. It was the message by the Spirit that led him to the Saviour, who delivered the poor and ruined from sin here, and raises them to that world of joy and glory where sin and sorrow are unknown.

Point D'Alencon Lace.

It is estimated that there are 500,000 lace workers in Europe, of whom nearly one half are employed in France. Almost all of the latter work at home. Of the France laces, the most noted is the point d'Alencon which has had a wide celebrity for more than two centuries, and has been styled the queen of lace. It is made entirely by hand with a fine needle on parchment pattern, in small pieces, which are afterward united by invisible seams. The firmness and solidity of the texture are remarkable. Horse-hair is often introduced along the edge to give it firmness. Although the workmanship of this lace has always been of great beauty, the designs in the older specimens were seldom copied from nature. This circumstance gave a marked advantage to the lace of Brussels, which represented flowers and other natural designs with a high degree of accuracy. The defect, however, has disappeared in the point d'Alencon of recent manufacture: at the Paris Exposition of 1867 were specimens containing admirable copies of natural flowers, intermixed with grasses and ferns. Owing to its elaborate construction, this lace is seldom used in large pieces. A dress made of point d'Alencon, the production of Bayeux, consisting of two flounces and trimmings, was exhibited at the Exposition of 1867, the price of which was 85,000 francs. It required forty women seven years to complete it.

HOW TO KEEP A SITUATION.—Be ready to throw in an odd half hour or an hour's time when it will be an accommodation, and don't seem to make a merit of it. Do it heartily. Though not a word be said, your employer will make a note of it. Make yourself indispensable to him and he will lose many of the opposite kind before he will part with you. Those young men who watch the clock to see the very second their working hour is up who leave, no matter what state their work may be in, at precisely the instant—who calculate the exact amount they can slight their work and not get reproved—who are lavish of their employer's goods—will always be the first to receive the notice, when times are dull, that their services are no longer required.

It is announced that a Mormon tabernacle is to be erected in Brooklyn, to be used by the society of the Latter Day Saints in that city. The New York conference of Mormons, which includes branches in Brooklyn, Huntington, N. J., and Pottsville, Pa, now has nearly two hundred members.

Scientific.

A science college has just been formally opened in Leeds, England, by the Duke of Devonshire, though it has really been at work for a year. The college has already got a considerable endowment; £30,000 have been raised by subscriptions; a further endowment of £400 a year has been obtained through the Endowed Schools Commissioners, and the cloth workers have given £300 a year, and founded four scholarships of £25 a year each, for furthering instruction in the textile industries.

RECOVERY FROM THE STROKE OF LIGHTNING.—In his valuable work on 'The Maintenance of Health,' Dr Forthegill has the following on resuscitation after lightning stroke: Persons struck by lightning are not dead as dead when they appear to be. Even the few recoveries from drowning are, because no means are tried to resuscitate sufferer. In the tropics there are more instances of persons struck down by lightning, recovering after a heavy shower; and it would appear that cold affusion to the body has a decided action in such cases. The injured cannot be harmed by the free use of cold water, and if only an occasional recovery took place it would be well worth the pains bestowed. The persons so injured should have cold water poured, or even dashed, freely over them.'

The touchstone, which has served for ages as a means of determining approximately the purity of gold, has been a frequent object of study with mineralogists, geologists and chemists. The name has been applied by modern [illegible] to a number of very different minerals. According to M. Damas, in a recent number of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, the good, true and only touchstone suitable for our usual requirements, and which should alone bear the name, is a fossil wood, still retaining carbon with in the silicon with which it is injected. Specimens having all the qualities of good touchstone, and giving a scoria of pure silicon when burnt, still retain the form of branches of trees, the germs of which even may be determined. He has had a fragment of good touchstone analyzed, and communicates the result in this paper.

Budget of Humor.

THAT is, a practical, not a pretty, saying attributed to Miss Anthony: "Babies are the coupons attached to the bonds of matrimony."

A bolt of lightning struck a tree in front of a Chicago alderman's house the other night, and in his fright the alderman remarked: "Hold on, I'll restore the money."

"Why should we celebrate Washington's birthday more than mine?' asked a teacher. "Because he never told a lie," shouted a little boy.

Child—"Does the Lord take the papers?' Mother—"No, my child; why do you ask?" Child—"Oh! I thought he didn't, it takes your minister so long to tell him about things!"

"Woman is a delusion, madam," exclaimed a crusty old, batchelor to a witty young lady. "And man is always hugging some delusion or other,' was the quick retort.

An auctioneer, at a late sale of antiquities, put up a helmet with the following candid observation: "This, ladies and gentleman, is a helmet of Romulus, the Roman founder; but whether he was a brass or iron founder I can not tell."

"Mamie," said a mother to a little six-year old, "if I was a little girl like you I would pick up all those chips." 'Well mamma,' said the little one, "ain't you glad you are not a little girl?

A colored gentleman went to consult one of the most "high-toned" lawyers in Boston, and, after stating his case, said, "Now, I knows you's a lawyer; but I wish you would please, sar, jess tell me the truff 'bout dat matter."

'Henry, why don't you keep a supply of cloves in your pocket?' said an Albany young lady to her escort at the Opera-House recently; 'you wouldn't then have to run out after every act; and I don't see why you are so awful fond of cloves, anyhow!'

The other day a postmaster, on entering his office, had his olfactory nerves disagreeably assailed. On questioning a boy in the office as to the cause, the facetious youth replied; 'I don't know, sir; but perhaps the smell comes from the dead letters.'

'How much for that broad-faced chicken on the fence?' enquired an Irishman of a farmer on Staten Island the other day. 'That's not a chicken; it's an owl,' replied the farmer. 'I don't care how ould he is, I would like to buy him,' says the Irishman.

A darky who was stooping down to wash his hands in a creek didn't notice the peculiar actions of a goat just behind him, so when he scrambled out of the water and was asked how it happened, he answered: 'I donno 'zactly; but 'peared as of de shore kinder h'isted and frowed me.'

'We don't owe that house anything,' said a produce merchant, looking puzzled over a letter from the West.—'We have rendered an account of sales of all corn, oats, and wheat received, and remitted every cent, less commissions.' 'Yes, sir,' said the bookkeeper, 'but the due is on the rye.'

'Sleeping', Donald?' said a Highlander to a drowsy acquaintance, who was ruminating on the grass in a horizontal position. 'No, Duncan,' was the ready answer. 'Then, Donald, would you'll no lend me ten and twenty shillings?' was the next question. Ough, ough!' was the response, with a heavy snore, 'I'm sleepin' noo, Duncan, my lad.'

A certain clerk in a Western village recently made the following comment on Pocahontas. Said he: 'Pocahontas was a great man; Pocahontas was a kind hearted man.' 'Hold on', cried his champion: 'Pocahontas was a woman.' 'She was, eh?' said he.—'Well, that's just my luck. How am I expected to know? I never read the Bible.'

The Centennial.

From present indications, the prospects are indeed flattering for a grand Centennial mass meeting to commence in this city on the 21st of March. A very large crowd is expected. Most, if not all, the circuits and stations in North Carolina will be represented. The occasion ought to, and will doubtless, represent Methodism as the grandest religious organization, in many essential particulars, in the State and upon this continent. But we are not inclined to say much just now. We hail with joy the coming Centennial Celebration. The subjects for discussion and the distinguished speakers and preachers who have been chosen for the occasion, can but advance Methodism in the old North State in her great and glorious mission. Let all our preachers and laymen who possibly can do so, arrange to be present at the commencement of the meeting and remain to its close.

Important Announcement.

Our readers will be delighted to learn that the facile pen of Rev. H. T. Hudson will contribute to our columns a "History of the Pioneer Methodist Preachers in North Carolina." The first number will appear in the first issue of the Advocate in April.

Such a history is greatly desired by our people and its appearance will be greeted with favor if we mistake not. Bro. Hudson is well known as an able and polished writer, patient in research and accurate in statement. In order that the history of the men who started Methodism in North Carolina may be known to and read of all, let subscriptions to the Advocate begin at once. We beg that our preachers will announce to their congregations the forth coming History and urge upon them the importance of subscribing. The publication will be likely to run through the year, perhaps longer.

Centennial at Home.

We take this last opportunity of reminding our Presiding Elders, Pastors in charge of stations, circuits or missions, and Local ministers, of the proposition submitted through the Advocate that on Sabbath, the nineteenth instant, sermons be delivered throughout the state on the rise and progress of Methodism.

It is to be hoped that the proposition which meets with favor, will be universally carried out in every congregation as our people not only need instruction upon the History of Methodism, but this being the Centennial year will naturally expect something of the sort, since the suggestion has been made, and those of them who are unable to attend the Raleigh celebration will at least wish to enjoy some of the Centennial at home.

A Graham correspondent of the Raleigh News says that the commencement exercises of Graham High School, of which Rev. D. A. Long is Principal, will take place on 25th and 26th of May. Rev. Dr. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Greensboro. will preach the sermon, while the address will be delivered by the senior editor of this paper.

We trust the preachers will make an earnest effort to bring with them to the Centennial a large list of subscribers to the ADVOCATE. The people who cannot be present will wish to read the Centennial proceedings; and many who can attend will wish their families, who cannot be present, to read the proceedings of the centenary of North Carolina Methodism.

As will be seen from "Trinity's" letter, the Rev. Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, will deliver the annual address at the Trinity Commencement next June.

We learn from Bro. Carraway that an interesting revival of religion is in progress at Tryon Street Church, Charlotte, of which he is pastor. The Presiding Elder, Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, has been assisting him in the meeting.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Ministers visiting the Centennial Celebration will please report themselves, on their arrival, at Rev. L. Branson's Book Store, on Fayetteville St.,—if not met by Committee at the Depot.

Light in the Fog

Ministers of the Gospel, alone, know what it is to suffer from intense mortification and disappointment attendant on pulpit embarrassment. The Central Christian Advocate sets forth some considerations of a consolatory character which might be well, especially for those just starting in the ministry, to remember.

"It is not unlikely that whilst writing in the paroxysms of mental agony his mind may revert to the condition of brethren whose path seems to be one of everbrightening lustre, and ever widening influence; and pangs of envy may be added to his other torture. But he should be reminded that it is not on his head and heart alone that the shadow has fallen; on the contrary, there have been few of the great company of those who have published the will of God who have not at some time or other felt its chilling gloom. Swayze was one of the most powerful preachers that ever labored on American soil. It was not unusual when he preached for men to fall from their seats "like men slain in battle." And yet there were times when this great and good man stopped in the middle of his sermon and with a lame apology closed the meeting in the best manner he could, and went to the house where he was lodging with a heavy heart.

Jacob Young, another of those strong men who were the backbone of American Methodism in his day, tells us that he 'tried to preach, but was bound in spirit, and had a dark time.' Robert Hall, the celebrated Baptist preacher, when preaching at Broadmead, after proceeding for a short time, much to the gratification of his auditory, suddenly paused, covered his face with his hands and exclaimed, 'Oh, I have lost all my ideas!' and then sat down; his hands still hiding his face. W. Tennant, Jr., one of the most devoted ministers of the early Presbyterian Church, is represented by his biographers as having been afflicted in a similar manner The Rev. Richard Waddy, father of the distinguished preacher who is still happily spared to the English Conference, was one of those robust, hearty, and genial preachers who seem to have been peculiar to a past generation, and of whom the late Peter Cartwright was the most recent type. A gentleman who happened to be present on one occasion when this worthy brother was preaching, informed the writer that shortly after he commenced his sermon he stopped, looked toward a friend who was sitting near the pulpit, and said, in a whisper which was audible to the congregation, 'It won't go! 'Oh,' said the friend he addressed, 'It's all right, Mr. Waddy, go on! He continued to preach a little longer, 'I tell you it won't go!' 'My dear sir,' was the reply, 'it's going on admirably, do proceed!' The preacher applied himself afresh to his work, soon struck a congenial vein of thought and delivered the remainder of a really excellent sermon in an exultant frame of mind and with the happiest results.

Another consideration which should have its weight is the fact that the embarrassment of the preacher has sometimes proved an advantage to the hearer The topic on which he may have intended to expatiate may not have been so timely, or so well adapted to the intelligence of his hearers as others that he might have chosen, and the want of interest they have displayed has aroused the ingenuity to devise some bold deviation from the original plan. Thus a certain local preacher, now the editor of a Western paper, when preaching in Ohio from a certain passage in the Gospel, being 'bound in spirit,' had recourse to the verso immediately following his text, not only preached with unusual liberty, but on calling mourners forward discovered that the shafts which had been drawn from this impromptu quiver had reached the hearts of as many as the altar would accommodate

Dr. R relates of the late Alfred Cookman that 'he was preaching to a dense audience in Light Street (Baltimore) and, as sometimes happened with him, he had no freedom in his sermon, and evidently did not succeed as he wished, but with a fertility which seldom failed him he began an exhortation to the consciences of his hearers which was so effective as to subdue all hearts. A prominent citizen whom he had attracted by his fame, but who was about to leave the house disappointed at his sermon, was so wrought upon by the exhortation as to be awakened and converted.' Though these examples are not cited as encouragements to 'off hand' efforts, they serve to show that even the most untoward circumstances may, with Divine help, be to a greater or less extent improved.

It has been supposed by the writer in all these remarks that the seasons of bondage he has described are unfrequent Their habitual recurrence would of course be fatal to a congregation as well as painful to a preacher: and if Sisyphus ever trundle his wheel they will decline to be spectators of his hopeless labors. Hence, ordinary prudence will dictate to such a man the necessity of forsaking his employment for some other description of Church work in which he might employ his talents with pleasure and profit. It is a consolation to the preacher generally, however, to know that in all probability a long interval will elapse before he will be thus exercised again. These surgical operations, though terribly painful when they take place, are almost always so arranged that the patient has time to recruit his health and stamina before they are repeated.

Though there is no specific absolutely infallible, the following prescriptions will be serviceable to those for whom they are intended Prepare fully and faithfully. Thoughts must be wooed in the study if they are to be worn in the pulpit. Avoid fatigue on the Saturday The powers of the mind may be gently exercised on that day, but should not be spurred and jaded. Let your meals be light, nutritious, digestible. If seasoned with the Attic salt of cultured conversation, all the better. By some means secure sound sleep. On Sabbath morning pray much, especially before and after reconsidering your sermon. Let prayer be your last act before proceeding to the pulpit, and your first act on entering it. Magnify your office, not yourself, Be deliberate. A little confusion may often be rectified by a slow delivery. But, though deliberate at the commencement, strive to forget yourself, and in the spirit of prayer go on You are in the presence of God. You are an embassador for Christ. You aim to win souls. Heaven is looking down with complacency, fiends only frown. Go on: Think of the blood which bought you, of the eternal arms around you, of the celestial reward that awaits you, and go on. Giving all the glory to God.

A Noble Struggle.

Under the above heading, the "Orphans Friend," published at the Oxford Asylum, says of our approaching Centennial and its objects:

'The North Carolina Conference has entered upon a strange work, at a strange time. While individuals are wishing for the benefits of bankruptcy while our counties and cities are repudiating their debts, while states are paying neither principal nor interest on their bonds, while our whole nation is leaning with increasing favor towards the inflation and gradual destruction of national obligations, here are fifty-four thousand Methodists who say they wish to celebrate this centennial year, not by singing 'glory hallelujah' over the prosperous past nor by a monument to the illustrious dead, but by a vigorous and persistent effort to pay honest debts! They begin the work on the twenty first of the present month, in Raleigh, a city which has failed to pay, and has refused to fin l her bonded debt. Yes, the Methodists can afford to suffer, to labor, and to die but they can not afford to be dishonest. In their present noble struggle, they command our unfeigned admiration and heart felt sympathy. They owe sixty thousand dollars, expended for the advancement of learning, for the education of their sons and daughters. They wish to pay for that model of taste and beauty, the new chapel at Trinity College. And the laws of sound are as closely followed in that immense building as in the manufacture of a first-class violin. Even an inferior sermon would sound well in such a chapel; but the Sunday school room and two lecture rooms are unfinished, and a small debt is standing, like a lion, in the way. Let it be promptly paid Other denominations and outsiders can afford to help. Then there is that large and very comfortable building at Greensboro. So many wise and good women have gone, and will go, out thence to bless mankind, and glorify their Maker! Shall a debt stagger such a work? Where is the man who feels that he can afford to allow it? Then the College at Lenoir, enthroned among the mountains, and shedding light and beauty into all their coves and valleys. Only a small sum is needed to perpetuate this noble institution. These three schools are located among the healthful hills, and mountain waters, where fruit and grain and grasses ensure abundant provisions, and good board can be secured at the very lowest prices. For the sake of the moral influence of denominational honesty, and for the sake of those who will soon be a great power as men and women, the sixty thousand dollars ought to be raised. The Methodists can not afford to fail, and outsiders can not afford to let them fail.'

From the Churches.

Bro. May writes from Monroe that the Church in that town is in a good condition spiritually, and harmony prevails. "Our congregations," he says, "are large and on the increase in size and interest. The preaching of the word of God is listened to with marked attention and the prospect of a brighter day is increasing."

Bro. Boshamer, writing from Ridgeway, says:

"I closed, in the town of Henderson, on last Thursday evening, an interesting protracted meeting which had been in continuance more than two weeks.

There were fourteen or fifteen conversions and reclamations during the progress of the meeting; and several, not converted, were seriously and deeply impressed

Brother Webb, of Franklinton, was with us a few days, and labored faithfully and efficiently both in the pulpit and around the altar.

Brother Gibbs was present one evening, and preached; and Brother S P J Harris, of the M P. Church, preached for us once, and rendered other valuable assistance

May the great Head of the Church favor us with many more revival seasons the present year."

Stewards' Report of Tarboro Circuit to the 1st Q. Conference, held at Tarboro, Jan. 7th, 1876.

QUEST. 5. What amount has been estimated by the board of Stewards for the support of the preacher in charge for the present year?

ANSWER. The Stewards beg leave to make the following preamble to their report:

We, the undersigned Stewards of the Tarboro Circuit, M. E. Church, South, having the good of the Church at heart, and earnestly desiring to see the work of the Lord prosper, souls converted and the Church built up in the faith of the gospel, have met together in our official capacity, and after a free expression of opinion and serious deliberation, ask to set forth before the Quarterly Conference, what we consider to be the wants and necessities of our people and the most effectual way to reach the masses.

We consider the most important work to be that of pastoral visiting. Our people have not been reached in the manner of Methodism—a majority of them are ignorant of the polity of the Church, as well as some of its fundamental doctrines. Many have never seen or read the General Rules, and if so, have never had them brought to their attention in a practical way. To meet these great necessities the pastor must have frequent intercourse with his flock; and to this end we think that regular, systematic pastoral visiting should be carried on: That once every month the Pastor ought to see, talk, and if possible pray with every member of his circuit.

As a body of Stewards, we look upon the work of a minister as we do any work, in this respect that it requires diligence and persevering effort in order to accomplish its purposes.

We hold firmly to the teaching of the Scriptures, that the workman is worthy of his hire, and we also hold as faithfully, that if a man will not work, neither shall he eat. Upon these grounds we shall endeavor faithfully to perform our duties, feeling certain that any pastor who will perform faithfully his duties and give his entire time to his work, will always be up with the collections of the Conference, and receive every dollar of the amount assessed for his support. We therefore insist, that pastoral visiting is an absolute necessity, not only in the ordinary acceptation of it, but if we make any progress for Methodism in Edgecombe county it must be done chiefly in this way.

There are a great many people kindly disposed toward us as a Church, attend the ministry of the word and send their children to the Sunday schools. Where this is the case, we consider it an open door, through which the pastor can enter, and do such efficient work as years of preaching will never accomplish. Nay more, we consider if he does not fully comprehend the situation and take hold of it with zeal for the Master, he fails in the most important work of his calling and passes by opportunities, that if properly used, would yield abundant fruit in the salvation of souls.

Such is the case with us: Numbers of people attend our preaching—send their children to our Sunday schools, and would be glad to be talked with on the subject of religion.

To us who look on and see it now, and then look back and contrast the situation, we can but feel the deepest solicitude in matters which so specially pertain to the furtherance of God's kingdom through the instrumentality of our beloved Methodism, and can but urge upon our preachers the reasons of this anxiety.

We consider the duties and obligations of pastor and stewards to be mutual. The pastor naturally looks to his stewards for help and encouragement in his work and to collect the necessary means for his support. The stewards look to the pastor for a faithful performance of his duties, which are so clearly set forth and defined in the old Discipline, but which we regret to say is left out of the new, thereby destroying that feature in it. which, as regards its devotional reading, made it so highly prized by our fore fathers,—made our preachers so efficient in their work, and so zealous for the salvation of souls. A failure to perform these duties always embarrasses the stewards and sometimes effectually prevents them from bringing up the finances of the Church We therefore think and insist, specifically, that the communion ought to be administered at each appointment, quarterly.

That fasting the Friday before each Quarterly Conference ought to be strictly enjoined by the pastor in public and private

That a Church meeting should be held at least twice a year at each appointment the first and the last.

That the parents of Sunday school children, not members of the Church, ought to be visited, talked with about their souls, and prayed with, if practicable.

That publicly and privately, the pastor should enjoin the duty and necessity of family prayer in every household.

That the preaching should be plain and practical, viz: to convince, to offer Christ, to invite, to build up." All these things require system, constant untiring work, and are a positive necessity.

"The world says Methodists are no better than other people, quoting from the old discipline. Family religion is wanting in many branches—And what avails public preaching alone, though we could preach like angels? we must, yea ever preacher must instruct the people from house to house. Till this be done in good earnest, the Methodists will be no better "And then the sum is, Go into every house in course and teach every one therein, young and old, to be christians inwardly as well as outwardly."

May the Lord help us, pastor and stewards, to lay these things to heart, and at this first Quarterly Conference of the new year resolve to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and putting on the whole armor of God, to quit us like men, to work faithfully in the great harvest which seems so white and so ready to be reaped in our midst, that having done all, we may at last hear the commendation of our Saviour and our Judge, "Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

In view of these facts and based upon these principles, we hereunto submit our report:

Letter from Bro Sharpe.

MESSRS EDITORS: At Williamston I met the Quarterly Conference of the Williamston circuit, and having presented my claim, pledges were made and assurance given that the amount apportioned would be met. The services were protracted with good results, four persons having professed conversion before I left Wednesday morning.

From thence by way of Plymouth, I went to the Columbia circuit. And during my stay here they gave their proportion of the College fund, and more. During last year this people bought a parsonage, which is nearly paid for, and now they are about to strike for a church in Columbia, never having had one with good hope of success. Verily, the remark that "the church is like a good cow, the oftener you milk her, the more milk she will give," seems to be true to the letter here. And so in every section of the country, we need to keep the church channel open that money may flow into her treasuries. Wind and steam mills have to be employed in this country, not for want of water, but because you can't get it to the wheel. So church enterprises suffer, not because there is no money in the country, but because men will not spend it in this way. But some complain that "there is too much said about money," and some actually stay from church on that account. But such men will never do to follow in these matters. It is only a dead church that wants no money. I suggest a way out of the difficulty; let men everywhere set apart a good proportion of their income for furthering God's cause, and without being asked let it pour in until church officers, as of old, have to "restrain" them from giving.

Plymouth, was also visited, and will I trust, meet the College proportion for that charge.

The preachers all round give hearty support.

Yours &c,
V. A. SHARPE.

Trinity College.

Matters are moving on quietly, but very vigorously. The number of students actually present, is greater than it has been for several years. The catalogue will show a very handsome increase. There are fifteen seniors and so sharp has been the contest for distinctions, that the scholarship of the class is supposed to be superior. The classes generally stand well, but it is evident to every student that the curriculum is excessive. The amount of study required presses heavily upon the most talented. The election for Marshall and Manager is over. J. H. Small, of Washington, is Chief Marshall, and H. M. Barrow, of Louisburg, is Chief Manager. The coming will be arranged and celebrated as the Centennial Commencement, and very superior attractions will be offered. Things new, unusual and taking may be expected. Great preparations will be made, and the world at large is expected. The campus will be in fine condition, and every thing will be far more attractive and comfortable than at last Commencement. Dr T. DeWitt Talmage, of Brooklyn, N. Y. will deliver the literary address, and will possibly preach one time.

The preacher for the Centennial sermon is not yet determined, and also the speakers for one or two extra matters. It is rumored that there will be changes in the usual senior programme, which may add to the general interest. The Trinity Building and Loan Association, has closed its first four years, and has done so well, that it is said it will be materially increased and enlarged.

DEAR BRETHREN: We publish the above as the Programme for our Centennial celebration in Raleigh. It is not fully completed—some few changes may be made in reference to the pulpit exercises. It is however substantially arranged. As the people generally in N. C. feel a deep interest in this celebration, we most respectfully request the Press of the State to copy this Programme.

Other important announcements will be made next week. Let there be a grand rally at Raleigh: and let all our ministers and people pray for a "tidal wave" of salvation to sweep over the whole state.

CENTENNIAL NOTICE.

To the Ministers, Members and Friends of the M. E. Church South, in North Carolina: We expect a "grand gathering" at our Centennial Celebration in Raleigh The exercises will begin Tuesday, March 21st, at 10 o'clock, A. M., in Metropolitan Hall, and will be continued until Sunday night, March 26th, 1876 Three of our honored Bishops will be present. Rev. Dr. Wadsworth of Mobile, Ala., and Rev Dr. Edwards, of Richmond Va., former pastors of Edenton Street Church, are expected to be with us, with many other distinguished ministers and laymen whose names are not in our programme. We expect to do all in our power to make the occasion a great blessing to the church and State. That we may not be disappointed, we beg you all to unite with us in humble, devout prayer to Almighty God for His benediction upon us.

Dear Brethren, please note the following points, viz: 1. We expect to entertain all the ministers of the State, who may attend, free of charge. Let all those, who expect to be here, notify me at once.

2. All our hotels and private boarding houses will entertain those who may come to the Celebration, at greatly reduced rates.

3. We expect all the R. R. Companies in the State to sell tickets for round trip at one full fare. This arrangement is not yet perfected, but we hope it will be in due time.

L. S. BURKHEAD,

The revenues of the Church of England from its vast aggregate of property amount to over $25,000,000 yearly.

From fifteen to twenty of the middle class in Yale Seminary are expecting to spend the summer vacation of 1875 (four months) in preaching on the frontier.

The Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of the East has received $8,575,63 contributions during the quarter. Between sixty and seventy mission hands are connected with it and in successful operation. Miss Harnell, of the foreign field, reports ten or twelve conversions in her school, and fifteen or twenty inquirers.

The Unitarian Church at Brookfield, Mass., has substituted water for wine at the administration of the Lord's Supper.

One of our religious exchanges says that it is estimated that between fifteen hundred and two thousand persons have been converted during the past Winter, through the efforts of the students of the Drew Theological Seminary.

Dr. Andrew A. Bonar says that, as a result of the work of Moody and Sankey in Glasgow, "they can lay their hands on 7,000 converts who hold out well."

According to the Unitarian Year Book the Unitarians have 362 [illegible] 215 with pastors, 147 without—and 400 ministers—218 settled and 182 unsettled.

We regret to record the death in Bombay, of Dr. Wilson, the patriarch of the Christian mission ries in India, where he had labored for nearly fifty years. In connection with the Scotch missions he did more than any other man in India for education. He was a man of great ability, vast information, uncommon culture, and boundless enthusiasm in his work The Bombay University examinations have been postponed out of respect to his memory.

During the session of a county court in the interior a witness was asked if he was not a husbandman, when he coolly replied, amidst the laughter of the court: "No, sir, I'm not married."

A terrible storm of wind and rain and hail swept through several of the Western States on the night of the 27th ult. The greatest destruction seems to have been done in Princeton, Ind. Upward of fifty houses were blown away, and a number of persons were very seriously injured.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Roanoke News, a sprightly paper, edited by H E. T. Manning, Esq., has entered upon its fifth volume with good prospects ahead.

Walhalla (S. C.) Courier: Geo. W. Sweptson, of North Carolina, has bought the shoals on Conneress, known as the Taylor property, and expects to have a manufactory established there. The property has been incorporated under the name of the Seneca Manufacturing Company. A bank has also been chartered for Seneca.

Curious Times.—The wife of Mr. Joseph Wisenyunt of Burke county, gave birth to twins the last night of the old year—one was born ten minutes before 12 o'clock, and the other ten minutes after 12 So one was born on Friday and the other on Saturday, one in 1875 and other in 1876. Their birth day is not the same yet they are twins. We doubt if such a thing ever occurred before in the history of the world.—Blue Ridge Blade.

Strange, indeed; but Charlotte is still ahead. On Saturday the 15th of January last, a woman in this city, (we withhold the name) gave birth to a child, and on the following Wednesday, the 19th of January, she was delivered of another—both fine healthy children. This last birth made the twentieth child of which this woman has become the mother. This statement can be substantiated at any time.—Charlotte Observer.

The Grand Secret of Beauty.

Is health. The secret of health is the power to eat, digest and assimilate a proper quantity of wholesome, nutritious food. This can never be done when the liver does not act its part. It is the great driving wheel in the mechanism of man, and when it is out of order, the whole organization becomes deranged, and fever, dyspepsia, bad blood, constipation, jaundice, neuralgia, kidney disease and general debility ensue. To restore the natural harmonious action of liver and impart that beauty which crowns all healthy, robust constitutions, Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills are continuously recommended. They are cheap, solely for the disordered diet and the diseases which it produces They are not a cure-all, but in the cases mentioned is rarely ever fail to effect a cure

Died in Chatham county, on the 3d March 1876, Miss A. Mann, daughter of Elisha and Margaret Pleasants, and wife of B. W Mann in the 17th year of her age. She embraced religion when about twelve years old, but from some cause did not connect herself with the church until she got into her 16th year. In August 1875 she received the Rite of Baptism under the ministry of Rev. J. D. Hufham, and by her death the church has lost a worthy member. A sermon was preached on the occasion of this death from the words of the Apostle upon him to have sinned unto death, and without a struggle or a sigh she left the world. She was a kind husband and affectionate mother, whom we confidently expect to meet in heaven. She was a pattern of meekness, mildness and humility. Her gentle disposition endeared her to all with whom she associated, and in

The Little Boy's Watch.

Dear Hillie Dick curled up by the fire,
Sat watching the shadows come and go,
As the dancing flames leaped higher and higher,
Flooding the room with a mellow glow.

His chubby hand on his side was pressed,
And he turned for a moment a listening ear.
"Mother!" he cried, "I've got a watch!
I can feel it ticking right under here!"

"Yes, Dick; 'tis a watch that God has made.
To mark your hours as they fly away;
He holds the key in His mighty hand,
And keeps it in order night and day.

"Should He put aside the mystic key,
Or lay His hand on the tiny spring,
The wheels would stop and your watch run down,
And lie in your bosom a lifeless thing."

He crept to my side and whispered soft,
While his baby voice had an awe-struck sound:
"I wish you would ask Him, mother, dear,
To be sure and remember to keep it wound."

T C W Boshamer asks where is found "Keep yourselves in the love of God." Also, "There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked"—Also "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."

A Noble Wife.

During the revolution in Poland which followed the revolution of Thaddeus Kosciusko, many of the truest and best of the sons of that ill fated country were forced to flee for their lives, forsaking home and friends. Of those who had been most eager for the liberty of Poland, and most bitter in their enmity against Russia and Prussia, was Michael Sobieski, whose ancestor had been a king a hundred and fifty years before.

Sobieski had two sons in the patriot ranks, and father and sons had been of those who persisted in what the Russians had been pleased to term rebellion, and a price had been set upon their heads

The Archduke Constantine was eager to apprehend Michael Sobieski, and learned that the wife of the Polish hero was at home in Cracow, and he waited upon her. "Madame," he said, speaking politely, for the lady was beautiful and queenly, "I think you know where your husband and sons are hiding."

'I know, sir.'

'If you will tell me where your husband is, your sons shall be pardoned.'

'And shall be safe?'

'Yes, madame, I swear it. Tell me where your husband is concealed, and both you and your sons shall be safe and unharmed.'

'Then, sir,' answered the noble woman, rising with a dignity sublime, and laying her hand upon her bosom, 'he lies concealed here—in the heart of his wife—and you will have to tear this heart out to find him.'

Tyrant as he was, the Archduke admired the answer and the spirit which had inspired it, and, deeming the good will of such a woman worth securing, he forthwith published a pardon of the father and sons.

Will Farmers Maintain their Rights?

An able article in the St. Louis Journal states "that for the first sixty years of our existence as a nation, the United States was essentially an agricultural country, and men who owned and tilled the soil were largely in the majority. The result was that the government was administered faithfully and honestly, the revenue properly applied, and officials were held to a strict accountability.".

During the past forty years the railroad and transportation interests have been developed, and these interests, controlled by a few capitalists, have imposed such burdens upon the producing interests of the country that the result has been most disastrous.

The farming community has not alone suffered by the exaction of exorbitant freight rates. Manufacturing and commercial interests have likewise felt their blighting influences. Happily, the farmers are beginning to fully realize the situation, are determined to look after their own interests and attend to matters that they have heretofore intrusted to those whose interests are inimical to their own. The farmers are not the only ones who see that men as well as principles are now needed to take the lead in affairs. Men must be found who cannot be bought and sold like cattle—men who have the will to do right and to come up to their highest convictions of right and duty. Rural World.

PROPAGATION OF CELERY—Celery is a native of Norway and Sweden, where it grows near the edges of swamps. This plant is rarely cultivated as it should be, hence the stunted specimens which appear in our markets A deep trench should first be dug, at the bottom of which a layer of sticks of wood, say six inches thick, should be placed, a drain pipe being placed endwise upon one or both ends of the layer. The stick should be then covered with about a foot of rich mold, wherein the plants should be set in a row, and about five inches apart. The plants should be kept well watered, the water being supplied through the drain-pipes, so that passing through the layer of sticks, which serves as a conduit, the water is supplied to the roots of the plant. In earthing up care should be exercised to close the stems of the plant well together with the hand, so that no mold can get between them. The earthing process should be performed sufficiently frequent to keep the mold nearly level with the leaves of the outside stems. If these directions are carefully observed the plant may be grown at least four feet in length, and this without impairing the flavor, which deterioration is commonly noticed in overgrown vegetables and fruits.

WHIPPING HORSES—Prof Wagner, in writing upon this subject, says: "Many think they are doing finely, and are proud of their success in horse training, by means of severe whipping, or otherwise arousing and stimulating the passions, and then through necessity crushing the will through which the resistance is prompted. No mistake can be greater than this and there is nothing that so fully exhibits the ability, judgment and skill of the real horseman as the care displayed in winning instead of repelling the action of the mind. Although it may be necessary to use the whip sometimes, it should always be applied judiciously, and great care should be taken not to arouse the passions or excite the will to obstinacy. The legitimate and proper use of the whip is calculated to operate upon the sense of fear almost entirely. The affectionate and better nature must be appealed to in training a horse as well as in training a child. A reproof given may be intended for the good of the child, but if only the passions are excited the object is defeated and injurious. This is a vital principle, and can be disregarded in the management of sensitive and courageous horses only at the risk of spoiling them I have known many horses of a naturally gentle character to be spoiled by whipping once, and one horse that was made vicious by being struck with a whip once while standing in his stall."

Bring out the Vital Energy.

There is generally, even in the most delicate constitution, a latent reserve of vital energy. The medicinal ailments of all others best calculated to rouse this vis inertia is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The impulse which that last-named preparation leads to the action of the vast organs intensures a more vigorous and consequently healthy discharge of their various functions, than they would be capable of without its aid, and the "ability to secrete" thus communicated is never excessive, but always equable and regular. Just so much stimulation is imparted as is required, and no more. In respect of the healthful gentleness of their action, the Bitters are immeasurably superior to the unmedicated stimulants of commerce, which, though they produce a powerfully resuscitative effect for a few minutes, are invariably followed by a reaction, corresponding in depression to their primal effect. They excite so much at first that nature is wearied by the effort, and is apt to sink under the exhaustion. Physicians who have made the stimulative action of the Bitters the subject of experiment, declare their decided preference of them over any other similar article. An equally high opinion is entertained of their regulating qualities by medical men who are acquainted with their basic effects. They speedily rectify an irregular habit of body. Digestive disorders, and derangements of the urinary organs, which added to their strengthening influence, renders invaluable old in dyspepsia, constipation, biliary derangements and weakness or irritation of the bladder or kidneys. Rheumatic affections are generally alleviated by their blood depurating and anti-inflammatory action.

A Toast.

Two important Discoveries: The discovery of America by Columbus, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; the one opening up to mankind a new continent, the other a fountain of health, which is inexhaustible to the full enjoyment of life and its blessings. In response to the above sentiment come the unsolicited attestations of tens of thousands of grateful patients, who have been relieved of chronic ailments through its instrumentality. These voices are limited to no one locality, but from every city, village and hamlet, in our broad domain, as well as from other climes, and in the strange, utterances of foreign tongues, like the confused murmur of many waters, commingled and nearly commensurate. It is, in connection with the Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the great depurator of the age. Until its benign action empties disappear, excessive waste is checked, the nerves are strengthened, and health, long banished from the system, resumes her reign and re-establishes her roseate throne upon the cheek. All who have thoroughly tested its virtues in the diseases for which it is recommended unite in pronouncing it the great Medical Discovery of the age.

POLICIES VALUABLE IN LIFE, AS WELL AS AT DEATH!

The BROOKLYN LIFE is the only Company in America which guarantees

DEFINITE CASH SURRENDER VALUES,

In case a Policy is forfeited for nonpayment of Premium.

THE BROOKLYN LIFE enjoys the highest reputation for JUDGMENT in INVESTMENT, ECONOMY OF MANAGEMENT, AND CARE IN THE SELECTION OF RISKS,—upon which elements of administration the security of a Life Insurance Company depends.

The laws of New York compel Companies in that State to come up to the cash value of their Policies, each and every year, and in a certain legal standard of reserve and accumulation must be held by the Companies to meet all their liabilities.

Insurers in looking around for Companies in which to insure should carefully see for this important safeguard. IT WILL BE FOUND IN THE BROOKLYN LIFE.

Selected Poetry.

THE "OTHER SIDE."

BY J. WALKER.

O, when I reach the "other side"
And see beyond the flood
The song, here lowly tried,
Sung by the precious blood!

Immanuel's land shines through the gloom,
Christ's call to guide
Us through to my dear Saviour's home,
Oh on the "other side."

To the "other side," the "other side,"
I see the ship, the angel's portals see!
Bright mansions for the sanctified,
A home prepared for me.

O, makes the "other side" so sweet,
And lights our pilgrim night?
No sun, no earth's golden street,
But Christ is Lord and Light.

The earth in dust and long,
No, on its crystal tide,
To Heaven, the subject of the song
Sung on the "other side."

Then let me not cease to hear the Lord,
Let me commune with God,
Let me the hands with one accord
Press on to the "other side."

Then when my pilgrim part should end
Of time, does its period and dried,
Let not a thought of every need
Arrest me to the sides."

Now I will, O Lord! closer cling,
Let me more close abide,
Your smile to cheer my journey bring,
Beyond to the "other side."

Influence of Woman.

TO OUR METHODIST GIRLS, READERS OF THE ADVOCATE: When Napoleon Bonaparte was asked what was the most need of France, he replied, "Mothers." What did he mean? that there were no mothers in France?—Surely meant to show his opinion of their influence over their children. The future statesmen, warriors, artists, authors, scholars, and rulers of the land. He saw that the rosy girl, in long clothes, was, as she grew up, to take her place in the great world, and her part in its formation, whether good or evil.

Girls of North Carolina, from the Alleghanies to the Atlantic! we all believe that Napoleon was a great man, though an egotist and a despot: and that this famous reply might equally well have been "Women." I don't mean a finikin, supercilious, fine lady, but a noble, pure, true, sensible woman. Years ago, when away at school, my mother wrote to me. "I want my little girl to grow up it to a sensible, spicious woman;" and we might, all of us, lay this to heart, for sense and piety will make us a power in the world. Just to think of our responsibility! Thirty years from now, those of us who are living will be the mothers and aunts of half the people.

What are we doing to fit ourselves for our future lifework? Do we look upon life merely as a playground, where we can while away our hours in frivolous never ending amusement? Ah! if that be the case, a terrible awakening will come, either in this life, when care touches our smooth brows; or when death, laying his cold hand on our hearts, bids us prepare for the grave and eternity.

Oh girls! wake up! wake up now. We have a work to do. Not to vote: not to hold office: not to make speeches: not to take any public position; but to lead those around us to the ways of pleasantness, and peace, and true happiness. Blessed are they who walk therein, and thrice blessed those who lead into those paths.

All of us can be sisters of Charity, in one sense. Not that we should of necessity, take the vows of celibacy; for one half of the good done by women is done in her station as wife and mother; but we can imitate their acts of faith and good works. We can show our brothers the beauty of a quiet home life, and then they will not be tempted to seek pleasure in grog-shops, billiard saloons, club houses, and places which are even worse. We can discountenance these vices in gentlemen of our acquaintance, by refusing any association with them. We can, in our church relations, do what Paul commends in the women of his day, relieve the poor, teach the ignorant, walk uprightly, and so set good examples.

Girls, our influence is world-wide. How many from our ranks have taken upon themselves the responsibilities of ministers' and missionaries' wives.—Do you think that the heroism sometimes, if not always attached to these positions, was cultivated by the hot-bed culture and self indulgence which so many practice; by lying in bed half the day, and sitting up half the night; by reading trashy books, and giving every thought to the all-absorbing topics of dress, fashions and style?—Nay, verily, but just the opposite. Some of us will, in all probability, be called to these high places, but let the rest of us remember, that all true life requires better preparation than a supine folding of the hand for a little more slumber, whether physical or mental.

Girls! my sisters and friends! let us not be as whited sepulchres, all fair and pure without; and within, full of deceit, canker, "dead bones." Let us be true steel, ready for any honorable use, and desiring to be effective weapons for our Master's warfare.

Selfishness.

BY D. C. A.

Selfishness, as it bears a relation to children or to matters of small importance, is not my purpose now. This, trait, however, in the young, though but faintly seen, often develops itself in after life and sometimes with exuberant proportions. It can be curbed and even subdued in early life, by proper culture, and without doubt ought to be.

To see it in all its hideous forms and vast proportions, we must look among those of mature years. It is astonishing to see what vigilance and tenacity will be brought into requisition for the upholding of a principle so overwhelmingly subversive of happiness and prosperity.

A selfish desire is the opposite of that which should be entertained by a gentleman, saying nothing of a christian—one who bears the image of his Maker. To be brief and concise, it is,

1. Detrimental to the interests of education. Men of a selfish nature care little for the future man. In his own estimation he is as wise and as good as the best of any age. As for business tact he owns no superior.—The past is a well pondered lesson richly embellished by his own fertile genius, but as for material aid in the cause of education he is as far from it as from heaven. His ignoble thoughts run in a different groove from that in which the noble cause of education, though up hill, often moves. He has information never acquired at school which he prizes highly. Rather than contribute means for the object of dispelling ignorance, it is congenial to his taste, and especially to his interest, as he thinks, to keep men in darkness by withholding means which a kind providence has placed in his hands—means so indispensible in enlightening, refining and blessing his race. He loses or has never been in sight of the object for which he was created. His ability to do good is limited to self and he even misapprehends what good is.—He is in a maze of money—in the surf of self. It is dangerous there to bathe—beyond a certain limit a struggle may end in defeat and defeat may result in death. He is gone. His money on the shore, but the tidal wave will soon bear it to where many hands will be wide open to receive it. If you have money take some of it to the Centennial.

2. Selfishness is a great bar to our holy christianity. It stands in battle array against the cause for which its great founder could have called legions of angels to his rescue, and yet who conquered singly and alone. It undermines piety. The money changer and Christ cannot be guests at the same house. God and idols are not at peace. Christianity and selfishness are opposite extremes. This is the Centennial of North Carolina Methodism.

3. It is destructive of happiness. The desire to accumulate is never satisfied. There is nothing in the object to gratify. Little or much that a selfish man has only makes him the more eager for more. The man of his zone may shine with a scorching heat, but beneath the shadow of a great rock he never rests, lest some one toiling in the sun may heap to himself more riches than he.

If you have any surplus contribute it this year for the cause of religion or education—this the Centennial of Methodism in North Carolina.

Hardly anything is known of the wealth of the Rothschilds; but a French writer of repute estimates the combined wealth of the united family at $3,300,000,000. It is an altogether fabulous sum for one family, and yet it may be within the limits of truth. But the London World, which ought to be good authority on the subject, says of the late Sir Anthony Rothschild that it should be the boast of his family that he "died and left but little behind him." That little, however, enabled him to bestow pittances of £15,000 per annum on his widow, £50,000 upon his son-in law (a Christian,) and £200,000 to each of his daughters. His title and his real estate went to his nephew. These sums are insignificant, and do not by any means afford an indication of his individual right to a share of the Rothschilds property, the vast amount of which none but the members of the family can know.

The Graves of Uncle Norman and "Wife, Mary"

Among the hills of South-Western Caswell, lie the mortal remains of Uncle Norman and wife Mary. I passed their graves recently for the first time, and involuntarily raised my hat in deference to the distinguished, pious dead. The sight awakened a train of tender thoughts. Memory took me back nearly thirty years, when a huge man, with a huge pair of saddle bags, on a huge horse, rode up to my father's house, and announced himself as "Alfred Norman," the preacher in charge of Tar River circuit. His welcome was cordial; for though our home was humble, it was always hearty.

After supper, we all gathered around the fireside to hear the new preacher talk. All new preachers are wonderful to the children. He was the largest, and we thought, the funniest, we had ever seen. His jovial disposition, and amusing anecdotes, won us all: and soon we learned that his head and heart were well proportioned to his body.

This visit made him ever after, a favorite at the old homestead. The ministrations of this man of God were most refreshing and successful. Four of us brothers were received into the Church by him, and most faithfully and tenderly did he care for us.

He was the first man that ever called my attention to the subject of preaching. When I entered the ministry, he claimed me as his son in the gospel. Would that the son were worthy of the sire! I saw him but seldom for many years. In 1873, our fields of labor were contiguous.

We met at old Prospect in June before he died in August, and after spending a most profitable and pleasant day and night, took, what proved to be, the parting hand.

Father Norman was emphatically sui generis. There never was but one—there never will be another. When fully aroused, his power was tremendous. He had but few equals in revivals, and no superior in quaint, forcible illustrations. His manner was unique.

"Mary" was his counterpart. A magnificent specimen of her sex—portly, handsome, sensible, and truly pious—she was ever willing to do sacrifice, or go at the call of the Master. They were never so happy as when laboring together in His cause. Wherever he was known, her name was familiar. He never preached so well as when she led the singing, and right well could she do it. Often, after he had delivered his great soul, hurling first the thunderbolts of Sinai upon the guilty sinner's head, until he started up in fear, and then telling in touching tones the simple story of the Cross, until sinners sobbed in sorrow, she would catch up the inspiring theme, and pour forth volumes of melting, sacred melody, thrilling the audience like a refrain from the heavenly world.

Their life was a romance—their death a poem.

Lovely in their lives, they were not long divided in their death. She nursed him through months of failing health, with truly a womanly devotion. As long as she lived, he clung to life, and battled with disease. When she died, life lost its sweetest charm. Attacked by the same disease against which he had struggled so long, and pressed with cares, she soon succumbed. The watcher grew weary, and Jesus said, let her rest. Rational to the last, she gave her dying injunctions to his children, and passed away in holy triumph. She did not die—she only went before.

He had her buried under a tree some hundred paces from his house, where he could lie upon his bed, and see her grave, and thus evoke her presence in his suffering moments. The patient sufferer, said one, became a mourner at the grave of his faithful nurse. The thought that he should soon sleep by her side, and that her angel spirit hovered near, consoled him in his desolation.

Devotion to the work was his ruling passion; it was strong in death. He was near his end—wished to die with his hands clasped in Capers'. Capers had appointments far away for Sabbath. Friends interposed, but no, Capers must go. "Go my son," said he, "and if I die before you get back, it will all be right. He went, and returned in time to see his father die.

The gospel he had so faithfully and eloquently preached to others, sustained him in his intense and protracted sufferings. Jesus made his dying bed. Having set his house in order, the strong man bowed, the bosom gently heaved, the heart ceased to beat—the cold hands clasped in his gifted son's—the struggle was over. The mantle of the old prophet had rested on the son.

If departed loved ones are our guardian angels, was not Mary there to sing again? The first to greet him on the other shore?

Together they faithfully lived—together they triumphantly died—together they sweetly sleep—together they blissfully reign above the sky. May we meet them in Heaven.

J. W. JENKINS.

Yanceyville, N. C., March 2, 1876.

Welsh Preaching and Preachers.

The great Welsh preacher was a kind of bard. He knew nothing of written sermons; he carried no notes nor writings with him to his pulpit or platform; but he made the lore and doctrine of religious metaphysics march to the minstrelsy and music of speech. On the other hand, he did not indulge himself in casting about wildfire. All had been thoroughly prepared and rooted in his understanding; and then he went with his sermon, which was a kind of high song, to chant it over the hearts of the multitude. We shall have occasion to show, by many instances from the lives of their greatest men, how their own hearts had been marvelously prepared.

There is a pleasant anecdote told of one of them, Griffyth of Caernarvon, how he had to preach one night. Before preaching, staying at a farm-house on the spot, he desired permission to retire to a private room before the service began. He remained there a considerable time. The congregation had assembled, and still he did not come; there was no sign of his making his appearance. The good man of the house sent the servant to request him to come, for the people had been for some time assembled and waiting. Approaching the room, she heard what seemed to her to be a conversation going on between two persons in a subdued tone of voice, and she caught from Mr. Griffyth the expression: "I will not go unless You come with me.' She went back to her master and said: "There is some one with Mr. Griffyth, and he is telling him he will not go unless the other one will come too; but I did not hear the other reply, so I think he will not come to night." "Yes, yes," said the farmer: "he will come, and I warrant the Other will come too, if matters are as you say between them; but we had better begin by singing and reading until the two come." And the story goes on say that at length Mr. Griffyth did come, and the Other with him; for they had a very extraordinary meeting that night, and the whole neighborhood was stirred by it, and numbers were changed and converted. It was Williams of Wern who used to tell of this pleasing anecdote; it is an anecdote of one man, but, so far as we have been able to see, it illustrates the way in which they all prepared themselves before they began to speak.

It must not be supposed from this that they imagined that prayer was to dispense with preparation. Their great preachers studied hard and deeply: and Williams of Wern, one of the greatest of them all, says: "In order to be a good preacher, usefulness must be the grand aim, usefulness must choose the text and divide it, usefulness must compose the sermon, and sit at the helm during its delivery. If the introduction be not clear and pertinent, it is evident the preacher does not know whither he is going; and if the inferences are of the same character, it is obvious he does not know where he has been. Unstudied sermons are not worth having. Who would trust his life in the hands of a physician who had never thought of his profession?' But they never permitted the understanding to supersede emotion; and when they met the people face to face, they went prepared, warmed and kindled, and ready to warm and kindle.

Thus their sermons became a sort of inspired song, full of imagination, deriving its imagery from no far-off and recondite allusions—never losing itself in a flowery wilderness of expressions, but homely, ministered to by the things and affairs of ordinary life, and therefore instantly preacher and people, in emotion, were one.—Paxton Hood.

JOHN BUNYAN'S INDICTMENT.—The bill of indictment preferred against John Banyan ran thus:—"John Bunyan hath devilishly and perniciously abstained from coming to church to hear Divine service, and is a common upholder of several unlawful meetings and conventicles, to the disturbance and distraction of the good subjects of this kingdom, contrary to the laws of our sovereign lord the king." He was convicted and imprisoned twelve years and six months.

Mr. Spurgeon, confessing an inability to manage a small church, says: "They are like those canoes on the Thames—you must not sit that way or the other, or do this thing or that thing, lest you should be upset. I happen to have a church like a big steamboat, and, whether I walk here or there, my weight will not upset it."

Heart-Power.

The heart-power belongs to all; it may be cultivated in all. Sooner or later we find, as we grow up, particularly in a Christian atmosphere, that the affections are partly under our own control, and they may be shaped by our own effort; but when we come to put forth persistent efforts, to make our affections and our character what they ought to be, we are met with extraordinary difficulties which lead us to believe in the innate depravity of human natnre. Then we understand that part of the Epistle of Paul to the Romans which describes clearly that man is comselled to cry with when he would emancipate himself from evil and bring himself to harmony with right. "When I would do good, evil is present with me." Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Then man ascertains that although he can to acertain extent mould his own character, and shape and purify and elevate his own affections, still he needs an influence from above to touch those bad elements of his nature and lift him up; so that he is dragged down by having his feet on the earth, by partaking of the animal natnre with those below, he may be lifted up by communion with the Holy Spirit; then he comes to understand the great primal evangelical truth: "Ye must be born again'

Observe, the higher a man's emotions the higher his character. For ordinary life, nothing more is needed than our animal and individual and social passions, bnt for the noble work of life, we need reverence for God, regard for right, and consecration to God. Observe, too, that the culture of a man is more seen in the natnre of his heart than anywhere else; and observe also that the heart is cultivated not when our affections are allowed to evaporate in dnmb show, but when our emotions are transmitted into life. Here is the great difference between that sentimentalism, of which I have spoken, and genuine Christian feeling. Paul was no sentimentalist, for he changed even his emotion into action. It is sometimes said, in complimentary terms of a preacher: "His sermon was remarkably eloquent; it drew tears from many eyes." A sermon, the effect of which should end in tears would certainly be a failnre. It is not emotion alone that is of value in the sight of God or of an intelligent man, but it is emotion translated into life.—Dr. E. O. Haven.

A Canticle.

BY JULIET C. MARSH.

When I can look at summer's light go down,
Across gray meadows that have lost their bloom,
And watch the leaves drop slow and dry and brown,
Throughout the chilliness of the autumn gloom,
When I can see all nature turn to dust,
And have no fear—knowing another spring
Will the old sweetness bring—
Then I have learned to trust.

When I can hie to, with willing, humble feet,
To bid a beggar enter from the rain;
When I can stoop, with human pity sweet,
To take a hand that has a human stain;
When I for every sinner have a plea,
Seeing the angel possible in each face,
And find in all some grace—
Then I have charity.

When I can trust for needs, both small and great,
And have no anxious thought for day or years;
When I can love a il men, and cast out hate
As utterly as I have cast out fear;
When I can through with all that life can give,
Of anything—the sweet and bitter done,
When all the thread is spun—
Then I have learned to live.

The Churchman.

Arm of the Church

Mr. Talmage says: 'that there are dangers attendant upon the evangelistic work is only to say of it what holds true of our Churches and their pulpits, and of religion itself. The most efficient arm of the Church in her work for Christ must ever be a ministry spotless in character, sound and clear in judgment, and no whit inferior in edncation to the highest standard of the day. She must be able to meet intelligently the assaults of cultured infidelity, as well as to win the hearts and affections of men. There seems to be a disposition in many quarters to depreciate the work of the ministry by unduly exalting the evangelistic work of earnest, emotional, but untrained men. This in the future cannot but react disastrously upon the Church. Many of these untrained men could preach a dozen able and eloquent sermons, or deliver a dozen evangelistic addresses, adapted to stir the crowd and touch many hearts, and yet be utterly unfitted by educational training for edifying and building up the Churches. It is in the hard, steady, and too little appreciated work of the pastor outside of his pulpit, crowned with the Spirit and blessing of God, the strength of the Church lies, more than in the evangelising appeal and eloquent address.

When a Glenkins man walked to Dumfries, in the long ago, to see a man hung, and the prisoner was respited, the disgusted traveler sat down in a corner and hoarsely inquired if his country was drifting back to barbarism.

The Timidity of Orators.

A WRITER of the Fortnightly Review asks whether artists, and especially orators, are peculiarly liable to the sensation of pain and to fear. He thinks that they are, and attributes it to an unusually sensitive organization. Peel is believed to have owed his death to being unable to bear an operation which a less sensitive man might have borne. An eminent operator described Bishop Wilberforce as a "bundle of nerves," and as the most sensitive patient he had ever known. Orators, as a rule, show a painful anxiety about their own speeches, and to some extent this unpleasantness seems a condition of their success. A junior counsel once congratulated Sir William Follet on his perfect composure in prospect of a great case. Sir William merely asked his friend to feel his hand, which was wet with anxiety. The late Lord Derby said that his principal speeches cost him two sleepless nights—one in which he was thinking what to say, the other in which he was lamenting what he might have said better. Cicero, according to Plutarch, "not only wanted courage in arms, but in his speaking also: he began timidly, and in many cases he scarcely left off trembling and shaking even when he got thoroughly into the current and substance of his speech."

A SILVER QUARTER WITH A HISTORY.—Fifteen years ago Mr. Louis German lost a silver twenty five cent piece upon one side of which he had engraved his name and place of business. The piece was bright and new when he engraved it, and wore it as a charm to his watch chain. As the trinket was of small value, it was of course forgotten soon after its loss and a iter a year or two Mr. German never expected to see it again. A few days ago an Indiana farmer drove in to New Albany to purchase goods, and in the money paid for them was the identical piece of coin bearing Mr. German's name. The gentleman (a New Albany merchant) who received the money came over to Louisville yesterday, and returned it to the owner. The piece bore upon its surface the appearance of having been in [illegible] no specie circulation during the last fifteen years, the finder of the quarter adopted it as an ornament for his guard or chain.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The New York Independent in a late issne gave us the following:

The Unitarian church in Brookfield has unanimously voted to substitute water for wine in the observance of the Lord's Supper, to avoid giving offence to any weak brother. While it must be an extremely weak brother that would be offended at some of the preparations that are now used as "sacramental wine," we do not see any inherent objection to the change. Had Christ lived in our land and age he probably would not have had wine on the table, and have found in water an equally appropriate symbol.

The St. Louis Advocate, commenting on this, says: Rather a singular inference this. On the same principle, we suppose, the Independent would conclude that had Paul lived in his day, instead of a little wine, he would have recommended Timothy to take a little Hostetter's or Drake's bitters, or McLean's strengthening cordial.

A CHILD'S BEAUTIFUL FAITH.—Birdie was only four years old, but she had already been taught that God loved her, and always took care of her. One day there was a very heavy thunder storm, and Birdies sisters and mamma even laid by their sewing, and drew their chairs into the middle of the room, pale and trembling with fear. But Birdie stood close by the window, watching the storm with bright eyes.

'O mamma, ain't that bu'ful!' she cried clapping her hands with delight, as a vivid flash of lightning burst from the black clouds, and the thunder pealed and rattled over their heads.

'It is God's voice, Birdie,' said mamma, and her own voice trembled.

'He talks very loud, don't he mamma! S'pose it's so deaf Betsey can hear, and the other dear, folks?'

'O Birdie! dear come straight away from that window,' said one of her sisters, whose cheeks were blanched with fear.

'What for?' asked Birdie.

'Oh! because the lightning is so sharp and it thunders so loud.'

But Birdie shook her head, and looking over her shoulder with a happy smile on her face, lisped out:

'If it funders, let it funder?' Tis God makes it funder, and he'll take care of me. I aint a bit afraid to hear God talk, Maizy.'—S. S. Times.

Boswell, dining one day with Dr. Johnson, asked him if he did not think that a good cook was more essential to the community than a good poet. "I don't suppose," said the doctor, "that there's a dog in town but what thinks so."

No Limit to Prayer

"Come boldly to the throne of grace," not irreverently, but without fear and doubting, and in holy, childlike directness. Ah! we need bold praying in these days. Out with the wretched dogmatism, which, ever speaking against dogma, is yet ever formulating some dogma as to the limits and place of prayer! Let the spirit which prompts such speaking prevail, and the book of the Acts of the Apostles will stand for only a tale of the past. "Bold praying," personal, like Baxter's, when he stained the walls of his study with praying breath; social, like that of John Livingstone and the company of brethren who spent the whole night in prayer for that blessing which, on the day following, descended in a plentiful shower; like that of the disciples towards the close of this chapter, when the place in which they were assembled was shaken. May there be such shakings this week in Glasgow and throughout the land! Christian brethren, pray more and more boldly. Then should we have more of what old Gurnall has called "the double action of the lungs," the air sucked in by prayer breathed forth again in praise. With controversies in the Church, and the great battle between the kingdoms of light and darkness becoming ever more intense, how necessary to be bold. "It is time for Thee, Lord, to work!"—Rev. Dr. J. Marshall Long.

THE National Baptist, of Philadelphia, says:—During the religious interest pervading the city, we have known of many cases of drunkards who have been reformed and converted; not a few fallen women have been brought back to virtue; profane swearers have been taught to reverence the Holy Name; skeptics have confessed that there is a God; backsliders of many years sliding have been reclaimed. But if any instance has occurred in which a mean, small, pernicious, parsimonious man has been converted and made into a large, whole souled Christian, we have yet to hear the joyful tidings. All goes to show what we have long believed and felt, that the covetous man is often in greater danger of hell than the openly vicious.

A gaze on beauty, [illegible] my self deformed. I admire the sight, and may yet dwell in darkness; but if the light of the countenance of God rests upon me I shall become like unto him; the lineaments of his visage will be on me, and the great outlines of his attributes will be mine. Oh, wondrous glass, which thus renders the beholder lovely! Oh, admirable mirror, which reflects not self with its imperfectness, but gives a perfect image to those that are uncomely.—Spurgeon.

When all that is worldly turns to dross around us, books only retain their steady value. When friends grow cold, and the converse of intimates languishes into vapid civility and commonplace, these only continue the unaltered countenance of better days, and cheer us with that true friendship which never deceived hope or deserted sorrow.—Washington Irving.

Action has its claims. Duty, done in hard and difficult ways, tests and proves the life that now is. And yet there is a time when the highest duty is to be still—to withdraw from the throng, to court solitude, and invite the thoughts which are uttered by the still, small voice.

The movement of duty, under the influence of holy love of God, constitutes what we call good works.—Erskine.

Scientific.

Pere Secchi has just published the results of his examination of solar protuberances and spots from April 23 to June 28, 1875. He finds that the daily number of protuberances and spots steadily diminished. The great metallic eruptions ceased when the large spots disappeared—the protuberances diminished in height. The faculæ and spots disappeared from the poles and were confined to the zone of the equator. These observations are in every way confirmatory of the views of Dreyer, Steward and others, that there is a very close connection between the violence of a solar disturbance and the size of the sun spots. It may appear, on further study, that the connection is just as close between the solar changes and the peculiar and long continued rain of the past spring and summer.

Few bodies are more easily electrified than collodion. With the least friction by the hand the membrane adheres to the fingers. If a collodion sheet fixed, like a flag, to a glass tube, and waved in dry and hot air, it is electrified. Other uses of collodion sheets, here mentioned, are in experiments on polarization of light on colors of thin films, or daguerreotypy, on vibrations in acoustics. M. Gripon prepares these sheets by dissolving 1.5 to 1.7 grains gun cotton in a mixture of 50 grains alcohol and 50 grains ether. The collodion is poured on a glass plate after the latter has been breathed upon so as to receive a coating of moisture. When, after some minutes, the collodion is dry, the plate is put in water; and a sheet of paper having been applied and attached to the collodion by the edges, the film is drawn off with the paper.

The remarkable and unique collection of the Tuscan valley remains of extinct Etrusc quadrupeds, formerly belonging to Sir Antonio Cocchi, of Strafordle Point has been acquired by the British Museum. This magnificent series of specimens consists of elephants, rhinoceroses, deer, oxen, etc., which have been discovered during the last thirty years in the Etrurian marshes. It is stated to contain remains of no less than nine extinct elephants, to enable to two species—the mammoth Elephas primigenius and the E. antiquus—there are represented of every age and size; of eighty-six remains of rhinoceroses of three species—R. megarhinus, R. leptorhinus, and R. techorhinus; of some five hundred specimens, constituting fully one half of the collection of various ruminants, as the stag bison or ox, including seven examples of the great Irish elk and fifty of the red deer. The Thames valley hippopotamus and the British lion are also both represented.

Do Something, Young Men.

A life of idleness in any one is a crime. If education and wealth chance to unite as the lot of a young man, still an active and laborious life is necessary for the formation of character, and to enable him to meet his responsibilities to God and to society.—Another delusion to be overcome is that which predestinates educated young men to professional life They are doubtless fitted for this class of pursuits above others by the advantages they have enjoyed; but with all their learning they may possibly do better at something else. Education is not wasted when its possessor learns and follows a trade, or devotes himself to agriculture or other practical affairs. Better be a first-class carpenter, a good machinist, a tolerable farmer, than a tenth-rate lawyer or doctor. Better far, for many who languish as teachers in the school room, and fret with dyspepsia at the counting desk, to be out in the wholesome air, and using both muscle and brain, as the God of nature designed. Education alike qualifies for all pursuits, and on the other hand it qualifies for none. The nature of the man,—mental aptitudes, tastes and temptation, as well as the physical constitution are to be taken into an account in choosing a vocation. In the selection of a calling, it is a fundamental condition, that what is injurious to mankind should be avoided. No one has a right, and no law can confer a right for anybody to pursue a business which augments human misery. As to usefulness to the race, it will be a question of relative degrees to be settled by each one for himself. Every one cannot be equally useful in every profession. It is no reason that because the Christian ministry is the most sacred calling that every young man can be most useful in it. The youth whom nature educates, and meaning for him, better fitted for mercantile life, or mechanics, or lawyer, or merchantile, or any of the trades, is foolish to enter the ministry under the plea that he can do more good in that sacred calling. The special bent should be ascertained and followed. Too much do young men allow their calling to be shaped by circumstances. How often it happens that this or that pursuit is adopted simply because it is the prevailing one in the community. The mind, like the water, takes its color from the soil through which it flows—and like the flesh of animals, derives its texture and flavor from the food which has nonrished it. But young men of culture should have nerve and courage to think for themselves in all those matters. But let the calling or pursuit of life be what it may, start out in life with the conviction rooted and grounded in you that there is no excellence without application. With this conviction, and resting under the smiles of a beneficent Providence, no young man need despair of success.

The Centennial

This is a gala week for the Methodists of North Carolina. They gather in the Metropolitan city of the State to celebrate the birthday of organized Methodism, to render thanks to the kind Providence whose loving care has been around it and has enabled it to accomplish so much in the way of spreading scriptural holiness over these lands, and to invoke the continued presence of the Spirit.

They are mistaken who imagine that the meeting this week is a "glorification meeting" prompted by a boastful, arrogant feeling—that the Methodists of the State, thinking more highly of themselves than they ought to think, and puffed up with pride of conquest, are gathering to air their vanity and voice their triumphs to the world. It is true that our Church has been greatly blessed in the century that is closing and feels grateful for all that she has received. But it is not to boast of the work of men that our people come together this week, but to celebrate the goodness of God in crowning that work with such glorious results as have attended it for the past century.

It is the expectation of our people, certainly their ardent desire, that this year may be memorable, not only as the year in which we celebrate the past, but as one in which the Church shall renew her youth and gather up her strength for future work: as a year in which the preaching of the word and the prayers of our people may be followed by a work of grace—a revival of religion that shall bring countless thousands into the fold of Christ. We pray that the meetings this week may be the beginning of the great work—that the Spirit may descend in power now, and that its light and warmth may radiate throughout our Church and State.

A Letter from Bishop Pierce

The following letter appeared in the Southern Christian Advocate last week. It will be read with interest by our people. The suggestions of the Bishop on the subject of growing cotton in the South, are eminently practical, and we sincerely wish the farmers, who may chance to read the article, may profit by it. Our farmers make a great mistake in discarding the growth of grain, for that of cotton: Here is the letter:

"At San Antonio I had a delightful home with Mr. Bennett and family. They showed me great kindness. The divine benediction rest upon them.

Conference over, I left San Antonio with brethren Joice and Harris, for Seguin and San Marcos. To preach at each of these places, was my fare for the ride. The country through which I passed was beautiful. I had seen much of it before, and was struck with the change in the general appearance. Farms have multiplied—timber has increased astonisningly Mesquite bushes now cover what, a few years ago, was naked pairie. They are a convenience as to fire wood, but add immensely to the labor of preparing land for cultivation, and subtract from the general beauty of the country by obstructing vision. Notwithstanding the unceasing flow of immigration to Texas, such is the vastness of country, that a passing traveler sees no sign of it save in the growth of the old towns and the location of new ones. "All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full"—and the other half of the text will also apply—"unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again." True, more come in than go out; and the increase of population is constant, but hardly visible, outside the cities, towns, and villages. Texas is an empire in area and capacity, and the possibilities of her future are magnificent. Among those who feel settled, it is amusing to see how vitally they have identified themselves with the country and its interests. They will resent a criticism upon the soil, climate, water, population, politics, religion, or any Texan peculiarity, as quickly as though you had found fault with them or their families. I like the spirit. There is power in it. It can be turned to good account. I hope the Conferences will avail themselves of it to build up their institutions. The glory of Texas is the patrimony of every citizen—an undivided estate—it all belongs to each. Every well satisfied Texan (and their name is legion) is perfectly amazed that the whole country does not empty itself out there at once: for he thinks we are all bound to come. To him it seems a simple choice between plenty and starvation: or at least, between poverty and wealth. We who dwell in these old Eastern States are objects of pity. They are sorry for us, and wonder at our stupidity and infatuation. The preachers and people teased my little traveling companion, George, very much about the poor land, red hills, and gullies of old Georgia. He was greatly troubled, for Georgia was his beau ideal of a State, and Sparta his standard of a town. He had many debates with the old and the young, and the big tales they told him about the productions of the country rather nonplussed him. But he was a close observer, and had been with me to several missionary meetings—heard the reports at Conference; so when hard pressed by a crowd, who were having their own fun out of him, he silenced them all by saying, "You may laugh about the little cotton stalks, the red hills, and the gullies; but when it comes to a collection, we can beat you all to pieces." (Moral—brag less or give more.)

These letters will make a book if I take things in detail. I must hurry along, for I have to cross Texas two or three times. Leaving San Marcos, I came to Austin and preached at night; and after a day's sojourn with my old friends, took the train for Sherman on my way to Paris. Reached Sherman after midnight and found the town on fire, or rather, largely burned down. All was confusion and excitement. I had an appointment at eleven o'clock, but thought the circumstances so unpropitious, I was inclined to back out; but many came in from the country, and insisted on hearing a sermon. So, amid smoke and cinders and smouldering fires, with a fair congregation, I tried to comfort them by expounding promise and Providence. It was good to be there.

Late in the evening a crowd of us left for Paris. Arriving about bedtime, I was assigned to pleasant quarters, and soon found rest in sleep. The Conference here was brief, pleasant, and profitable. This territory up and down Red River, back to the Trinity, is a splendid farming country. The crops of wheat, corn, and cotton, were fine; and yet here money was scarce as everywhere else. "Hard times" was the cry. Verily King Cotton, like other kings, is consuming the substance of the people. Prosperity, in this article of production it seems, "tendeth to poverty." A very heavy crop has been made, and yet the people are on the "ragged edge" of insolvency The more we make, the poorer we grow. And yet the despairing bet is laid on another crop, in the face of ten years' unbroken uniformity of results. The heathen adage, "Whom the gods mean to destroy they first make mad," is being actualized. No soil, no fertilizor, no seasons, will save the country on the line of its present agricultural policy. The result is just as disastrous on the virgin soil of Texas as on the wasted lands of Georgia The man who loses money in making ten bags of cotton, will lose yet more in the production of a hundred. This is the fact in experience, in spite of theory and figuring. Forgive this episode, for I am really distressed at the prospects of the country, financially. Bad government may destroy us and our property, but no legislation can lift us out of the present "slough of despond," without home supplies. Bread and meat must be made—not bought. The great burden of expense lies right there The stomach costs more than the back. Make bread, raise meat, live at home, be self-supporting. Neither inflation, nor contraction, nor the financial blank in the coming platform will save us. Help must come out of the ground, in breadstuffs. You may go to Texas—all cotton will swamp you: you may stay in Georgia and grow fat and rich on peas, potatoes, wheat and corn. Let us fill our garners with all manner of store; then our oxen will be strong to labor, our sheep will bring forth thousands, then there will "be no breaking in nor going out" in quest of food—plenty and peace will hush "complaining in our streets," and we shall be a happier and better people.

From the Churches.

THE SALISBURY DISTRICT.

MESSRS EDITORS: I have closed my first round of Quarterly Meetings on the Salisbury District, and I am glad to say these meetings have been of great interest to me, and very profitable to the Church.

Twelve out of the fifteen pastoral charges on this District have new preachers. This is an unusually large number of changes for one year, but various causes operated to make them all necessary. These brethren reached their appointments in good time, were kindly received by the people, and entered promptly upon their work. This was well.

The different Boards of Stewards have, in the main, shown considerable liberality in their assessments, and if collections are made in time, the preachers will be better supported this year than they have been since the war; and, perhaps since the organization of the Church in this part of the State. This is cause for congratulation—indeed for devout thankfulness to God: for the cause of Christ has always suffered great embarrassment for the want of a more adequately supported ministry to labor in this District.

The Quarterly Conferences were well attended on most of the appointments—generally from 20 to 30 officials were present, and the business was pleasantly and harmoniously transacted.

The congregations both on Saturdays and Sundays were unusually large, and great interest was taken in the word preached.

The communion service was held whenever the weather would admit of it, and was frequently a means of great spiritual comfort to the people of God Between 20 and 25 persons professed conversion and joined the Church during the quarter.

There are 10 new churches in course of erection on the District—some are nearly completed, and all of them will be during the year. They will be much larger and of a better class of churches than ever built in this section in former years. The one in this place is of brick—42 by 68 feet, with a pulpit recess, and when completed will be an honor to the congregation, and an ornament to the town.

The spirit of "Centennialism", has not shown itself much among the people yet but I trust it will soon. When that "great tidal wave" that Dr. Burkhead speaks of shall start out from Raleigh next week, it will doubtless reach these higher shores and flood us all. We are ready for it. May it come in the might of heaven.

I am truly sorry that I cannot attend the Centennial at Raleigh. My son, John Fletcher, has been entirely helpless for 16 days with inflamatory rheumatism, and has demanded my constant attention both day and night. The most favorable turn in the case would not justify me in leaving him all next week. So I am compelled to forego the pleasures of the occasion. I trust the blessings of God will be richly bestowed upon our cause, and the interests of our Church and Colleges will be greatly promoted.

D. R. BARROW.

State ville, N. C. March 16th, 1876.

We shall be pleased to welcome into our sanctum the preachers and delegates attending upon the Centennial Mass meeting, in this city, during the present week.

We will give in our next a general outline of the doings of the Centennial mass meetings. We sincerely wish every Methodist in the State could be present to enjoy the exercises of this, the centenary of North Carolina Methodism.

The Methodist Church at Ninety-six, North Carolina, now in process of completion, is to be dedicated by Bishop Wightman on Sunday, March 26. In addition to the Bishop, Brother Manning Brown, Presiding Elder of the Cokesbury District, is expected to be present.

Dallas Circuit.

The Dallas Circuit, of which I am preacher in charge, is in the county of Gaston, bounded as follows: On the North and East by the South Fork River; South by Air-Line Railway, and North by the waters of Beaverdam. There are two Railroads within the bounds of my circuit, Air-Line and Narrow Gauge All of my appointments are stationed near these roads.

Dallas, where I now reside, is the county seat of Gaston county, and near the center of my work. A very quiet, pleasant little village; and every good grain market. This place is building up. Some new houses building, and others are being repaired. The Narrow Gauge will be completed to this place soon. It will be a great benefit to the citizens of Dallas and farmers generally. Dallas is in the midst of a grain growing country, and when the railroad reaches this place, the farmers can get ready sale for their produce. Take Gaston county as a whole, and it is one of the wealthiest counties in the State. There are fine farming lands [illegible] waters of South Fork, Beaverdam, Indian Creek, Crowder's Creek and Crook and others.

So you see that the preacher of Dallas circuit is in the bounds of a bread and meat country; and notwithstanding the financial crisis there is a good deal of greenbacks passing about Methodism is keeping pace with the times—it is looking up. We have a neat little church in Dallas. The membership numbers seventy. Two years ago it numbered 30 We have a weekly prayer meeting, which is well attended.

I have been trying to do all I can for the cause of Christ, and for our beloved Methodism since I have been here, and I do thank God that my labors have not been in vain. I am looking and praying for a gracious out pouring of the Holy Spirit upon the people this year, and I trust we shall have it.

I am among a kind christian hearted people—one that tries to make their pastor feel at home. They have been very kind to me and family. May the good Lord reward them for all their deeds of kindness!

You see that these people love the ADVOCATE, as I still send you new subscribers. I am trying to circulate it as much as possible. I find that the paper is a great help to me.

I hope you will have a fine time at your approaching Centennial in the city of Raleigh. I cannot attend but I shall be surprised if the ADVOCATE is not full of Centennial news.

Religious Intelligence.

Bishop Keener is visiting the missions of the M. E. Church, South, in Mexico

The meetings in New York held in the Hippodrome, by Mr. Moody, are attended by thousands and seem daily to increase in spiritual power.

A convention has been called of the ministers in Tennessee Conference favoring the forming of separate conferences on the color line to meet at Dickson, Tenn., April 4th.

IT was reported at the last Preachers' Meeting of Richmond, Virginia, that there had been 400 conversions in our Churches in that city since last Conference.

Dr. SUMMERS answers the question whether a minister should marry a couple, one of whom is divorced, Yes, if the divorce was obtained on Scriptural ground.

Within the last five years seven hundred Buddhist temples in Japan have been converted to other uses than for worship.

The Irish Court of Exchequer has decided that money left to priests for them to say masses for the repose of the soul of the testator is a private legacy, and therefore chargeable with duty.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference of local preachers will be held at Rutherford College, North Carolina, in August, 1876. A camp-meeting will be held in connection with the Conference, at which one of the Bishops is expected to attend.

The Missionary Advocate for February has a cut of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church in Rome. This is the first Protestant church built for the natives in that city. It is in an excellent location being near the center of the city.

The great revival continues in Scotland. In Glasgow, January 15, a meeting of the ministers was held to welcome Maj. Cole, and wife and daughter, who are conducting meetings after the manner of Moody and Sankey. On the following day the Prince of Wales' Theatre was crowded and Maj. Cole spoke on the Prodigal Son. Many professed Christ.

Ministers and Delegates, Notice!

CENTENNIAL NOTICE.

To the Ministers, Members and Friends of the M. E. Church South, in North Carolina: We expect a "grand gathering" at our Centennial Celebration in Raleigh. The exercises will begin Tuesday, March 21st, at 10 o'clock, A. M. in Metropolitan Hall, and will be continued until Sunday night, March 26th, 1876. Three of our honored Bishops will be present. Rev. Dr. Wadsworth of Mobile, Ala., and Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Richmond Va., former pastors of Edenton Street Church, are expected to be with us, with many other distinguished ministers and laymen whose names are not in our programme. We expect to do all in our power to make the occasion a great blessing to the church and State. That we may not be disappointed, we beg you all to unite with us in humble, devout prayer to Almighty God for His benediction upon us.

Dear Brethren, please note the following points, viz: 1. We expect to entertain all the ministers of the State, who may attend, free of charge. Let all those, who expect to be here, notify me at once.

2. All our hotels and private boarding houses will entertain those who may come to the Celebration, at greatly reduced rates.

3. We expect all the R. R. Companies in the State to sell tickets for round trip at one fall fare. This arrangement is not yet perfected, but we hope it will be in due time.

L. S. BURKHEAD,

A case came up for hearing before Judge Kerr at Greensboro, lately, in which he had received a fee several years ago as counsel. He refused to try the case as Judge although the lawyers on both sides were willing and anxious that he should hear it. He guards the Bench from the chance even, of showing partiality.

R H. Dana, Jr., has been appointed by the President to succeed Shenck as minister to England, but his confirmation by the Senate has been delayed on account of a charge to the effect that he was guilty some years ago of literary piracy.

ARREST OF GEN. COX.—Gen. W. R. Cox, of Raleigh, is Chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee, and as such telegraphed to the authorities of Robeson county last summer during the contest over the election, "to hold Robeson for the Democrats." Last week Dr. R. M Norment, one of the candidates during the Convention Campaign, made an affidavit before U. S. Commissioner Cassidy in Wilmington as a basis for a warrant against Gen. Cox for conspiring to defeat the will of the people of Robeson and obstructing them in their rights of suffrage. On Thursday last Gen. Cox was arrested by a Marshal and carried to Wilmington for preliminary trial before the Commissioner. The arrest has produced much indignation in the City and is regarded as the beginning of a malicious prosecution.

MIXED.—The Daily NEWS of this city republished a letter which appeared in the Petersburg INDEX-APPEAL, containing charges against Dr. W. H. Howerton, Secretary of State, which he claims are libellous. He has brought suit against several stockholders in the NEWS for libel, laying his damages at $50,000. He also wrote a card denying the charges and published the same in the Daily SENTINEL. The card contained matter which Col. Walter Clark claims to be libellous and a warrant was issued at his instance against Dr. Howerton and Josiah Turner, Jr., Editor of the SENTINEL, for conspiring to libel him..

A Greene county negress, formerly a slave in the Best family, died last week at the age of 100 years.

The steam saw mill of W. H. Britton in Belvoir township, Pitt county, was burned recently, by an incendiary it is thought. Insured for $2000.

Johnny Arthur was crushed to death between two cars at Newbern last week, while playing around the cars in company with several other boys.

J. E. Parker, who has visited some place in the State as soliciting agent for Frank Leslie's Publications is pronounced a fraud. Beware of him. He collected about $75 in Wilson and neither chromos or papers have been heard from.

Efforts will soon be made to rebuild the court house of Greene county. The estimate for rebuilding the present walls is $4,000. There is talk of the moving the court house—some say to Hookerton, while others want it at Speight's Bridge. Col. Owen W. Jones who lives in about the center of the county, offers to build a court house for the county on his own land, at his own expense, unless the rebuilding can be effected at Snow Hill without expense to the tax-payers.

The Winston SENTINEL has in its possession a gourd with a history. It is 17 inches long and 2½ inches in diameter. It was brought from Albermarle county, Va., in 1775 to Stokes county and carried by Charles Davis during the entire Revolutionary struggle, being used as a powder horn. It was in the battles of Cowpens, Guilford Court House, and other engagements in the South up to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. It belongs now to Chas. F. Davis of Forsyth county, a great grand son of the Revolutionary hero.

Several large suits against the McDowell estate of which Chief Justice Pearson and Col. N. W. Woodfin were executors, were for tasil last week at Morganton. All the lawyers in that section were engaged in the cases, as well as Hon. W. N. H. Smith, Judge Fowle, Gen. Barringer, Col. Armfield and Col. Folk.

A MITCHELL COUNTY MAN TUMBLES DOWN A MOUNTAIN WITH HIS INTESTINES WRAPPED AROUND HIM AND STILL LIVES.—One Francis Tolley stabbed Thomas Davis in Mitchell a few days ago, and let out his intestines. Davis was carried home on a stretcher improvised of poles and a rough mountain. The Independent says: The knot in the blanket became untied and let Davis fall. He tumbled a hundred yards down the mountain, through bushes and over rocks with his intestines wrapped around him. Davis still lives and is doing well. Go to Mitchell, if you want health, vigor and a power to endure.

Judge Seymour will hold the next term of Orange Court at which Mr. Swepson is to be tried.

Bel-knap (and not Belk-nap) is the way it is pronounced.

Gen Sherman says that "Beauregard is a very pleasant gentleman" and that he "likes him personally."

Joseph Jones, Esq., of this city is engaged largely in the manufacture of Shingles. He is selling at low figures and buyers will find it to their interest to purchase of him. His place of business is at Mr. R. H. Page's saw mill, in North-western portion of this city.

ALTHOUGH MANY ARE PREDISPOSED TO LUNG TROUBLES FROM BIRTH, yet even such may escape Consumption or other Pulmonary or Bronchial diseases, if due care and watchfulness be observed, and all exciting causes are promptly treated as they arise. It is in these cases Dr. Jayne's Expectorant exercises its most beneficial effects, and has produced the largest proportion of its cures. Besides promptly removing Coughs and Colds, which, when left to themselves, are the immediate causes of tuberculous development, this standard remedy allays any inflammation which may exist, and by promoting easy expectoration, cleanses the lungs of the substances which clog them up, and which rapidly destroy when suffered to remain.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

We invite special attention to the following advertisements:

— For dry goods go to Petty & Jones and W. H. & R. S. Tucker.

— For Clothing, first class [illegible] go to J. P. Gulley's.

— Pescud, Lee & Co., popular druggists, will sell you goods in their line first class and cheap.

— If you want groceries of every description and first class, at bottom prices, go to Leach Bros.

—Rev. L. Branson, of Fayetteville St., keeps on hand a full supply of books, stationery &c. For such goods call on him.

—For hardware, stoves farming implements, &c go to the mammoth establishment of Briggs & Sons.

—JAS. T. Petteway, Commission Merchant and Merchandise Broker, of Wilmington, advertises his business in the ADVOCATE. See his card.

— For furniture, we cordially commend you to W. H. Morris & Co., one door above J. C. Palmer's on Fayetteville Street.

— For watches, silverware, and jewelry of every variety, go to J. C. Palmer, so well and favorably known in the east and throughout the State.

— For saddles, bridles and harness of every description go to W. B. Hutchings. He is a high-toned Christian gentleman, and conducts business in a fair and satisfactory way. If you need anything in his line you cannot do better than to buy of him.

— B. H. Woodell advertises for sale all kinds of groceries at the lowest market price. Persons visiting the Centennial should call and examine his stock before buying elsewhere. He has a good assortment of choice goods in his line.

—A Creech, Esq., has just returned from North with a large and varied stock of dry goods. In addition to his private trade, he has opened a large wholesale department for the sale of staple dry goods, hats, boots, and shoes. Give him a call.

— We cannot too highly express our admiration of a new lamp for sale by C. A. Hart, on Market Square. It is really the only safety lamp we have ever seen. Persons attending the Centennial during this week should by all means call and see the lamp. Mr. Hart is also a large dealer in all kinds of hardware, and everything usually kept in a first class hardware store —Old Silk Hats done up in the latest style; also Felt Hats cleansed, so as to render them as va uable as when new—Messrs Rishel & Miller, from Philadelphia, are the gentlemen who are doing this work in the city, and are stopping at the Central Hotel, room No. 13, on 3d floor. Those having hats to renovate will find it greatly to their interest to call on these gentlemen. They can, for a small sum, take an old silk hat, which is usually thrown away, and so shape and renovate it as to make it look good as well as when new. Their work is giving entire satisfaction.

—R. P. Howell, Esq., is a young man of energy and business tact, who commencing in life as a small dealer in merchandise, has opened a first class tailoring establishment on Fayetteville street. Mr. Farris is with him as the chief tailor and cutter and gives satisfaction and good fits at low prices

—Be sure to see C. C. Cawson's establishment where is kept the greatest variety of window-shades, house ornaments, brackets, pictures, picture frames &c &c. He is a young man of merit and has, besides much tact in his line of business, marked inventive talent which he has employed in contriving several useful inventions Give him a call.

—D. S. Whitt & Bro. the popular merchants of Fayetteville street have in store and for sale, a large assortment of ready made clothing. The senior member of the firm has just returned from the North where he purchased goods at panic prices. They will sell you the best article of clothing on reasonable terms, and guarantee satisfaction.

—We call special attention to the new advertisement of Nat. L. Brown. For musical instruments, call on him. He is the agent for the celebrated Estey Organ and can sell cheaper than the same class of instruments can be bought by outside parties in the Northern market. He also has a very large assortment of children's carriages, and a full line of the first class goods usually kept in a variety store. Our friends visiting the Centennial this week should call and see for themselves.

Mr. J. C. S. Lumsden advertises a large stock of stoves and house and kitchen furnishing goods. Mr. Lumsden is a thorough going business man, full of stir and energy, and ready at all times to sell large or small bills at small prices. At the last State Fair several medals for best stoves were awarded to Mr. Lumsden. One is "Acorn" Stove especially he has received a large run. He is a Methodist and deserves patronage from all.

Mrs. Martha Washington Patrick was the daughter of Thomas Buck, and was born at the old homestead on Reedy Fork, her father's residence, in Guilford county, N. C., May 1, 1801, and died in Danville, Va., Feb. 25, 1876.

In 1821, she was united in marriage with Whitson Patrick, who died when she was in the 32nd year of her age, leaving her with two small children. At the death of her husband, she was left with but little of the goods of this world, and although she had been reared in the midst of wealth and luxury, her only bequeathment of character—trained to receive pecuniary assistance, when in God's providence she was widowed and unprovided for resources, by the exercise of industry and economy she reared and educated her children, who survive to revere her memory and her worth.

In the 55th year of her age, Sister Patrick professed religion in Christ, and for more than half a century adorned the doctrine of God her Saviour by a consistent life, and a holy conversation. She was one of the original six members who first organized the Methodist Church in Greensboro, N. C., and from the hour that she connected herself with the church to the day of her death, she gave no room to cause the influence of her example, her prayers, and zealous efforts to do good in any manner that was known to be approved by her Lord, to suffer in the least degree. Seeing the light and resting from its reflection, when it proceeded from the house of a friend whom she especially loved, she walked toward the steps to get a better view of the fire, and making one step too far in the building the yard, her system received a severe shock and injury which soon resulted in death. Thus her kindness of heart and her anxiety for others, so prominent in her life, were sadly illustrated even in her death.

Cut off thus suddenly, she had no opportunity to leave any dying testimony. Nor do we need any. Her life furnishes to day the most impressive and eloquent eulogy that can possibly be framed. It was all with Christ to God, and dying we know that God took her. Her influence still survives as the golden imprint of the setting sun. Her example is bequeathed to us as a legacy of priceless value. It is the precious alabaster box, the rich fragrance of her piety to shine upon the community and will linger and cling to over our hearts and natures.

May God help us to follow in her holy Christ and may the God of the Mother now comfort and bless the children who survive.

Want of Confidence

Trade is depressed and the industries of the whole country flags." Ask the cause and you are told it is due to "want of confidence." Ask the few who have not used DR. TUFT'S HAIR DYE, and they say it have no confidence in it! I have been humbugged by such articles." We can overcome the following testimony from parties of undoubted veracity:

HAWKINSVILLE, Ga., October 30, 1869.
DR. W. H. TUFT:

DEAR SIR:—I consider your Hair Dye a triumph. Our barbers pronounce it superior to all others.

Yours truly,

A MAN OF A THOUSAND.

A CONSUMPTIVE CURED.—When death was hourly expected from CONSUMPTION, all remedies having failed, accidentally led to a discovery whereby Dr. H. James cured his only child with a preparation of CANADA HEMP. He now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. There is not a single symptom of consumption that it does not dissipate—Night Sweats, Irritation of the Nerves, Difficult Expectoration, Sharp Pains in the Lungs, Nausea at the Stomach, Incrustation of the Bowels, and Wasting of the muscles. Address Craddock & Co. 1032 Race Street, Philadelphia, Pa., giving name of this paper.

MAKE YOUR OWN FERTILIZERS.

Farmers save from 200 to 400 per cent by buying the

CHEMICAL FERTILIZER;

equal to the best Guano at a cost of only

TEN DOLLARS PER TON.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

MR. WM SIMPSON, Sr.: I am so much pleased with the result of the Fertilizer I made last spring of the chemicals which I purchased of you, that I took my pen and the farming community to say what I think of it. I used it side by side with the "Star" at the rate of 40 lbs of the home-made to 200 lbs of the "Star," per acre.

The growth of the home made was earlier, matured earlier and made more per acre.

If this can be of any service, use it, as I am fully satisfied of the merits of your fertilizer.

Very respectfully,

Signed, G. I. BANKS,

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 24, 1875.

This is to certify that Dr J. J. Penny, and A. Y. Bailey, after using the preparation of Guano recommended by Mr. Wm. Simpson, cheerfully state "that we gave it a fair test alongside of "Zell's Ammoniated Super Phosphate" "Bradley's Seaford and Super Phosphate Star Guano," also "Phelps" and pronounce it equal if not superior to either, and the consideration of cost makes it by far more economical. We therefore recommend it to the consideration of farmers.

Respectfully &c.

Signed, J. A. J. PENNY,
A. Y. BAILEY.

Call on or address Wm. Simpson Druggist, 31 Fayetteville St. Raleigh N. C., for receipts and mode of preparation; also for many other certificates.

Children's Column.

Time Enough.

Two little squirrels out in the sun,
One gathered nuts, the other hand none;
"Time enough yet," his constant refrain,
"Summer is still only just on the wane."

Listen, my child, while I tell you his fate:
He roused him at last, but he roused him too late;
Down fell the snow from a pitiless cloud,
And gave little squirrel a spotless white shroud.

Two little boys in a school-room were placed;
One always perfect, the other disgraced;
"Time enough yet for my learning," he said,
"I will climb by and by from the foot to the head."

Listen, my darling, their locks are turned gray;
One as a governor sitteth to-day;
The other a pauper looks out at the door
Of the almshouse, and idles his days as of yore.

Two kinds of people we meet every day:
One is at work, the other at play.
Living uncared for, dying unknown—
The busiest hive hath ever a drone.

Tell me, my child, if the squirrels have taught
The less on I longed to implant in your thought;
Answer me this, and my story is done,
Which of the two would you be, little one?

[Selected for the Children's Column by F. B. J.]

Capt. Headly Vicars, when under deep conviction of sin, one morning came to his table almost broken hearted and bowed to the dust with a sense of his guilt—"Oh wretched man that I am," he repeated to himself, at the same time glancing at his Bible which lay open before him. His eyes suddenly rested on that beautiful verse, "The blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin" Then, said he, it can cleanse me from mine, and he instantly believed with his heart unto righteousness and was filled with peace and joy. From that time to the hour in which he lay bathed in his own blood in the trenches before Sabastopol, he never doubted his forgiveness, or God's ability or willingness to pardon the chief of sinners.

Faith has no merit, in it is simply the hand of a beggar held out to receive a gift It is a guilty sinner accepting a free pardon at the hands of a gracious God.

A minister was trying to comfort a dying woman who was in deep distress about her soul, and who on account of her viciousness said she could see no room in the plan of redeeming love for herself and could not therefore be persuaded to believe in Jesus.

Thinking that she hardly understood what was meant by "believing" in Jesus, the minister said to her: Can you take the Son of God at His word? You say you repent of your sins, and has he not said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and I will give you rest." Now will you make him out a liar by doubting his own word. A smile as from Heaven played upon her pale cheek, as she earnestly said, is it that! Is it "just resting on his word!" Oh yes I can do that—I will do that; and so she did and found joy and peace, and so, dear reader, you may at this very moment experience the same blessing.

Where Are Your Sins!

A young girl came to see her pastor with regard to the welfare of her soul:

"Are you saved," he asked, "or are you only trying to be saved?"

"I am trying," she sadly replied.

"How are trying?"

"I am praying and reading the Bible and going to church and striving to keep the commandments."

"How are you succeeding?"

"Not very well," she sorrowfully answered.

"Do you not see that in all this trying you are leaving Christ out as truly as if there were no Saviour who has come down from heaven to deliver us from sin and its dreadful consequences?"

"O I believe in Christ!" she quickly responded.

"You do! Let me see. Do you believe that Christ died upon the cross?"

"Yes, I know it."

"How do you know it? you were not there to see him die."

"I know it because God says so in his word."

"Do you believe then whatever God says in his word?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, why did Christ die upon the cross?"

"He died for our sin."

"You are correct, for God says over and over again that he died for our sins. Your sins were upon him, therefore, when he was nailed to the cross—were they?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where is Christ now?"

"He is up in heaven."

"You are right again, for God repeatedly tells us this in his word. Are your sins upon him?"

"No, sir."

"Observe: Your sins were upon him once when he was nailed to the cross; and to day he is in heaven without them. Where are your sins?"

She looked down for a few moments in deep thought, and then, raising her eyes, a sweet smile played over her face as she said—

"They must be in the grave"

Rural and Domestic.

Gravel as a Mulch.

In the spring of 1870 I had the superintendence of planting some two hundred trees of various kinds in and around our public grounds. The spring and succeeding summer was one of unusual and excessive drouth. About eighty of these trees—white elm, soft maple, American linden, catalpa, etc.—were planted on the sidewalks for street trees: they were on an average ten and fourteen feet high. They were planted in a rather poor clay soil (mixed in planting with a rich, black sandy loam,) and within a few inches of the curbstone, the gutters being shallow and well bowldered. The walk was covered with about four inches of gravel. Every one of these trees grew finely, many of them making a growth of branches two or more feet in length. Some of these elms when planted seemed almost dead, but they started and grew well. None of them were watered artificially. The same kind of trees planted within the inclosures in much better soil, but without the gravel mulch, grew very little; many of them, probably half, died, notwithstanding constant care in watering, deep and well-drained soil, shortening in, mulching with grass and litter, etc. The same fate attended more than half the trees planted by others all over the country. Hence I conclude that gravel and small stones are unsurpassed as a mulch. They allow the rains to readily penetrate the soil, retain moisture, absorb heat and equalize the temperature. The practical utility of gravel as a mulch where it can be easily procured, should be tested by all tree planters. It will not injure heavy clay soils at least, but will be beneficial.—Horticulturist.

Clover Turned Under.

The Rural Southland says that a Mr. J. Gregory, a few years ago, moved from Tennessee and bought a plantation in Murry county, Ga. The land when he purchased it, with a good season, would produce ten bushels of wheat per acre. In October Mr. Gregory sowed broadcast fifteen acres of white Boughton wheat, one bushel to the acre, and in February following he sowed the same ground in red clover, sowing broadcast in two ways, one bushel to eight acres. He harvested ten bushels of wheat per acre, and cut a fine crop of hay the same season. The next year he mowed two crops of good clover hay averaging two tons per acre. The third crop grew up from four to eight inches high, and in October he plowed the clover under; plowing deep and subsoiling; sowed one bushel of white Boughton wheat per acre. The result was an average of thirty and one half bushels of choice wheat per acre. Thus you will see that the only manure used to improve the land and get thirty and one-half bushels of wheat, where he could only raise ten, was to plow under deep a good crop of clover and subsoil.

Bring out the Vital Energy

There is generally, even in the most delicate constitution, a latent reserve of vital energy. The medical stimulant of all others best calculated to rouse this vis inertia is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The impulse which that incomparable preparation lends to the action of the various organs insures a more vigorous and consequently healthy discharge of their various functions, than they would be capable of without its aid, and the "tone of nature" thus communicated is never excessive, but always equable and regular. Just so much stimulation is imparted as is required, and no more. In respect of the healthful gentleness of their action, the Bitters are immeasurably superior to the unmodified stimulants of commerce, which, though they produce a powerful resuscitating effect for a few minutes, are invariably followed by a reaction, corresponding in depression to their original effect. They excite so much at first that nature is puzzled by the effort, and is apt to sink under the exhaustion. Physicians who have made the stimulative action of the Bitters the subject of experiment, declare their decided preference of them over any other similar article. An equally high opinion is entertained of their regulating qualities by medical men who are acquainted with their tonic effects. They speedily rectify an irregular habit of body, digestive disorders, and debilitating ailments of the urinary organs, which added to their strengthening influence, renders invaluable aid in dyspepsia, constipation, biliary derangements and weakness or irritation of the bladder or kidneys. Rheumatic affections are also greatly alleviated by their blood depurating and anti-inflammatory action.

Xantippe.

It seems that the memory of this woman, like that of her renowned husband, is likely to be kept alive to the end of time. She is said to have possessed a very irritable temper, and her name has become a synonym of "vixen," or "scold." It is more than possible however, that the judgment passed upon her by mankind has been too severe. A more charitable disposition would undoubtedly have discovered in her many good qualities, and have attributed her failings more to physical infirmities than to moral obliquity. The party most intimately acquainted with her, and therefore best able to form a correct opinion, gives her credit for many domestic virtues. It is now well known that many of the diseases to which women are subject, have a direct tendency to render them irritable, peevish, cross, morose, unreasonable, so that they chafe and fret over all those little ills and annoyances that a person in health would bear with composure. It is fair to infer that most of Xantippe's were due to these causes alone; and could Socrates, as he returned from the Senate, the Gymnasium, or the Athenæum, have stopped at Pesler & Moritz's Drug Store and carried home a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, now and then, no doubt he might have evaded many a "curtain lecture," allayed many a "domestic broil," made it much pleasanter for the children, and more enjoyable for himself, and rescued his wife's name from the unenviable, world wide, and eternal notoriety it has attained. Thousands of women loose the day on which Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was first made known to them. A single bottle often gives delicate and suffering women more relief than months of treatment from their family physician. In all those derangements consequent to the sex, dragging-down sensations, nervous and general debility, it is a sovereign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value to ladies suffering from internal ulceration, congestion, inflamation, or ulceration, and its strengthening effects tend to correct displacements or internal parts, the result of weakness of natural supports. It is sold by all druggists.

Selected Poetry.

I Cannot Wait.

BY THOMAS BERRY SMITH.

I cannot wait:
Too much is touched I would be wise
To-day, as it is by me flies
Racing with Fate.

I cannot wait:
Years in millennial essence pants
Ready at last to lose their priceless chance
For Heaven's sake.

I cannot wait
[illegible] my spirit calls
My soul to enter homes, or else
I'll be too late.

I cannot wait;
Death passes [illegible] duty cries
My feet upon the outer walls
To enter in at.

I cannot wait
[illegible] this brief lease
[illegible] with the world of Peace

Pastoral Visits.

Mess Editors: You will please accept as my apology for this intrusion, my great desire to remove erroneous ideas from the minds of our people on this subject. As pastors, we come in contact with these errors in many directions. The office of pastor seems to be magnified by many people beyond the limits of human ability or possibility. This fact finds its confirmation in the common complaints so often expressed even against faithful pastors who fully realize the responsibilities of their office and come up to the full measure of their duty. The pastoral office includes everything except public instruction and the celebration of public worship. It embraces much, and whilst it is one of the most beautiful parts of our ministry it subjects to the hardest toil and the most severe labor. The cries of the widow and the orphan must be heeded—the sisters of Bethany must be accompanied to the grave of a sleeping Lazarus. The widow of Nain must be comforted—the hut where poverty and wretchedness dwell must be visited. Not a single hut nor home from the poor house to the palace must be neglected. We have, thank God, many faithful and well tried hearts beating in the North Carolina Conference who with the spirit of the Master move from the cradle hut of poverty on the heights of Galilee to the mansion in Jerusalem. There may be some who neglect the duties of their high office. This is not the rule. The true pastor does not visit merely because it is a duty—but because it is a pleasure running over with joy and gladness. I remember well a remark made to me by a beloved brother in the Conference when I entered the ministry. He was instructing me in regard to the duties of a pastor—"Remember, the older you grow in the ministry, the more will you be convinced that few, if any, are able to meet the demands of their charge in visiting." He was a faithful pastor, and was then laboring on a huge circuit in my native county. There were upwards of nine hundred members—these were scattered over an area of country about twenty miles square. Suppose he had devoted his whole time during the year to visiting, and averaged a visit to three members each day—at this rate he would not have been able to have visited his members more than once, and a few special visits besides to the sick. Before I considered the matter I was somewhat surprised at his remark, but am not now. I have been interested to know why so many complaints against their pastors. I cannot believe that as a rule they are remiss—some are, but many are not. The best reasons I can assign are the following:

First. Many lose sight of the fact that the pastor has domestic duties devolving upon him. His wife and children are to be provided for—"He that provideth not for his own household is worse than an infidel." This may apply to the pastor as well as to any one else. Your company may be entertaining and your hospitality abundant, but these do not relieve the necessities of his family. His children are to be instructed; shall he neglect them almost entirely, to minister to you and yours? When his wife and children are afflicted, shall he neglect them? Reader, look at the whole round of domestic duties to be performed. Ask yourself how much time you devote to these, and then answer how much legitimately belongs to your pastor.

Second. Many lose sight of the fact that the pastor must undergo much hard labor in his study. As a teacher, "he must study to show himself approved of God." Our ministers are not so fortunate as brother W. H. B's mountain colleague, who "went to the pulpit, took his text and preached just what the Almighty gave him." The preparation of a sermon makes requisition upon the brain as well as the heart. The Scriptures are to be searched. The light of commentators is not to be neglected.—Books are to be read and digested—the literature of the day must receive attention. Your pastor must keep pace with the age. These all occupy much of his time.

Third. Many lose sight of the fact that the pastor owes special visits to the sick and infirm. These visits are not made merely when convenient—often they are to be made when the pastor must be subjected to very great inconvenience. Sickness and death do not shrink to the [illegible] the pastor—but make constant attacks upon his plans. The cries of agony from his afflicted here, and the shrieks of the dying yonder, call him away from wife and children, and scarcely has he wiped away the tear of sympathy and returned from the tomb with Rachel or the widow of Nain, ere he is summoned to return with Martha and Mary to consecrate with tears the newly made grave of an affectionate and only brother.—Not unfrequently he is summoned to the bedside of the sick and the dying, when his appointment for the next day is ten or twenty miles in an opposite direction. Many would be astonished at the amount of time these special visits consume.

Fourth. Many lose sight of the fact that the pastor owes special visits to the weak in faith, and to the babes in Christ. "We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.—Let every one of us please his neighbor, for his good to edification." The lambs need the milk of the word often, if they do not get it, they will perish. Every part of the field is to be watched. The intruder is to be driven away. On one occasion I was informed that influences were at work to proselyte one of my members. I rode miles to see that member and endeavored to establish him in the faith, and when last heard from he was faithful to his Church. On meeting with several members who lived in that neighborhood, I was asked why I did not visit them, and they intimated that I had slighted them. My reply was, that I had a plan which I endeavored to carry out in my pastoral work—also that my regular labor for that week was in another part of my circuit, and that my visit to their neighborhood had been to accomplish a special object. The pastor is compelled to make many visits similar to the above, of which the people are not aware for prudence forbids that he publish it on the housetop. Kind reader, don't think your pastor can stop with you every time he passes your house—You ought to ask him: but do not tell him he is neglecting you when he does not comply.

Fifth. Many lose sight of the difficulties to which the pastor is often subjected. His is not all smooth sailing. His plans are subject to many circumstances—they are often thrown into confusion in spite of his efforts. He must often perform double duty, and yet no one is at fault.—I will illustrate. On one occasion I was invited to visit a good brother and enjoy his hospitality. I told him my rule was, in general, to make no positive promises as to time—but that I intended to visit, if possible, every member of my charge, and would see him as early as possible.—After some time, I called at his house, but did not meet with the reception anticipated. I could neither see nor hear anything with life in it, but a large dog which met me at the gate and forbade me entrance. I turned away and after rambling a long distance through paths, I reached the house of another member. Here I was met by a son of Ham who informed me that "the folks is gone and will come back about night; wont you have seat sah and wait for dem?" I did feel very much like resting, but did not have time, scores of families were looking for me, and I could not wait. I rode several miles distant and passed the night with another member. See the necessity of double work and yet no one to blame,—consider the many difficulties that may and often do arise to retard his progress in his pastoral work.

Sixth—Many lose sight of the fact that the pastor must visit, as far as possible, every member of his church, and not confine his visits to any class. He is pastor of the whole flock. I am sorry to say that some of our pastor's are to blame in a measure for the errors prevailing with many on this point. We must admit that some have indulged the people here—and have fixed the idea in the minds of many that they must be visited to the neglect of the less fortunate. For instance the pastor finds a comfortable home in the neighborhood of a church; here he invariably stops when he has to preach at that church. Just yonder not one mile distant is the hut of a poor widow. She needs the pastors counsel and prayers as she struggles with poverty to train up her children—that pastor never entered her hut, nor offered one prayer in her humble home. This is not the spirit of a true pastor. Jesus spent much of his time in the poor regions of Galilee. Ye favored ones, do not monopolize the visits of your pastor. Let him go like Elijah when there is but an "handful of meal in the barrel, and but little oil in the cruse." Go with him—show him the way, and help him, if necessary to fill up the barrel and the cruse.

Seventh—Many lose sight of the fact that it is a natural impossibility, his flock often. On small circuits and stations they can be visited much oftener than where these are large. It seems to me, if our people would consider the subject for five minutes they would see clearly that their demands are often unreasonable. If our pastors had wings like angels they could not satisfy some. I have between four and five hundred members in my charge; some live a considerable distance from their places of worship. It consumes much time to visit these. Since the first of January I have visited one hundred and fifty families, besides many special visits to the sick and bereaved. Now for me to attempt to visit every member of my charge once each month or even once in three months, and discharge my other duties, is an impossibility and it is unreasonable in any one to expect it.

Much of my reading I am compelled to do on horseback or in my buggy. I look over my visiting book and see how many I have yet to visit. I find that I have made but a fair beginning. If any one should read this article who is disposed to complain of his pastor—please inquire how many appointments he has, how far they are apart—how many members—how many sick—how large the area of the circuit; —is the pastor's family in good health—is he easy in his pecuniary matters—does his roof leak—is his flour barrel empty. Consider all these and many similar questions, and I think you will be more liberal in your views on the subject of pastoral visits. May our Father help those pastors who are slow to perform the duties of their office. Pastors, do not give your people occasion to complain with good reason against you, but come up to the full measure of duty.

Affectionately,

W. H. C.

"I love God and little children."—SCHILLER.

"Suffer little children to come to me."—JESUS CHRIST.

There is a small piece of furniture about every house—from the palace of him who sits on a throne and rules kingdoms—all along down the varied grades of society—till it is found in the meanest hovel—still preserving its identity and subserving the same purposes everywhere. At one time, it is almost the idolized object of Christian men;—with intense interest and solicitude they gather around it, and bow the knee, while prayers and earnest invocations arise like holy incense to the skies, "with groanings that cannot be uttered."

Again it is the centre of joy—joy unspeakable and unutterable—then bursting hearts and agonizing spirits gather around it and a wail of sorrow and anguish rises up to a pitying heaven for strength and succour;—from it springs a fountain of love—love such as is found nowhere else in this sin-stricken world—love the deepest and strongest—the most enduring and abiding that ever blessed and brightened the pathway of man.

From it arises the star of hope gilded with more beauty and shining with more lustre than all the stars of the firmament—around it cluster more fears, anxieties and interests than perhaps were ever prompted for the fate of the most richly freighted ship launched upon the wide sea—while "they who go down into the sea to do business upon the great waters"—when tossed by its waves and rocked by its billows, far out on the main, are wont to remember this piece of furniture oftener than almost any other.—The traveler, whether in the western wilds, or far off in the sunny climes of Italy or in the sacred land of song and prophecy, now calls up the dear and treasured images of home where this piece of furniture occupies a conspicuous and precious place. The weary wanderer over earth's wide and rugged paths had once a home, and among its treasured idols was this same ever present article—and though he has now no home and "not where to lay his head," he forgets not this same piece of furniture to which we have so often referred—for truly, the high and low, the rich and poor—the noble and ignoble—kings and potentates—subjects and vassals—wise and unwise—male and female—all, almost without a single exception, have at one period of their lives had to do with this same piece of furniture. It has at once been the asylum of those who were the objects of the most fiendish hate, or of the most tender and enduring regard—an object to which we all look back with the fondest recollections, or the keenest regrets—the dear, precious citadel of childhood.—It is our early cradle: from here when there in that palace, surrounded with all the luxury and splendor of royalty, or that lowly hovel surrounded with all its destitution and suffering—springs a race of immortal beings who [illegible] where for a brief period they will figure; and in them will be developed those principles and traits of character which will beautify, enable, and lift them up, or which will despoil, degrade and sink them down, and which must finally determine whether they will live and sing in heaven or groan and suffer in eternal death.

Into the history of this preparatory progressive state of life we now propose to enter, prompted not only by an unmeasured affection for children, but earnestly desirous to awaken more interest and sympathy for them in the Church and in the world in view of their relations to us—their sufferings and destiny in the world.

Children are but little people, yet they form a very large and deeply interesting and important part of society; upon them we expend much of our capital;—their demands have considerable influence upon the price of flour and sugar—employ a large portion of our population in their service and occupy one half the literati of our day in labors for their instruction and amusement. They cause more trouble and anxiety than the national debt. They disturb more slumbers—cause more sighs—evoke more compliments, are the recipient of more good wishes and are the objects of more prospective good fortune during their cradle life, than perhaps they ever realize in all after time.

Without any reference to their being our future statesmen, philosophers [illegible] form in their present state of pigmy existence a most interesting and influential class of beings.

The arrival of a mewling infant who can scarce open its eyes—and only opens its mouth like the unfledged bird, either to receive its food or to add variety if not harmony to the usual noise and bustle of a family room, will effect, as we have repeatedly seen, the most extraordinary alteration in a whole household,—substitute affection for coldness—duty for dissipation—cheerfulness for gravity—bustle for formality,—unite hearts which time had divided, and soften feelings which the world had hardened—awake a new sense and appreciation of moral responsibility, which perhaps no other event of life could equal.

We shall continue this subject in another number.

SOMETHING FOR PASTORS.—A tendency to laxity of principle and practice in reference to the sanctification of the Lord's day is apparent in many quarters. This tendency will doubtless be strongly tempted to break out into open and flagrant desecration by the operation of the Centennial year, with its great exposition. Such a consequence is greatly to be dreaded by every patriot and Christian in this broad and free land of ours, whose glory comes from her Christian character, whose foundations were laid in the fear of God and a regard for His ordinances. To prevent it should be the endeavor of every lover of truth and order, and especially of every pastor. We hope, therefore, and hereby appeal to our pastors, that every pulpit in our connection will clearly sound forth the rightful claims of the Christian Sabbath, and raise up a standard against the threatening desecrating overflow, by studiously forming and strengthening public opinion in favor of a restful, quiet Lord's day, devoted to the public worship of God, and this as the bulwark of the prosperity of our free institutions.—Christian Instructor.

The secret mysteries of a divine life, of a new nature, of Christ formed in our hearts—they cannot be written or spoken. A painter that would draw a rose, though he may furnish some likeness to it in figure and color, yet he can never paint the scent and fragrance; or if he would draw a flame, he cannot put a constant heat into his colors; he cannot make his pencil drop a sound. Neither are we able to enclose in words and letters the life, soul and essence of any spiritual truths, and, as it were, to incorporate it in them.—Cudworth.

The Whole Bible in the Book of Job.

A man once asked me if I ever studied Job. And he said there was something remarkable about Job. If you got the key to Job you got the key to the whole Bible. "How do you make that out?" I asked. "Well," he said, "I divide Job into seven heads. 1. Job untried. God pronounced him a perfect man. He is Adam in Eden—perfect before his trial. 2. The trial came—and adversity came to Job; that is the second head. Trial came just as it came to Adam, and like Adam he fell. 3. Then the third head—the wisdom of the [illegible] "You never heard such wisdom; but they made poor work of it. Job could stand his scolding wife and complaining children, but he couldn't stand the wisdom of the world. 4. They couldn't state anything about forgiveness, and that is what Job wanted. 5. Then Job cries out, 'Oh, that I had a daysman betwixt me and God!" That is Christ. 6. Then God speaks and Job learns his lesson; and flat he comes down upon the dunghill. "Behold I am vile: what shall I answer Thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth,' etc. There is a man coming to see his lost and ruined condition by the fall. 7. Job learns his lesson and God now lifts him up, and that is the last. And Job's last estate was better than his first." Why, man after he is restored is better than Adam was in Eden! Adam might have been in Eden ten thousand years and then the devil might have come and taken every thing that Adam had; but now "our life is hid with Christ in God" and Satan can't get at it?

A man once said to me, "Did you ever notice that God promised to give Job double of everything he had possessed? And did you notice that he didn't give him double children? He had ten, and God didn't give him twenty; he gave him ten. God wouldn't admit that Job had lost his children, so he had ten on earth and ten in heaven."

You that have departed children, and friends, don't say that you have lost them: they have only gone on before, and by-and-by you shall meet them.—Moody.

The Work of Grace.

How the light of heaven is stealing
Gently o'er the trembling soul;
And the shades of bitter feeling
From the lightened spirit roll,
Sweetly stealing, sweetly stealing,
See how grace its way is feeling!

Fairer than the pearl, morning,
Comes the softly struggling ray;
Ah! it is the very dawning
That precedes eternal day.
Sweetly stealing, &c.

See the tears, the blessed trouble,
Doubts and fears, and hopes and smiles
How the guilt of sin seems double,
And how plain are Satan's wiles!
Sweetly stealing, &c.

Now the light is growing brighter,
Fears of hell and hate of sin;
Another flash! the heart is lighter.
Love of God hath entered in,
Sweetly stealing, &c.

Now upon the favorite passion
Falls a steady ray of grace,
And the lights of world and fashion,
In the new light fade apace.
Sweetly stealing &c.

See! more light! the spirit tingles
With exhilirating dart,
More—and love divinely mingles
Ease and quickness with the smart.
Sweetly stealing, &c.

Free! free! the joyous light of heaven
Comes with lull and fair release!
O God, what light! all sin forgiven,
Jesus, mercy, love and peace.
Sweetly stealing, &c.

Sunday School Hints.

No one is fit to be a Sunday-school teacher that has fits—fits of being absent, fits only of punctuality, mere fits of study, fits, of visiting his scholars with long intervals between. The scholars are sure to have fits also—principally fits of staying away. The fittest thing that such teachers can do is to resign.

Never depend on the inspiration of the moment in teaching a lesson. If preparation on your part is unnecessary, so is your progress as a teacher. God can inspire the scholars directly without your intervention, if inspiration is all that is wanted. If God wants you at all, it is with your best and most thorough preparation.

When read aright, the whole word of God contains whispers of particular love to individual sufferers; which enter the ear that grace has opened, and soothe the heart that was ruffled by manifold vexations. The key to all is, Christ is mine, and God views me in him.

As well might a bank try to manage its affairs without consultation among the directors, or an army try to wage a successful warfare without councils of war, as a Sabbath school try to perform its great work efficiently, without the frequent interchange of views among its teachers.

Religious Excitement.

A GREAT many persons of a certain class, and not a few of the public journals, are just now vigorously deprecating everthing in the shape of religious excitement. Now we have no more sympathy than they, with those who simply aim to produce excitement for excitement's sake. Yet we confess to a belief in excitement. We believe there are times when it is right to be excited: when it arises from the fact that the deepest sensibilities of the soul are stirred as the result of a legitimate and sufficient cause; when the heart is so deeply moved under a overwhelming [illegible] reason can no longer hold it in restraint, because of [illegible] enthusiasm in our nature being stirred within us, until our whole being is attuned into the very harmony of heaven. Only let us be sure that our excitement springs from a right cause, and then we need not fear to get excited. Shall all hell be moved at the advancing victories of the Cross, and Christians feel no flush of enthusiasm? The Christian who can sit tame and unmoved in the midst of the evangelistic of to-day, and feel no glow of excitement, may have sufficient religion to carry him to heaven, but it will be as be the skin of his teeth.

The Bible is full of memorable instances of tremendous excitement. What Christian but will recall the intance of DAVID conveying back the ark of the Lord from the land of the Philistines with shouts and praises to Jehovah. He thought of the ark as it went through the waters of the Jordan and entered the promised land and was set in the most holy place. He thought of it as dragged by alien hands into a foreign land, and set up in the temple of DAGON. He saw prond DAGON fall prostrate in the very temple where he was worshipped. Then he thought how that ark had been brought back through the mysterious power of Jehovah, and how it was now going up to Jerusalem to be enthroned in the citadel of the nation's greatness, to be a pledge of the presence of the everlasting Jehovah in the midst of his favored people. As ment grows intense. He cannot suppress his feelings. His face becomes radiant with holy triumph. Girded in his linen ephod, with the crown upon his head, he dances and leaps before the ark, shonting out his song of triumphant praise before the elders of the people. Did MICHAL, looking out of her window, despise him, and sneeringly say: "How glorious was the King of Israel to-day"? She cannot understand—"It was before the Lord." So MICHAL goes barren to the day of her death. Better by far to be a dancing DAVID than a barren MICHAL. Yet the Church of God to-day is full of barren MICHALS. The men wanted are those of warm enthusiasm, men who are quivering with life and feeling, men who are not afraid to get excited, men who would rather yield to the divine power than repress it, men who are willing to be fools for Christ's sake, rather than keep up a stiff methodical decorum at the cost of resisting the Spirit's influences. These are the men who lead on the work of the Lord. These are the men whom God blesses. And God—He is the God of the living, not of the dead!

Then, there was that other memorable scene of excitement, when the disciples were gathered together on the day of Pentecost. Their excitement was so great, their enthusiasm so strange, that the conclusion some arrived at was, "these men are full "of new wine." They saw that every face was radiant in the expression of a strange, supernatural ecstacy upon it; that every heart was filled, that every tongue spake, under an irresistible impulse, and they could only account for the wonderful excitement in the way they did. But PETER said: "We are not full of new wine: the everlasting "Spirit fills our hearts, and when it fills the heart "you cannot stop the mouth."

Yes, we believe in religious excitement, only taking care that it be religious. When the mighty power of the Spirit is present, when the great work of Jehovah is being done, when Jesus of Nazareth is passing by in the triumphal sweep of His glory, when Satan is being trampled under foot—if the hearts of God's people be not stirred within them, and their lips break not out in praise, then shall the very stones cry, rather than praise be silent. If men may grow excited in the service of the devil, why not in the more reasonable service of the Lord Jesus Christ.—DR. TALMAGE IN Christian at Work.

The Christian Gentleman

The grace of God is more important than the graces of polite society; but as the Christian is called to be courteous and patient, giving offense to none, in his perfected life, shine not only the graces of a Christian, but also the genuine courtesies of which the fashionable have only the counterfeits and imitations. So, too, the Christian gentleman is above a low thing. He cannot stoop to a mean fraud.—He invades no secrets in the keeping of another. He betrays no secrets confided to his own keeping. He never struts in borrowed plumage.—He [illegible] mistake. He uses no ignoble weapons in controversy. He never stabs in the dark. He is ashamed of innendoes. He is not one thing to a man's face and another behind his back. If by accident he comes into possession of his neighbor's counsels, he passes upon them an act of instant oblivion. Papers not meant for his eye, whether they flutter in at his open window, or lie open before him in an unguarded exposure, are held sacred by him.—He trespasses on no privacy of others, however sound the sentry sleeps.—Bolts and bars, locks and keys, hedges and pickets, bonds and securities, notices to trespassers, are none of them for him. He may be trusted, himself out of sight, near the thinnest partition, anywhere. He buys no office, he sells none, he intrigues for none. He would rather fail of his rights than win them through dishonor. He will eat honest bread. He tramples on no sensitive feeling. He insults no man. If he have rebuke for another, he is straightforward, open, and manly.—He cannot descend to scurrility. From all profane and wanton words his lips are chastened. Of woman and to her he speaks with decency and respect. In short, whatever he judges honorable he practices towards every man.—Exchange.

Scripture Teachings About Money.

1. Giving is the surest way to getting. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

2. God is the sovereign proprietor [illegible] the gold is mine: [illegible] mine and [illegible]

3. We are accountable both for our own, and for that instrusted to us by others. "What hast thou, that thou hast not received?"

4. There is judgment required in the charitable bestowment of it. "Do good to all, but especially to the household of faith."

5. There are few mischiefs that are not remotely or intimately connected with covetousness. "The love of money is the root of all evil."

6. Money ought not to be made to minister to self-indulgence, while the interests of religion can be promoted by means of it. "Wo to them that live in ceiled houses, while the Lord's house is not built."

7. The poorest man may give something with acceptance. "This poor widow hath given all she had."

8. Persons of real worth are sometimes destitute of money. "Then John answered, silver and gold have I none."

9. True enjoyment is not to be found in wealth. "He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver."

10. Every man should punctually discharge his pecuniary debts. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another."

A late number of the Pittsburg Advocate gave the following:

We referred in an article recently to the pronunciation of i-ther and ni-ther instead of e-ther and ne-ther, and meant by our remarks to condemn the practice. Since then, we have met with an item from the New York Evening Post, of which the poet, William Cullen Bryant, is editor, that so exactly accords with our own view that we reprodnce the conclusion of it for our readers. He says that "in social interconrse the i-ther and ni-ther are not of much moment, because any member of the disapproving majority may avenge himself by introducing e-ther and ne-ther in reply to his learn edfriend. And, at any rate, little inaccuracies and little inelegancies of language may as well be tolerated in ordinary colloquy because they are inevitable in various forms of speech. But i-ther and ni-ther in public speaking, and especially in the pulpit, are grievous arrogancies, to which a helpless audience should not be subjected. Of all the men in the world, clergymen, in their official capacity, should avoid peculiarities, not to say affection, not to say ostentation; and, whatever their private judgment may be, the fact remains that i-ther and ni-ther smack of something of that sort, and are, therefore, not expedient."

That question was settled some time ago by a Hibernian who, when he was called on to decide whether it was ne-ther or ni-ther, replied it was naither.

PRAY SPEAKING, BROWN.—When Dr. Woods and Prof. Stuart were in the prime of their usefulness and fame at Andover, it occurred to the students that the prayers of these distinguished teachers at the seminary devotions were longer than necessary, and how to remedy the difficulty was a subject of much thought and conversation. No one was willing to "tell" either of the old professors. At length a committee of the students was appointed to confer with them. The committee divided itself into halves, and at the same hour one part went to Dr. Woods, told him of the delicacy which the students felt about addressing Prof. Stuart on the matter of his long prayers at the chapel, and implored the mediation of Dr. Woods with the professor, to induce him to shorten his petitions. The rest of the committee also conferred with Prof. Stuart to the same effect, with regard to the prayers of Dr. Woods, and besought his intercession with the venerable professor of theology to abbreviate his chapel supplications. On the departure of the committees each professor instantly seized his hat and cane and started for the house of his associate. They met midway, near the old mansion house. Prof. Stuart, his eyes dancing with fun, at once hailed the good doctor with the startling information that the students thought his prayers were too long. And immediately Dr. Woods gravely quenched the sparkling light in the Hebrew professor's face by telling him that the students held the same view in regard to his petitions. The two professors continued their walk and meditations. Both came to the conclusion that each of the offenders had been taken in his own net, and subsequently the chapel prayers were shortened, or else entirely relegated to the students.

A waggish speculator, one of a numerous family in the world, recently said: "Five years ago I was not worth a penny in the world, now you see where I am through my own exertions." "Well, where are you?" "Why, a thousand dollars in debt."

"Madame," exclaimed a cross-grained physician to a patient, "if women were admitted to paradise their tongues would make it a purgatory." "And some physicians, if allowed to practice there," replied the lady, "would soon make it a desert."

'Call that a kind man?' said an actor, speaking of an acquaintance: 'a man who is away from his family and never sends them a farthing? Call that kindness?' 'Yes, unremitting,' Jerrold replied.

"This is my last call," remarked a flippant young gentlemen to a young lady who was soon to be married, on a recent occasion. "I never call on married women or unmarried ladies after they have reached twenty-five." "You do well, sir; gravely remarked an elder lady present. 'At that age, and after marriage, they begin to know the value of time, and do not like to waste it.'

The Great Centennial.

The conspicuous era in the History of North Carolina Methodism has come, and its extensive programme fully carried out in all of its minute particulars. To say that it was a grand and glorious success from its auspicious beginning to its happy consummation, is but the expressed utterance of the entire community. Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, the citizens of Raleigh, and the throng of visitors from abroad, the press, secular and religious, who were the delighted participators in the exercises, all united as with the voice of one man, in saying that the Centennial of North Carolina Methodism held in this city, beginning on the 21st of March, 1876, was crowned with complete and glorious success. The spacious Metropolitan Hall, used for the occasion, was beautifully decorated by the hands of our fair ladies with graceful wreaths and lovely flowers.

THE ATTENDANCE

on all the exercises was so large as to pack that spacious Hall, numbering, often times, two thousand souls. And this large concourse of people seemed to be absorbed in hearing the charming music rendered by the choir, and the masterly addresses delivered by the chosen speakers.

THE ADDRESSES

were carefully prepared, full of historical instruction, chaste in language, able in argument, and deep in research. They were exceedingly edifying to the audience. Intelligent men said that they expected to hear a few master-pieces out of so many but were surprised and delighted in hearing so many splendid productions. They were uniformly excellent and mutually appreciate to the occasion. As these addresses are to be published in book form so that all the people can read them, we will not take up time and space in describing their merits. But we think it due to the readers to say a few words about the addresses of our beloved Bishops, McTyeire, Doggett, and Marvin, whose presence and labors have contributed much to the eminent success of the occasion. The theme of Bishop McTyeire was "The Founders of Methodism." And well and ably did he handle the subject. The address was remarkable for its clear statement, for its deep research, for its just discrimination, and practical bearing. It threw a flood of light on the fundamental principles of Church organization. The speaker hewed right and left, cut and dissected, and set out the prominent characteristics of the founders of Methodism in a clear and convincing light. It made a profound impression and elicited the admiration of all the hearers.

The subject of Bishop Doggett was "the progress of Methodism in the nineteenth century." The range of his thoughts swept over the large track of Methodism, from its inception in England down to the wide spread glory of its present status. He showed how it began as a single seed, grew, multiplied, and spread over the world until its golden harvest waves over the vast field of the wide world. It was universally conceded to be a grand production, and will stand as a monument of literary fame to its polished author. The topic of Bishop Marvin was "the relation of Methodism to revivals." This production covered the whole field of Methodistic revivals. It was replete with the light of instruction, shedding clear radiance, warmth and beauty on the essential elements of spiritual religion. The Bishop's analysis of the natural, mental and spiritual characteristics of Mr. Wesley was a gem of perfection. Under the skilful touches of his hand the full-orbed glory of this apostolic man stood out in full view. The audience must have been fully convinced that of all the grand men of modern christianity, Mr. Wesley was immeasurably the grandest in the fruits of his labors.

THE RESULTS

of this Centennial celebration are beyond human computation. It has intensified the love of the Methodist for their own chosen denomination. It has placed Methodist history, doctrine and success so clearly and prominently before the minds of public men as wonderfully surprised them, and won their enthusiastic admiration. It was a new revelation of the glory of Methodism, which they had never seen before. The great Methodist Church has loomed up before them as a pillar of fire. It has cemented more closely the hearts of the preachers, and kindled such a flame of zeal in their hearts, that they go back to their fields of labor to spread its radiance and glory all over the land. The fragrant efflorescence of this first Centennial flower is wafted from the city into all parts of the State As a fertile seed, it will produce a harvest of like Centennials, whose golden sheaves will fill the garner of the skies. May all the Centennial exercises yet to be held in the State be as productive of great results as this first meeting, which inaugurates the series to follow.

Our Centennial and the N. Y. Herald.

The New York Herald, enterprising always and watching for news that will interest people of all shades of opinion and thought, contained a report of the proceedings of the first day from its special correspondent. In an hour or two after the close of Col. Clark's speech, the proceedings of the morning, with Col. Clark's speech in full, were in the office of the Herald in the hands of the printers, and in the paper on Wednesday morning. What a blessing the telegraph wire is to those who want news!

The Herald, in the editorial column, says:

"The Methodists of North Carolina have just celebrated their centennial, and we print this morning a very interesting report of the proceedings. There is no special significance in this celebration in so far as its centennial aspects are concerned, but the occasion serves to recall the history of a powerful religious movement, both in the past and at present. No one can doubt that it was the itinerancy which so peculiarly adapted Methodism to a new country in which both men and consciences were struggling to be free. In all respects the century of growth of the Republic has also been in an equal degree a century of growth for Methodism. North Carolina is an example of this, particularly appropriate at this time, because the Methodist Church, as an organization, was first established in that State just one hundred years ago. Up to 1776 Methodism was almost unknown in the South, and everywhere it was still in its infancy; but it grew with remarkable vigor until in the Southern, as in most of the Northern States, it is to-day the controlling religious influence. The secret of that growth and paramount influence is in its adaptability. Its itinerant clergymen, missionaries all of them and men of great religious fervor and self-sacrificing spirit, were suited to do the work of evangelizing a new country, and it is not surprising that they accomplished it successfully. Everywhere are the monuments of their zeal and their labors. The Methodists of the United States have much reason to be proud of their achievements, and of the Christian pride they take in their work this North Carolina celebration in an excellent example."

During the past week preaching was had at Edenton and Person Street Methodist Churches in the afternoon. At Edenton Street on Tuesday evening. Rev. John N. Andrews preached, and at Person Street Church at the same hour Rev. V. A. Sharpe occupied the pulpit. On Wednesday afternoon, according to published programme, the services were conducted at Edenton Street Church by Rev. L. L. Hendren, and at Person Street Church by Rev. F. L. Reid. In order to carry out the programme at Metropolitan Hall, the afternoon service was suspended at the churches for the remainder of the week.

We regret our failure to get a synopsis of all the addresses delivered during the centennial exercises of the past week. We hope to have them ready for our next Three of the addresses of decided merit, of which there is no mention in this issue, we hope to notice at some length in our next. We refer to the address of Dr. T. M. Jones, President of Greensboro Female College, Rev W. S. Black, Presiding Elder of Wilmington District, and Rev. J. J. Renn, of Chapel Hill.

The addresses delivered at Metropolitan Hall by Bishops McTyeire, Doggett and Marvin, during the centennial exercises, were master productions. They were requested for publication in the centennial book soon to be issued by the committee of arrangements. These addresses cannot fail to give the book wide-spread circulation.

Bishop McTyeire, on his visit to the centennial meeting in this city, spent the Sabbath at Trinity College, preaching both morning and evening to the great edification of the people. While there he ordained Rev. W. H. Pegram deacon in our Church.

Revival News.

Bro. G. W. Hardison writes from Swansboro, Onslow co.: "We have had a glorious revival of religion at Swansboro. Ten have joined the Church and others are seeking the pearl of great price. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Bro. Carraway writes from Charlotte: "I am glad to inform you that the Lord is reviving his work in our church in Charlotte Services have been held every night for nearly three weeks, and notwithstanding the inclement weather, the congregations have been large, generally filling the church.

About 20 persons have found peace in Christ and the interest is unabated."

NORTH CAROLINA METHODISM---ITS CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

FIRST DAY.

Ministers and laymen from all parts of the Conference, residents of Raleigh, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians, despite the inclemency of the weather, gathered in large numbers in Metropolitan Hall on Tuesday, the first day of the Centennial Celebration of organized Methodism in North Carolina. The Hall had been beautifully decorated by the hands of the enthusiastic and faithful ladies of the Church and it presented a scene of vernal and floral beauty. Wreaths and festoons of evergreens were suspended gracefully along the galleries and over the platform and hanging immediately over the rostrum, in full view of the audience, was the word, in large letters, "Welcome," on one side of which was "1776," and on the other "1876."

Bishops McTyeire, Marvin and Doggett were present at the beginning of the exercises. The meeting was opened with singing by the choir and prayer by Rev. J. P. Moore, P. E of the Raleigh District. "Ode" "Consecration" was then sung and prayer offered by Rev. E. A. Yates, Presiding Elder of the Newbern District The meeting was then organized by electing Bisaop McTyeire, president with Bishops Marvin and Doggett as sociate presidents. The Presiding Elders of the Conference were made vice presidents and Rev F. L. Reid was appointed Secretary.

Bishop McTyeire then introduced Col. Walter Clark who delivered the address of welcome. Col. Clark is a young man of talent and great promise, a lawyer by profession and a resident of Raleigh. He is of Methodist extraction and is himself a member of and devotedly attached to the Methodist Church His address was able, instructive and eloquent, evincing patient research, an intimate acquaintance with Church history and a skilful analysis of men and events.—His speech was referred to frequently by the President, Bishop McTyeire, and others as "the elegant and eloquent address of welcome.

Col. Clark began by referring to the great reformation which Luther brought about—how that in forty years it had done its work and spent its force. Its early loss of power arose from the fact that it was more an attempt to overthrow the organic system and the abuses of the Papacy than an evangelical revival of the spiritual life of the Church. When John Wesley-clarum et venerabile nomen—appeared, not religion only, but morality was at its lowest ebb both in Great Britain and on the Continent. Such is the concurrent testimony of the writers of the times. The degradation, the immorality, the infidelity of the age was all-pervading. It reached all classes and blackened alike the palace and the hovel. The nations sat in the shadow of a great moral death. Wesley came from the rectory of Epworth and from his labors the new reformation and a new religious epoch date their commencement. The speaker analyzed and described the character of Wesley and his work, and pronounced the itinerant system Wesley's most marvelous conception.

"It was the born soldier and organizer who conceived that design. It was a stroke of genius; unless, indeed, we say that it was a revelation of Providence. The itinerancy is essentially a military organization. The world contains nothing else like it. There are no precedents for it. The only institution that even slightly resembles it is that founded by Ignatius Loyola and that attained such power that it was said, "the order of Jesus is a sword whose handles is at Rome and whose point is everywhere." Differing from Jesuitism, even antagonistic to it in motive and object, it surpasses it in its organization and in its success. The world has seen no other triumphs like those achieved by it. Working to west and west it began by evangelizing Great Britian and Ireland. It then carried the missionary standards of Methodism to the continent of Europe, to Africa, to the East Indies, on the one hand and on the other to the West Indies, to Canada and the United States, whence, on either hand, its pioneers and advance guards have penetrated the islands of the Australasian seas, and at the antipodes have joined the links of the chain of christian labors and Christian charity which encircles the whole earth."

The speaker, by citing statistics, showed the present strength of the Methodist movement as compared with its beginning and with other denominations. He also alluded in eloquent terms to the coadjutors of Wesley and to the pioneers who brought Methodism to our State.

The address was responded to by Bishop McTyeire, in appropriate and graceful terms, on behalf of the Bishops and the visiting ministers and laymen.

AT NIGHT

the meeting was opened with prayer by Bishop Doggett. Bishop McTyeire then addressed the large audience his theme being "Methodism and its Founders." The address was able and instructive and made a marked impression on the audience. It strengthened the love of Methodists for their Church and elevated Methodism in the opinion of all. We hope to give a synopsis of the address next week.

SECOND DAY.

WEDNESDAY, March 22, 1876.

Metropolitan Hall was well filled on Wednesday morning at ten o'clock by citizens and visitors to the city.—The meeting opened with prayer by Rev. S. D. Adams, of Greensboro' Station.

After the singing of athymn, Bishop Marvin introduced Rev. W. M. Robey, President of Davenport Female College, the topic for discussion being "The Pioneer Methodists Ministers, and Laymen of North Carolina, their Struggles and Triumphs. President Robey and Professor W. C. Doub, of Greensboro Female College, delivered entertaining, eloquent and instructive addresses.

Pres. Robey began by referring to some personal reminiscences of the first Methodist preachers he ever knew, showing that his own recollections did not extend a great way back, and that therefore in his opinion the centennial committee might more appropriately have assigned the theme to some of our venerable fathers.

He alluded to Thomas Mortimer Sharp, Peter Doub and James Patterson as men intimately associated with his earliest recollections, and who had left a profound impression on his mind.

THE PIONEER PREACHERS!

He knew but little of them except their names This fact, however, furnishes a key to their character

They were too intent upon their main work—telling the "old, old story of Jesus and his love"—to find time to record the story of their struggles and triumphs. If we could call them back, they would not stop to tell it. The first thing they would ask at our hands would be license to preach, and the next an appointment. But they had done their work, they had sowed the field—we were now reaping the harvest.

The evidences of their Apostolical character were to be found in the history of their spirit and achievements.

They were called of God. This they firmly believed—it was a profound conviction which they could not shake off. It was under this conviction that they entered the ministry. The field before them was not inviting, but perilous and hard—They never would have entered it, nor remained in it, but for this conviction.

Methodism and the itinerancy then and now were contrasted. The "circuit rider" was now respectable, even here in North Carolina.

The objection that this solemn conviction of a divine vocation was only a blind enthusiasm, was answered.—It involved an unreasonable absurdity.

It could not be dispnted that these men preached the gospel—that men were converted under their preaching by thousands who brought forth the fruits of genuine conversion.

They did not serve the devil—they did not love or please the world. If they were not called of God, then they preached with heaven, earth, and hell against them, and yet the devils were cast out, the lepers cleansed, the dead raised, and the poor had the gospel preached to them; and finally these preachers died in triumph like Paul, and went to heaven, and succeeding generations rise up and call them blessed.

The early preachers felt themselves called to go, as well as preach. Wesley's interpretation of the great commission—"The world is my parish," implied this. The early preachers accepted this interpretation, and a large field was what they wanted.

The size of their circuits and districts was illustrated by a few examples.

A brief analogy was drawn between the pioneer Methodist preachers and St. Paul. Some one had said that Paul was a Presbyterian. If he was, he had several strong Methodist points—instance his conversion—his call to preach—his short preparation for the ministry—his zeal for the ministry—his self-denial—his missionary spirit—his disposition to preach rather than baptize, his preference to build on his own foundation, that is, to preach the gospel to those who had it not rather than to build up a church by proselyting the members of other churches—in all these respects the pioneers of Methodism greatly resembled Paul.

Two pictnres were drawn—the one of a young pioneer itinerant just leaving home for his distant field of labor, his parting with his mother, his journeying in a strange land, like Jacob, his sleeping on the ground and dreaming, like Jacob, of angels and heaven, or like Jesus, encountering temptation, and renewing his vows to go everywhere and cry 'the Cross, the Cross.'

The other, the old itinerant, who having given everything to God, is now old, and worn out, and poor, and now lingers a relict of a generation that is, gone, and men say he is "laid aside," but who finds it now a greater trial to lay down the Cross, than it was to take it up.

A closer view is taken of the pioneer preacher—how he traveled—where he preached—where he lodged—how he went to conference—how they met and prayed, and wept and preached and sang together, and parted to meet again in heaven—and how they preached as they went to and from conference, and sowed the fire in a luminous trail along their journey.

Finally, if we could commune with these men in their spirit homes, they would admonish us to do as they had done—show ourselves the men for the time in which we live—not to roll the car of Methodism backward, but forward—to keep Methodism in the front rank of God's sacramental host, pressing like the morning star hard upon the retiring darkness of moral night, and, by the love we bear their memory, and by the glory of the Cross, never to draw in her picket-lines, till her light shall go forth as the brightness of the morning, and her standard triumph in every land.

Prof. Doub showed that Methodism was introduced into N. C. from Petersburg or Brunswick, Va., by the early pioneer preachers to that State In all probability Robert Williams was the first to preach and organize societies on the Roanoke. Francis Asbury, Thomas Rankin and George Shadford, also labored in that part of the work prior to the establishment of the "Carolina" circuit. Traces also are found of Methodist pioneer work in Franklin and Granville, as there were a few local preachers and some laymen whose names are handed down to us; as for instance, Edmund Taylor and George Harris, of Granville, Messrs Long and Bastion of Halifax. At the house of the latter the first subscription paper was drawn up and the first sums subscribed for a school in the connection.

A local minister of the church was shown to have been a member of the first three Provincial Congresses.

It was also shown that Methodism was introduced into middle North Carolina through Pittsylvania circuit, and that the first regular camp meeting was held in 1802 on the lands of Rev. John Donb, the father of the late Rev Peter Donb, D. D. He was brought up to the regular organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, gave characterizations and short notices of the first preachers appointed to "Carolina" circuit in 1776, viz: Edward Drumgoole, Francis Poythress and Isham Tatum—and also of a few others of the early pioneer preachers, and then furnished the following statistics in contrast of the two periods of the Church:

"In 1773 no organized church existed; in 1781 a fully organized and wisely managed church was established; in 1773, there were ten preachers in the whole country, most of them Englishmen sent over by Mr. Wesley; in 1784 the first report after the organization, 12 years from the first account, there were 104 preachers, most of them natives of this country; in 1773, there were reported 1160 members in society, all but 100 north of Virginia, and none from North Carolina; in 1785, there were 18,000 members of whom at least 4,000 were from North Carolina: in 1773, six circuits were reported for the whole work in America; in 1785, there were 52 circuits in the whole work, and 12 in North Carolina."

He discussed the difficulties, dangers and struggles through which the pioneer preachers passed, and the causes of their trimmphs and successes, and thus contrasted the results of 1776 and 1876:

"In 1776 there were less than 500 members in the United States; in 1876 there are at least 100,000 members of all branches of Methodism in North Carolina, and two and one fourth millions in the United States, and four and one fourth millions on the whole globe; and allowing three persons to each member of the church, there are at least 17 millions of people under Methodist influence."

At the conclusion of the addresses, Rev. Dr. Burkhead read a letter from Rev. Bennett T. Blake of Wake county, whose feeble health would not permit of his attending on this Centennial occasion. A telegram was also received and read from Hon. W M. Robbins, member of Congress, congratulating his fellow Methodists of North Carolina on their past and present prosperity.

AT NIGHT.

the Hall was densely crowded. Many could not obtain seats and were forced to stand or leave the Hall. After prayer by Rev. Jno. Tillett and singing by the choir, Bishop McTyeire introduced Rev. A. W. Mangum, for four years pastor of the Church in Raleigh and at present occuping the chair of Moral Philosophy at the University of North Carolina. The topic assigned to him and Rev. H. T. Hudson was, The Introduction and History of Methodism in the Capital of N. C. and its Relation to the Methodism of the State.

Prof. Mangum's address was instructive and entertaining and was listened to with unflagging attention by the vast audience. He alluded in the beginning of his address to the great want of written history, political and ecclesiastical, in North Carolina, and to the [illegible] on the part of those who have the material in possession. He then gave a brief historical sketch of the founding of the city of Raleigh, the approach of Methodism and its known introduction into the city. The first Church ever built in Raleigh was a Methodist Chapel erected by Rev. William Glendenning, at his own cost, on Newbern Street opposite to the old State Bank, now the Episcopal rectory.

The history of the Church was given from its establishment to the present time, together with a notice of the influential members who have belonged to the Church. A brief reference was also made to the Presiding Elders of the District and the pastors of the Church.

Prof. Mangum, after an exhortation to the living to follow the faithful examples of the sainted fathers and mothers in Israel who blessed and adorned Methodism in Raleigh in other days, closed with an eloquent picture of the anticipated gathering of all the preachers and members of Edenton Street Church in the world of the Blessed.

Owing to the lateness of the hour, the address of Rev. H. T. Hudson was postponed until Thursday evening. Bishop Marvin then proceeded to "lift a collection" for the building of a Metropolitan Church in Raleigh. The call for subscriptions was confined to the citizens of Raleigh, and it was said that the sum of $12,000 ought to be secured in Raleigh before the Conference at large is called upon to contribute. With appropriate and occasionally facetious remarks, Bishop Marvin made an appeal which was responded to by persons in all parts of the Hall, by subscriptions of $1000, $560, $400, $200, $100 and $50. The aggregate amount pledged was between eight and nine thousand (At the close of the services on Saturday night, it was ascertained that the sum of $12,115 had been pledged by residents of Raleigh.)

THIRD DAY.

The meeting was opened with religious services, Rev. J. H. Wheeler leading in prayer. Bishop D. S. Doggett then delivered an address on "The Progress of Methodism in the 19th Century." All who listened to the able and distinguished Bishop were instructed by his learning and charmed with his eloquence. The peroration, being a vision of Methodism's triumph, of oratorical genius. It was an address that will live in the memory of all who heard it.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was opened with religious services—prayer by Rev. W. S. Black.

Rev. H. T. Hudson was then introduced. Topic—The relation of city Methodism to that in the State of North Carolina.

The speaker proceeded to show: First, that cities are centres of multifarious streams of influences, which flow out into the rural districts The proposition was amply illustrated by reference to the historical facts of such cities as Jerusalem, Rome London, Paris, New York and others.

Secondly, cities being fountains of outflowing influences which mould to a large extent the character of the country, it becomes a matter of stupendous moment that they be purified by the gospel.

Thirdly, one of the effective means of establishing the gospel in all of its plenary power in the city, is a church edifice ample in size, commodious in arrangement, and attractive in architecture.

The practical inference drawn by the speaker, was the necessity laid upon the Methodists to build a Metropolitan Church in the city of Raleigh.

It was an admirable address.

AT NIGHT.

the meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Ira T. Wyche. The topic for discussion was "The Educational Interests of Methodism in North Carolina." Rev. Dr. T. M. Jones, President of Greensboro Female College, delivered a very instructive and beautiful address

TRINITY COLLEGE.

Rev. Dr. Craven presented a clear, full and authentic history of Trinity College. While much of the State has given its attention to other institutions, while most of the secular papers notice with some parade the movements and results of all sorts of schools, great and small, they have never given much attention to one of the greatest forces in this State.

Trinity has a rich, interesting, and in some respects a wonderful history, a history without a parallel, a history without a knowledge of which the future history of this State cannot be written. Even our own people know little of the great work which Trinity has accomplished, or what she is now doing so quietly and effectively. Not many know how great Trinity is; taking their estimate from channels of intelligence springing from other sources, they do not imagine that in their own community is quietly living and growing one of the great colleges of the age.

Trinity began in 1838 as an ordinary school, became an Academy in 1839; was made a Normal College in 1851; had its first relation with the North Carolina Conference in 1851, was fully and finally severed from the State, and transferred to the Conference in 1859, at which time the name was changed to Trinity, and all Normal features were annulled.

From [illegible] 1870 while the institution was an Academy, the annual income varied from $200 to $1800, giving an average of $1200; the average annual matriculations were 105; annual average losses by bad debts $140; annual average gratuitous tuition $224; during this whole time there were eight expulsions, four deaths, and three hundred conversions. From 1853 to 1859, while the Institution was Normal College, average matriculations 187; average income $5,000; average annual losses $223; gratuitous tuition per annum $450.

From 1859 to 1862, annual averages, matriculations 204; income $7,500; losses $380; gratuitous tuition $830. During the whole time, expulsions 5; deaths 3; conversions 165 From 1866 to 1876, annual averages, matriculations 156; income $6,000; losses $340; gratuitous tuition $620. During the whole time, deaths 4; expulsions 4; conversions 332. During the thirty four years the Institution has existed as Academy and College, there have been 184 graduates; of these 34 are lawyers, physicians 13, professors and teachers 25; preachers 28 Of the whole number of graduates 21 have died, 13 of whom were killed during the war; 15 are members of the Conference; and 36 members of Conference, being nearly one fourth of the whole number, were educated in part or whole at Trinity. The College now owns property worth $45,000, has received from all sources $4,974; and has earned and paid for $35,000 worth of property; has supported a competent Faculty, lost $6060 by bad debts, and has given $11,300 gratuitous tuition, chiefly to sons of the preachers. In all from the first, there have been 1157 conversions at the College.

Such is Trinity's record of facts. What Institution has done better? Trinity deserves the care and patronage of the whole country. Let it have money and boys.

FOURTH DAY.

Rev. R. O. Burton led in prayer at the opening of the meeting on Friday. Bishop McTyeire then introduced Rev. E. A. Yates, Presiding Elder of Newbern District.

Topic—METHODISM: Its relation to the Origin and Progress of the Sunday school work.

The address was in every respect worthy of the able divine.

The speaker said that the general [illegible] in its subdivisions, necessarily brought about an infringement of the several parts upon each other. But this was no harm, as it served better to bring out the kinship and unity of the whole. He then proceeded to emphasize the importance of the Sabbath school work, and said that the Church had no interest of greater importance. As a remedy for infidelity, and a means for the formation of solid religious character, the Sabbath school was unsurpassed. In showing the relation of Methodism to the Sabbath school, he briefly took a bird's eye view of Methodism as an element of religious progress.

The statistics of the Sabbath school were presented in a concise form, and its origin traced to the Wesley movement and to a young lady named Hannah Ball. He paid a glowing tribute to her memory and exhorted the ladies to show themselves worthy to be her successors. The speaker brought out the fact that Bishop Asbury was the first to establish Sabbath schools upon this continent, just ninety years ago; and pronounced a brief eulogy upon the life of that holy man, and closed this part of the address with an apostrophe to the departed saint.

His propositions were about as follows:

First. Methodism is related to the Sabbath school as its mother.

Secondly. It is related to the Sabbath school in its revival element.

Thirdly. The peculiar doctrine of Methodism as to the conscious conversion or the soul, exhibits a very intimate relation between Methodism and the true Sabbath school. He here developed the true idea and objects of S. S. instruction.

Fourthly. The relation is still further disclosed by the unity of means for reaching the final result. He then closed by exhibiting the beauty and harmony of the Church in the Sabbath school and the Sabbath school in the church working for the same blessed result.

At the conclusion of the address by Rev. Yates, Dr E. L. Perkins was introduced. His theme was: METHODISM: —Its Relation to the Origin and Progress of Bible, Missionary and Tract Societies.

The speaker showed that one event is the son of another event that went before it. That one idea owes its origin to some preceding idea. That prevailing sentiments become the rules of action, and the prevailing sentiments engrafted on the membership, shape the course of action taken by the Church. One of the parent ideas of Methodism still stands in the general rules of the discipline: "Doing good of every possible sort, and as far as possible to all men." Taking this as a starting point, he showed that it was according to the spirit of Methodism to have a hand in every thing that had the promise of good as its result. He showed that J. Wesley and Thomas Coke founded the first Tract Society ever organized in England, in 1792, which was 17 years before the organization of the present great Tract Society, and 70 years before the organization of the New England Tract Society projected by the Rev. Mr. Porter and Justin Edwards of the Presbyterian Church. The Methodist Church was essentially missionary. Every preacher is a traveling missionary, a Bible agent and a tract distributor. He portrayed the labors of Summerfield and pointed to the heart melting scenes connected with the death of Bishop Coke, who sleeps amid the channels of the Indian Ocean; and the departure and death of M. B. Cox, in Africa. These facts were effectively applied, and the audience was entertained and highly edified by the address.

IN THE AFTERNOON

the meeting was led in prayer by Rev. J. S. Nelson, after which Rev. M. L. Wood delivered an Eulogy on the life and labors of the late Rev. Peter Doub, D. D. A brief but interesting account of Dr. Doub's early life was first given, which included also a statement of the introduction of Methodism into the part of the State where he was brought up. He was a native of Stokes, now Forsythe county, N C., and was born March 12, 1796. His father, John Doub, was a native of Germany, and came to this country about the beginning of the Revolutionary war. His mother was of Swiss parentage. They were both good people and trained their children in the fear of the Lord; and they joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1780 under the ministry of the Rev. Andrew Yeargan who was on the Yadkin circuit that year.

Dr. Doub's early educational opportunities were very poor. [illegible] joined the Virginia Conference in Feb. 1818, he had never seen an English Grammar, but by close application and diligent study he became a learned theologian, mighty in the Scriptures, a powerful preacher, and a strong writer, and that too while traveling large circuits and districts.

He spent 21 years on circuits, 21 on districts, for a total of 42 years, was temperance lecturer; rested one; Professor of Biblical Literature in Trinity College, three.

Many of his Circuits and Districts were large, but he punctually filled all his appointments, and found time for reading and studying. His preaching was abundantly blessed of God to the conversion of souls. During his fourth year in the ministry while on the Haw River Circuit, nearly one thousand souls were converted, and more than three hundred and fifty added to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He travelled the Yadkin District in 1826-9 and in that time more than seven thousand souls were converted in the District, 2738 of which were converted at the meetings which he conducted in person. In some places whole neighborhoods were reformed.

He was seven times elected a delegate to the General Conference, and was always considered a valuable member, was considered a wise and safe counsellor. He was also in the Louisville convention of 1845 which organized the M. E. Church South, and was the one who proposed its name.

His last labor was at Trinity College. He was as happy in the presentation of his subject in the Lecture Room as he had been before the great congregations. He never ceased to learn, and he never ceased to teach till called to his reward on high. His peaceful and triumphant death occurred August 24, 1869. Dr. Doub was a great and good man; and his works follow him. His own life is his best eulogy.

AT NIGHT

despite the rain and wind, one of the largest audiences that ever gathered in Metropolitan Hall was present to listen to Bishop Marvin who is a favorite with Raleigh congregations. After prayer by Rev. D. Culbreth Bishop Marvin was introduced. His theme was "Methodism—its Revival History." The address was philosophical, able and eloquent. To those who have heard the distinguished divine, it is enough to say that Bishop Marvin spoke.

FIFTH DAY.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Henry Gray.

Bishop McTyeire introduced Hon. Jno. N. Staples, of Greensboro, whose theme was "Church and State." The committee was fortunate in its selection of Mr. Staples as one of the speakers on this occasion. He is a Methodist layman, a lawyer by profession, and though a young man, has already acquired distinction in the profession by the skilful management of causes confided to his care. He is a member of the Legislature and at the last session took a prominent position in that body, and, among other efforts, the friends of the Usury Bill ranked his speech as one of the most effective made in its favor.

Mr. Staples discussed the question of Church and State under three heads.

1st. The Church—its antiquity triumphs and ultimate destiny.

2d. Civil government: the American System, its prerogatives and powers.

3d The relation between Church and State, in the United States.

We will give a synopsis of the address in our next issue.

AT NIGHT

after prayer by Rev. J. A. Canningim, Rev. W. S Black delivered an address on "Methodism—its itinerant plan of operations." The address was an edifying discourse and was received with marked favor by the large audience.

CENTENNIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Rev. T. A. Boone, a member of the North Carolina Conference, offered the following resolutions at the close of the exercises of the centennial mass meeting of the Sunday School Convention last week. They were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, In obedience to resolutions passed by the N. C. Conference, of the M. E. Church, South, at its late session held in the city of Wilmington, N C., a grand celebration of the Centennial of Methodism in the State of North Carolina has been held in the city of Raleigh, and during their centennial exercises, much valuable homiletical and historical truth has been brought to light, and

WHEREAS, It is needful that these truths should be suitably preserved, for the encouragement and instruction of future generations, and for the defence and propagation of Methodism, therefore be it

Resolved 1st, That the Bishops and brethren, who have delivered the various addresses on the occasion of these centennial exercises, and the unread address of Rev. W. M. Robey, President of Davenport Female College, be and are hereby earnestly and respectfully requested to furnish the manuscripts of their several addresses to the committee of arrangements and that they, the said committee, proceed, at the earliest possible day, to publish the same in book form.

Resolved 2d, That as the "Raleigh Christian Advocate" has, and does now, hold an important relation to North Carolina Methodism, the Rev. James E. Bobbitt is hereby earnestly requested to prepare a sketch of the ADVOCATE'S history and its relation to North Carolina Methodism, and that the same be published in connection with the various addresses herein referred to.

Resolved 3d, That all profits arising from the publication and sale of the said anticipated volume shall be applied to the building of a Metropolitan M. E. Church, South, in the city of Raleigh.—

Signed THOMAS A. BOONE.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

On last Sunday Bishop Doggett preached at Edenton Street Church to an immense audience from St. John 5th, 25th 29th verses. The sermon was eloquent and powerful and, the large congregation for more than an hour listened with undivided and enraptured attention to the distinguished preacher. Owing to the great crowd, it was thought inexpedient to administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, as was intended to be done.

Bishop McTyeire preached to a crowded house at Person Street Church from Hebrews 11th ch. 4th verse.

Bishop McTyeire is a clear, forcible, eloquent and polished preacher. Whatever he says carries conviction to his hearers. His ideas are large and clear and his language realizes the full beauty and force of the English tongue. The sermon of which we have not the space to give a synopsis, was earnest, eloquent and greatly edifying to the large audience

Services were held in the different Churches of the city, morning and evening Rev. R. O. Burton preached at Edenton Street Church and Rev. W C Gannon at Person St. Church at night. At Salisbury Street Baptist Church, Rev. S. D. Adams preached in the morning and Rev. J. S. Nelson at night. At the Presbyterian Church, Rev. W. H. Bobbitt preached in the morning and Rev. W. D. Lee at night.

At Swain Street Baptist Church Rev J W. Jenkins preached in the morning and Rev D A. Long, of the Christian Church, at night.

Rev J. N Andrews preached at the A M E Church at 11a. m. and Rev. J C Hartwell at 7½ P. M. At the Baptist Church (colrd) Rev J E Thompson at 3½ P. M and at Martin Street Baptist Church (colrd) Rev Jno F. Wyche preached at 3½ P. M. At Metropolitan Hall at 3½ o'clock P. M. a Sunday School Mass Meeting, was held. The crowd was immense and in order good. The singing by the children led by Sayrin endeared them to all. Mr. Young and his lady, was of the first order of excellence. Rev. J. J. Renn was the speaker of the occasion and delivered an able, instructive and eloquent address, the topic being, "The Sunday School; a place for the employment of the best talent."

Fine Sensibilities are Like Woodbines.

Delightful creation of beauty to twine around a cold unfeeling soul of understanding but very poor thing is it appreciated by those; they are not to creep along the ground, as vines are the body, which surrounded by refined heart, their all is twined in happiness. But when embodied by those there are those living to the cruel, brutal pleasures of nature and hope wanders into despair. Invalid would not enjoy the country or quiet home. Know the world as you are. Struggle to live—rejoice times, and joy to their despairing hearts has been imparted by the luminiferous Dr. Pitt's Vegetable Liver Pills, the boon to suffering humanity.

Died in Charlotte N. C. on the 4th inst Miss Ella Mclaughlin daughter of Mr. Joseph Mclaughlin, in the 25th year of her age

She was converted and joined the M. E Church, South in 1869, and to her death was a consistent christian. Her death was a calm and fearless departure from earth in a blissful hope of heaven She has gone to join her sainted mother where

"Sickness and sorrow, pain and death
Are felt and feared no more."

P. J. CARRAWAY.

Died in Onslow co N. C Jan. the 8th 1876, Alberta Markell, in the 8th year of her age She was the oldest daughter of brother W. E and Sister Martha Markell. Thus another family circle has been broken and other hearts been made to bleed. But they sorrow not as others which have no hopes. She was a promising child, very intelligent and good, loved by all who knew her. She is now with Him who said "suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God" She is safe.

"I take these little lambs said he,
And lay them in my breast
"Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest.

Children's Column.

The Disrespectful Son.

For month after month Robert Morehead had been treading the downward road, until, at last, even his christian parents had almost given up all hope of his repentance.

Several of his companions had invited him to make one of a party, who were to have a grand frolic on a certain night.

These frolics were of frequent occurrence, and always, ere morning dawned, Mr. and Mrs. Morehead were called upon to admit a son so entirely under the influence of liquor that he could hardly stagger into his home.

Occasionally policemen had borne him to his invalid mother, their rough but kindly hearts aching as they saw her silent agony.

This night, as Robert was in his room, preparing for the party, he heard his mother come to the door and speak his name.

He remained quiet, but in a moment the same loving voice again called, "Robert." Still receiving no answer, she cried, "O my son, wont you listen to your mother?"

Then, in a hard, angry voice, he called, "I do wish you would go away and leave me alone."

She left him and tottered to her room, calling on her Heavenly Father for help in her great trouble.

Robert joined his friends, and as usual their frolic became high and boisterous, ending in a drunken revel.

The next day it was long after noon, when, having somewhat recovered from the effects of the night before, he came down stairs.

The first words which met him were, "Your mother is dead." He threw himself in chair, and buried his face in his hands, moaning, "I told her to go away, and she has gone. She can never forgive me. It is too late! too late!"

And the man rose and paced the room in his agony, going over and over the same words, "Too late! too late!"

The days and weeks passed on, but he continually heard that gently voice calling, "Robert," and the same dreary cry was in his heart.

His opportunity had come, but he had thrown it away, and now it was too late.

O friend, are you not doing the same thing? Do you not hear Jesus' voice softly calling in your heart, and are you not repulsing him? He calls again and again, and you answer. "Go and leave me alone." He pleads so earnestly, and still you drive him away.

Be careful! for he may leave you, and then it will be too late. And then, though you weep and implore, though you cry continually, your only answer will be, "It is too late."

Oh! come to Jesus now.—Kind Words.

Catarrah diseases are common that snuffing, spitting, and blowing of the nose meets us at every turn on the street. Your best ships in these nasty discharges in the sidewalk and in the public conveyances; and the disagreeable odor, contaminating the breath of the afflicted, renders them odious to their associates. There is the highest medical authority for stating that with fully one-half, if not two-thirds, of those afflicted with consumption of the Lungs, the disease commences as Catarrh in the nose or head, the next step being to the throat and bronchial tubes—lastly to the lungs. How important then to give early and prompt attention to a Catarrh! To cure this loathsome disease correct the system by using Dr Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which tones up, cleanses the blood, and heals the diseased glands by a specific influence upon them; and to assist, use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche. This is the only way to reach the upper and back cavities where the discharge comes from. No danger from this treatment, and it is pleasant to use. The two medicines with instructions are sold by dealers in medicines.

Oatmeal.

Cassell's Family Magazine says: We have called it the food for bone as well as brain, muscle as well as mind. To the laboring or artisan class it commends itself as an article of diet on account of its cheapness, the readiness and economy with which it can be cooked, and while it is easily digested, it contains, as we have seen a larger proportion than wheaten bread of the elements that go to form bone and muscle. The best Scotch oatmeal costs twopence a pound, and this contains far more true nourishment, in the opinion of some medical men, than the same weight of Liebig's extract. It commends itself to literary men, and all workers who earn their bread by the sweat of their brains. There are, as we happen to know, several well-known authors who, though born and bred this side the Tweed, nevertheless swear by oatmeal porridge as a brain-inspiring compound.....There are many Scotch households in London where porridge and milk form the staple of the morning meal—a capital "basis of operation" to begin the day's work on. These families will tell you that old and young alike thrive famously on it, so that the objections sometimes made to oatmeal, that it is not suited to the English climate, being "too heating to the blood," as the phrase goes, does not hold good. Then, as to its palatableness, we ourselves have long held the belief that not only is porridge preeminently rich in nutritive matter, but when nicely cooked and eaten with new milk, is simply delicious—a dainty dish fit, indeed, to be set before any king.

THE COW.—WHAT a fountain of blessing is a cow! She is the mother of beef, the source of butter, the original cause of cheese, to say nothing of shoes, horns, hair-combs, and paper leather. A gentle, amiable, ever-yielding creature, who has no joy in her family affairs which she does not share with man. We rob her milk, and we only care for her milk, and we only care for her that the robbery may be perpetuated.

Food Crops in the South.

The Southern journals, we notice, are advising farmers in many sections to plant food crops where cotton has proved unremunerative in past seasons. Where wheat was planted last year, it is stated, the embarrassments of farmers resulted from the cotton crop, were greatly relieved as it gave them something to eat when they had no corn, or money with which to purchase wheat. At a recent agricultural meeting in West Tennessee the matter received special attention, and judging from the remarks of some of the speakers, we should not be surprised, ere long, to see the South coming into prominence for its grain products.

The following extract from a recent address would show the fervency with which grain raising is urged upon the Southern farmers:

"With full supplies upon our farms we can almost bid defiance to hard times. It has been well remarked that full corn cribs make full meat houses, and well filled barns make fine stock. Continue the policy you have commenced in regard to grain crops and soon your troubles will be at an end. Abundant grain crops, if continued, will produce abundant hog and cattle supplies, and then if you have but little money you will not have much use for it because you will have very little to buy, having raised your supplies at home."

A correspondent of the New England Farmer gives the following method of treatment for animals who may have gorged themselves with grain: Keep the animal from water. Put a quart of wood ashes into a pail of lukewarm water; give two quarts of this alkali water at intervals of one or two hours, and in this way the horse always does well, and after a day's treatment, water and feed as usual.

The best way to fry chickens is this: Scald, pick, and wash your chickens thoroughly in clean water; then quarter and throw them into boiling lard. In a few minutes they will be done brown; then remove them and serve them up hot and dry. Do not put them in grease again. In this way the fowl is very tender and is a great delicacy.

Bring out the Vital Energy.

There is generally, even in the most delicate constitution, a latent reserve of vital energy. The medical stimulant of all others best calculated to rouse this vis inertia is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The impulse which that incomparable invigorator lends to the action of the vital or organs insures a more vigorous and consequently healthy discharge of their various functions, than they would be capable of without its aid, and the "tone to nature" thus communicated is never excessive, but always equable and regular. Just so much stimulation is imparted as is required, and no more. In respect of the healthful gentleness of their action, the Bitters are immeasurably superior to the unmodified stimulants of commerce, which, though they produce a powerful resuscitating effect for a few minutes, are invariably followed by a reaction, corresponding in depression to their primal effect. They excite so much at first that nature is wearied by the effort, and is apt to sink under the exhaustion. Physicians who have made the stimulative action of the bitters the subject of experiment, declare their decided preference of them over any other similar article. An equally high opinion is entertained of their regulating qualities by medical men who are acquainted with their tonic effects. They speedily rectify an irregular habit of body, digestive disorders, and disinclination of the urinary organs, when added to their strengthening influence, renders invaluable aid in dyspepsia, constipation, biliary derangements, weakness or irritation of the bladder or kidneys. Rheumatic affections are soon driven from the system by their blood depurating and anti-inflammatory action.

READ TO FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

MR. W M SIMPSON, Sir: I am so much pleased with the result of the fertilizer I made last spring of the chemicals which I purchased of you, that I feel it due to you and the farming community to say what I think of it. I used it side by side with the "Star" at the rate of 10 lbs of the home-made to 200 lbs of the "Star," to acre.

The growth of the home made was earlier, matured earlier and made more per acre.

If I do can be of any service to you, use it, as I am fully satisfied of the merits of your fertilizer.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. HUDSON.

NUMBER 1.

In order to have a satisfactory view of my history, it is necessary in the first to get a clear and commanding standpoint. I propose to trace the rise of Methodism through our State, to note its winding course, its swelling volume and its fertilizing influence upon the material, intellectual and spiritual energies of the people. It will be eminently proper therefore, to begin at the spring-head of this sacred river, and trace its widening and deepening course into and through the length and breadth of the State. The headwaters of this stream of salvation took its rise in the city of New York. Let us then dwell a little on the humble yet chief founders of American Methodism. The following graphic account of the introduction of Methodism into the city of New York is taken from "The National Magazine," written by the Hon. G. P. Disosway:

Thirty years before Mr. Wesley's death several members of his religious societies had emigrated to America from Great Britain and Ireland. Of this number a few resided in the city of New York, and the little pious band met in a private house for religious services. This was a room in the residence of Philip Embury, who had heard Wesley in Ireland, and was also a local preacher in the "Connection." Mr. Embury was a carpenter by trade, and resided in Barrack Street. Six persons only attended his first sermon, which was preached in his workshop, and during 1766 this little flock formed the first Methodist Society in America. A large congregation followed this commencement, until the place could not contain the increasing number of hearers, and a more commodious place was soon obtained in the same neighborhood for their meetings.

Upon one of these occasions, while singing, an officer in full military uniform entered the place. He wore the dress of the royal American troops. This was Lieutenant, or, as he was generally called, Captain Thomas Webb. He was a pious officer of the British army, then stationed at Albany, and he shares the glory of being one of the founders of Methodism upon this continent. On this occasion, he knelt with them in prayer, and introduced himself as a preacher of righteousness, and soon became a zealous and successful advocate of the new sect. The memory of this excellent man should be preserved and honored for his character and exertions, with those of Mr. Embury, form some most important recollections of the earliest Methodism in the United States.

In the campaign of 1758 and before his conversion, Captain Webb served under General Wolfe. He was present at the memorable battle on the Plains of Abraham, when his gallant leader lost his life, and he himself received two wounds—one in his right arm, and another which deprived him of his right eye. Afterward, he determined to forgo all worldly pursuits, and became a follower of Mr. Wesley. He was soon appointed barrack-master of Albany, and came again to America. When he heard of the newly formed Wesleyan Society in New York, he hastened to their assistance.

In his personal appearance Captain Webb united a portly figure with a fine commanding countenance, wearing over his forehead a strip of black ribbon and a shield to conceal his wounded eye.

Captain Webb was a very plain and energetic speaker, and performed all his religious duties without a thought of the fear of man. His pious labors, in connection with those of Mr. Embury were very successful, so that they were again compelled to look out for a larger place of worship. They succeeded in obtaining a building about sixty feet long and eighteen wide, which had been erected for a rigging house. It was situated on William Street, then called Cart and Horse Street, for it is said that there having such a sign.

Great numbers now attended divine service at the rigging house, which became "the cradle of American Methodism." Desirous of giving a character of greater permanency to their religious services, the congregation resolved at length to erect a church. This was a great and momentous undertaking for a people who, at that period, had but small resources of their own, with less worldly influence. They invoked, however, the divine blessing upon their contemplated undertaking by fasting and solemn prayer for three days. At first, it was proposed to lease a small lot of ground for twenty one years, and there erect a chapel of wood. At this moment, however, a lady offered two lots of ground for $2 666 on credit and security, and these were purchased by eight members of the Society. Besides the purchase money, it was estimated that the new building would cost $1.777.

The spot was situated upon Golden Hill, a rising ground then in the suburbs of the city, but now, John Street. It took its name from a farm, celebrated for growing fine wheat, where John Street now enters into Pearl Street at Burling-slip. The house which was called Wesley Chapel, was dedicated the 30th of October 1768, Mr. Embury preaching a discourse on the occasion from the pulpit which he had finished with his own hands.

For a long while, even the seats on the lower floor had no backs. At that period in our colonial history, no public religious services could be performed in the churches, except such as were established by law. Dissenters were therefore compelled to accommodate their places of worship in some way to meet this legal obstruction. This difficulty was avoided by attaching a fireplace and chimney to the internal arrangements of Wesley Chapel, as it was thus considered a private dwelling.

Very numerous audiences soon were attracted to Wesley Chapel to "hear the word." In two years after its dedication, the congregation which had commenced three years before with only six hearers, had increased to a thousand and over, at times filling the area in front of the church.

Captain Webb returned in the meantime to England, and settled in Bristol, where he died at the age of 72 years, leaving this last and delightful testimony—"I know I am happy in the Lord, and shall be with him, and that is sufficient." Thus true faith has her crown as well as her cross.

His fellow-laborer in the early field of American Methodism, Mr. Embury, retired into the interior, where he closed his useful life in the spring of 1775, without a stone to tell where he lay. His grave was found in 1833, when his bones were removed to a neighboring burying-ground at Ash-grove, and here they were again recommitted to their mother earth with suitable religious ceremonies.—A plain marble tablet has been placed over his remains, with this inscription:

"Philip Embury,
The earliest American Minister of the M E. Church, here found his last earthly resting place.

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

Born in Ireland—an emigrant to New York—Embury was the first to gather a little class in that city, and to set in motion a train of measures, which resulted in the founding of John Street Church, the cradle of American Methodism, and the introduction of a system which has beautified the earth with salvation, and increased the joys of heaven.

Thus we see that American Methodism began its elevating work among the poor. So did British Methodism, and primitive Christianity of which it was a reproduction. The preaching of the gospel to the poor has been the honorable mission of Methodism throughout the world, and by this Archimedian lever, it has turned the world from the darkness of sin to the sun of righteousness, and caused it to rejoice and blossom as a rose. The connection between the origin of Methodism in New York and its introduction into North Carolina, will be shown in my next article.

For the Advocate.

History of the Sun

BY E. L. PERKINS.

Like all other created things, there must have been a time when the sun was not. The materials of which it is composed once formed a part of that Chaos which draped the universe with one immense solitude, athwart which no ray of light had ever flashed, to dispense its gloom, or relieve its monotony.

But the great fiat went forth, "Let there be light!" and at once particles of matter began to forsake their old associations, to reject former affinities, and to form new compounds around that point which the Creator had indicated as the centre of gravitation.

At first a small bright spot, no larger than the head of a pin, appeared, whirling on its own axis, and dashing along through space with an inconceivable velocity. It grew to the size of an apple, bright, sparkling, hissing as it went, while the older intelligences of creation gazed with wonder on the new phenomenon in nature.

Still spinning around, still rushing on through space, still flashing with increasing brilliancy, it grew in bulk and gathered variety of material. It became as large as a man's head; then many feet in diameter; then a mile; then many miles. Thus it grew; as ages rolled on it continued to glitter, and flash, and roar, and increase, until it became a tremendous globe of light, one million four hundred and ten thousand nine hundred and ten times as large as the earth.

Having now become an object of such magnitude in the universe we must change our descriptive pronoun from it to him. He now became, by his widespread influence, the great shed anchor of the family of planets, that had formed around him, and are held to their places by the "powerful cable of gravitation." These planets the sun takes with him on a circuit, which has the star Alcyone as its centre, and though he travels four hundred thousand miles per day, he will be over eighteen millons of years in completing a single round. No telegram has ever announced whether or not his first round has been completed, or, if not, when it will be; or whether he is in his first, second, third, fifth or fifty-fifth round.

All great characters who are independent enough to shine by the light of their own genius, are subject to the malicious efforts of envious individuals, who plot to obscure their brightness. There is a little globe, thirteen times smaller than the earth (the moon) that is very frequently throwing itself before the face of the sun, to prevent his looking his fair daughter, earth, in the face. But insignificant impudence never succeeds beyond spasmodic efforts, attended by fruitless results.

There are, however, certain secret enemies not so well accounted for. In the year A. D. 360 the sun became suddenly eclipsed, to all the eastern provinces of the Roman Empire, for a whole day. Darkness was total, except the light of the stars. In 536 he was obscured, and continued so fourteen months. In 626, half the disk only was visible for eight months. In 984, his light was diminished for two months, complete darkness came on by day for six hours. A similar occurrence was observed again in June 1241. June 1547, the solar disk appeared blood red for three days. But in spite of all these troubles, the sun is still the great, grand, undiminished light dispenser and guide of his family, on the great circular path leading through the trackless regions of immensity.

Some suppose that the sun has another class of enemies, that instead of trying to obscure his brightness, pelt him with great meteoric missles. Hence those enormous explosions that occasionally take place on the surface of the sun. Disturbances that agitate many thousands of miles square in a few minutes. From the nature of these great outbursts, it is more than probable that the sun is as great for noise as for light. An explosion that will sweep over forty thousand miles in a minute, cannot be a silent affair, but must be attended by shocks, compared with which, our heaviest thunder claps are but as the faintest whisperings.

How long the Sun will endure this meteoric pelting, science and Revelation fail to indicate. It may be essential to his brightness, as our enemies often do us good, by calling forth a display of our virtues.

As it is customary to describe the character of the heroes of whom we write, we may add that the Sun has furnished us with the finest example of energy, benevolence, and impartiality.

As a creature of perseverance, he never pauses in the discharge of the duties assigned him, but acts to day with the same undiminished vigor that he did six thousand years ago, in dispensing light and heat for the comfort of the teeming millions that inhabit the planets revolving in his domain.

His benevolence is characteristic, in as much as, that while the planets draw their light supplies perpetually from him, they have never been known to give back anything in return, except the songs of praise that arise from the various choirs that inhabit them.

The impartiality of the sun is also very notable. He pours a flood of golden light upon the evil and the good, the ungrateful as well as those who give thanks. The small and the great, the humble and the proud, all share alike the bounties of the great luminary. We can devise no better conclusion than to advise all intelligent beings to study and imitate the character of this great dispenser of light, life and liberty.

Heaven.

BY MRS S. T. PERRY.

When once about our cottage door,
A little, simple child, I played,
The sky to me was the great floor
Of the grand house that God had made;
And the bright stars, that met my sight,
Were angel watchmen of the night.

Then childish faith and love could see
In every lonely, darksome place,
The Father looking on us all,
And smiles upon his loving face.
The fleecy clouds that silvery shone
Were glimpses of the Great White Throne.

In the far west, at soft twilight,
Amid the beams of red and gold,
Did heaven's gates of pearly white
So often to my sight unfold;
At every evening soul knelt there
Borne on the wings of childhood's prayer.

Alas! that love and childish trust
With childhood's years were soon outgrown;
The things of time, of sense, of dust,
Hid from my soul God's Great White Throne,
And the world's mansions towered high,
Hiding the gates in the western sky.

Heaven became a place unknown,
Like some far city 'cross the sea;
And a stern king upon a throne,
Who cared no more to smile on me;
And unbelief hid from my sight
The angel watchers of the night.

The world was beautiful and fair;
I loved its glittering, dazzling toys;
I gathered all its gifts so rare,
And gave my soul to all its joys.
The path to heaven dark became,
I lost my way, nor asked the same.

With pity the good Father's eye
Watched over me while I went astray;
He sent an angel from on high
And took my little child away.
How well the good, wise Father knew
That I would turn and follow you.

Then earthly things to me were naught,
I longed to find that city fair;
Amid the strangers sore I sought,
The child of faith—a dweller there.
I longed to walk the golden street,
Its dear; sweet face once more to meet.

Years have passed. I'm traveling still,
So worn and weary, old and gray;
I've almost reached the western hill;
The sun goes down; the closing day
Amid the beams of red and gold
That little child the gates unfold.

—Evangelist.

A heathen who stood in Calcutta listening to a missionary disputing with a Brahmin, said he knew which was right though he did not understand the language. He knew he was in the wrong who lost his temper first. For the most part this is a very accurate way of judgment. Try to avoid debating with people. State your opinion and let them state theirs. If you see that a stick is crooked, and you want people to see how crooked it is, lay a straight rod down beside it; that will be quite enough. But, if you are drawn into controversy, use very hard arguments and very soft words. Frequently, you can not convince a man by tugging at his reason; but you can persuade him by winning his affections.

Ever since the Gospel was first preached, there have risen those whose success has far surpassed that of others trained in the schools and skilled in all that is usually understood as essential to success. The secret is not hard to find. It is not because small endowments and little education are better than large gifts and a thorough discipline, but because there is a complete consecration in the one case, while in the other it is not found. If a man is to preach Christ with power, he must give himself wholly to his ministry. It must be to him the sweetest, truest, noblest thing on all this earth.

Spurgeon on Eccentric Preachers.

At the recent annual tea meeting of the friends and supporters of the Pastors' College connected with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, addresses were delivered by several of the students, and during the evening Mr. Spurgeon delivered a lecture on "Eccentric Preachers." He said he was almost sorry to speak on the subject of eccentric preachers, because somebody had been rude enough to observe that he wondered if he should consider himself to be an eccentric preacher. (Laughter.) Of course, we must consider that there was anything eccentric about him, whatever there might have been years ago. In every generation there had been objections to the ministers. John the Baptist came neither eating or drinking. He was a good Templar and a Baptist, and they said, "He has a devil." Jesus Christ came eating and drinking, and they said He was a winebibber, and a friend of publicans and sinners. Neither the one nor the other would exactly suit. He supposed he was eccentric to some people. Granted; but they were eccentric to him. (Laughter.) A man called him a Dissenter the other day, but he did not own to it at all. That man belonged to the Established Church, and was a dissenter—he dissented from him. He had as much right to be the standard as that man had. The man said to him, 'You are a Nonconformist;' but he said, 'No, it is you who do not conform to me.' (Laughter.) And was that not so? Because who was to put down what it was they were to conform to? (Applause.) Who was to fix the centre? 'Oh,' some would say, 'it is to be found in the vestry.' If they would open the door they would see—what was it? A laundry? (Langhter.) Black gowns, and green gowns, and albs, and birettas, and—but he was not well up in the terminology of ecclesiastical millinery. What was eccentric at one time was not eccentric at another. Some one hundred years ago or more, when John Wesley stood to preach on his father's grave in Epworth Church yard, people said he was eccentric to preach in the open air. But Jesus and his apostles preached in the open air. Now a days a Dissenter must not stand on a gravestone or be under it. (Laughter.) They were forbidden. Those holy worms that feel on Churchmen would become ill if they fed on Dissenting bodies. (Loud laughter.) One of the charges of eccentricity against Whitfield and Wesley was that they actually wore their own hair instead of wearing wigs. Could anything be more monstrous? (Laughter.) A holy person from Holland wrote to him and said he had read his sermons with pleasure, but he could do so no longer, as he had been told he was a carnal and worldly man, who wore a monstache. (Loud laughter.) He had not a word to say for such men, but gave them over as dead horses to the dogs of criticism. He had heard of a man who tried to get a congregation by saying that if they would come he would show them the easiest way to make a pair of shoes, and when they came he fulfilled his promise by taking a pair of boots, and cutting the tops off. That was a species of eccentricity which he would not advise any one to imitate. Old Latimer was eccentric, but there was something very genuine about him, and one could not help loving him. Coming down to Wesley's time, there was John Berridge. He could not live without being funny. He was quaint by nature. When he preached the seats of the church had a double row of people in every one of them. People sat on the top of the beams, and ladders were placed to the windows, and there was a person on every round. To judge rightly of the conduct and sayings of a minister, they must know the circumstances in which he was placed. Things often looked ridiculous which they would not do if they knew all. What seemed to have been eccentric might have been the wisest thing after all. They should say the right thing and the true, and discharge their consciences before God.

The Independence Quill.

Among the many novelties and relics of one hundred years ago that are expected to be on exhibition at the celebration of the Centennial in this city (Rome) is the pen used in signing the Declaration of Independence. This ancient pen is now in the possession of Uncle William Floyd at westernville. He is in the eighty-sixth year of his age. His father, Gen. Floyd, was one of the fathers of our country, having been one of the immortal signers of the Declaration of Independence with the now nearly one-hundred years-old pen. This curiosity is made from a quill taken from a Scotch goose, and is twice the size of those that grow in this country. It is now thought that the attendance of Uncle Bill" can be procured and that he will go through with the form of signing that which made this country free one hundred years ago.—[*Utica (N. Y.) Hints to Young Christians.

Don't be afraid to "show your colors." A cowardly Christian is a misnomer.—Shrink from no declaration, from no duty that Christ desires of you. The timid, vacillating course is the hardest and most barren. The brave, outspoken, faithful life is the happiest and most effective.

There are many things you do not understand as yet. But let no doubts or uncertainties prevent you from acting on what you do know. There are some spiritual facts clear enough, plenty of Christian duties plain enough, to your feet immediately on these. Do faithfully all you know you ought to do, and the larger knowledge will follow in due time.

Use earnestly every means that will enlarge and strengthen your Christian life. Study the Bible. Pray without ceasing. Do not neglect the prayer meeting or the Sunday school. Stir up your Sunday-school teacher and get your doubts explained. Go to your pastor with your questions, and find out the best he knows on the things that perplex you. Keep your heart warm by doing good.

Make your life beautiful in the sight of man, and show them the sweetness and power of Christianity. Be conscientious in little things. Let the Master's spirit shine through every hour of your life. In school, in shop, or field, in society, the young Christian ought to be the most faithful, the most courteous, the most generous and kind, the noblest of any person there.

Follow Christ. Seek to reproduce his traits in your life. Do always as you would believe he would do if he were in your place; so you will have a growing, joyful, successful Christian career.

To be ignorant of the teachings of the Bible is a reproach even to an infidel; how much more so to those professing to believe it to be the Word of God and the only rule and guide of faith! A desultory or aimless reading may profit, but it will profit little. To comprehend its truths properly, requires systematic effort and a suitable plan. Many excellent people have adopted plans, which, after a few weeks or months, they have laid aside. This has happened chiefly because the plans were too complicated or too burdensome. To read the Bible through in a year with due reverence and care, requires more time than most persons in active life can command. A trial of over twenty years leads me to suggest the following plan.

The time required is three years. To accomplish this, using the ordinary edition (32mo. nonpareil), will require twenty pages per month. That amount may be read at the regular rate of two thirds of a page per day; or perhaps, better, half a page on week day and two pages on Sunday. It will not be necessary to read exactly half a page each day, but a few verses more or less, as the connection may require. Progress should be noted in the margin with a pencil. It may be better not to read seriatim, but to take one week in the historical books, then one in the poetic, then one in the New Testament.

This method has the advantage that one may take time to re-read that which may seem to need such attention, to compare references and parallel passages, to examine notes and comments on difficult points. It also allows time for the "the Daily Readings" given in our most excellence Berean Lesson Leaves. Besides this, reading at such a deliberate rate gives one such a delicious sense of calm and quiet enjoyment.

"Jennie June" relates this reminiscence of her life at Southbridge, Mass: 'I had only one enemy in Southbridge, to my knowledge and that was an old deacon's wife. The way it came about was this: I was my nephew's teacher, as well as my brother's housekeeper, and on one occasion, when we had been invited to dine in state at her house, she called out to Egbert in a high voice from her end of the table, 'Sonny, won't you have some pud din'?' and to the horror and consternation of his papa and myself, the terrible infant replied, quite as lordly, 'I guess if you lived at our house my aunt would make you say pudding.' I am sure at that moment I wished grammar and correct pronunciation were with truth at the bottom of a well, but it was of no avail. Going home my reverend brother remarked, 'It will never be forgiven, Jeanie, and he proved to be right; it never was."

The celebrated John Randolph, in one of his letters to a young relative, says: "I know nothing I am so anxious you should acquire as the faculty of saying 'No.' You must expect unreasonable requests to be preferred to you every day of your life, and must endeavor to deny with as much facility and kindness as you acquiesce.'

Speak Now.

In one of his addresses lately, Mr. Moody said that he visited a little town in Illinois and found it greatly stirred over the death of a prominent merchant. Before his death the physician spoke to him about his soul. "Why," responded the dying man, "I have known you a great many years, and if there is any reality in the religion of Jesus why did you put off speaking about it till now?" Those words kept ringing in the doctor's ears, and he told the man the next day that it was not too late for him to be saved. The merchant said it was, and died unconverted. A man said to another a few evenings since, "This Christianity is all a sham; these Christians are all hypocrites." His friend inquired, "Do you call our mother a hypocrite?" "Why, no, he said; "but you think my mother believes what she professes? Do you think if she believes I am lost that she would never tell me of it?" Men do not read the Bible, but they read Christians, who ought to be living epistles. Andrew's first thought after finding Christians was to seek after Peter, and he brought him to Jesus. Many persons thought they were very good Christians if they heard three sermons a week. The church was asleep and the sons and daughters of professing Christians were going down to eternal death. Oh, that this formalism were swept out of the church! The human heart is not harder than it was when Adam fell, and there is as much power in the gospel to day as in former times.

How John Bunyan got out of Prison.

Bunyan was, in his day, quite a controversial writer, and was very severe upon the Quakers, until he learned that through the intercession of that sect he obtained his release from prison. It is a somewhat note worthy fact, now well authenticated, that Charles II. liberated Quakers and Puritans from confinement, through the personal intercession of the Quakers, among whom was Richard Carver, who was the mate of the fishing vessel which conveyed the king to France, after the famous battle of Worcester, 1751. This honest Quaker sailor, after twenty years had rolled away, appealed to the king in person in behalf of those who were in prison. When the fugitive king fled for his life, the sailor conveyed him on shore. The vessel was bound for Poole, coal-laden, with two passengers, who passed for merchants running away from their creditors. The fugitive king and Lord Wilmot were landed at Fecamps, in Normandy, upon the back of a Quaker, and the vessel recrossed the Channel to Poole.

When the honest sailor appeared before his Majesty, the king expressed astonishment that he had not previously sought some reward. The sailor replied that he had merely done his duty, and God had rewarded him with peace of mind.

"And now sire, I ask nothing for myself, but that your Majesty will do the same for my friends that I did for you: set the poor, pious sufferers at liberty, that you may have that peace and satisfaction that always follow good action." King Charles thereupon pardoned four hundred and seventy one Quakers, and many Independents and Baptists—among them John Bunyan.

A Father's Lesson to his Son.

One day Robert's father saw him playing with some boys who were rude and unmannerly. He had observed for some time a change for the worse in his son, and now he knew the cause. He was very sorry, but he said nothing to Robert at the time.—In the evening he brought from the garden six rosy cheeked apples, put them on a plate, and presented them to Robert. He was much pleased at his father's kindness, and thanked him. "You must lay them aside for a few days, that they may become mellow," said the father, and Robert cheerfully placed the plate with the apples in his mother's storeroom.

Just as he was putting them aside, his father laid on the plate a seventh apple, which was quite rotten, and desired him to allow it to remain there.

"But, father," said Robert, "the rotten apple will spoil all the others!"

"Do you think so? Why should not fresh apples rather make the rotten ones fresh?" asked his father; and with these words he shut the door of the room.

Eight days afterward he asked his son to open the door and take out the apples. But what a sight presented itself! The six apples which had been so sound and rosy-cheeked were now quite rotten, and spread a bad smell through the room.

"Father," cried he, "did I not tell you that the rotten apples would spoil the good ones? You did not listen to me."

"My boy," said the father, "have I not told you that the company of a bad child will make you bad? Yet you do not listen to me. See in the state of the apples that which will happen to you, if you keep company with wicked boys."

Robert did not forget the lesson.—When any bad boys asked him to play with them he thought of the rotten apples, and kept himself apart from them.

In old times people called a pearl a "margaret." In an old Bible I once read about the "pearl of great price," but it was called a "precious margaret." I read this to a little girl named Margaret, and she was very happy to find her name in the Bible. All the Marys and Marthas, and Ruths, and Abigails, and Graces, and Charitys, can find their names in the Bible, you know. My name is not in the Bible; I wish it were. But there is a better place than the Bible in which to have your name written: it is in the Lamb's Book of Life. You may read about it in the Revelation.—Apples of Gold.

HOME FOR DISABLED CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.—Governor Brogden has received a letter from J. H. Stearns, surgeon of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in regard to the establishment of a similar institution for disabled Confederate soldiers. Dr. Stearns has sent a similar letter to all the governors of southern states. He thinks that congress would readily donate a sufficient quantity of land, say in Florida, for the purpose, with the understanding that the governors of the different states are to control the institution as a board of managers. In the various northern homes about 4,500 disabled soldiers are now cared for and Dr. Stearns does not think the number in the south requiring such assistance will amount to over 1,000.

The New Albany (Indiana) Plate-glass Company, is engaged in manufacturing for exhibition at the Centennial two plate-glasses twenty two feet long by seventeen wide, one of which will be silvered as a mirror and the other will be plain. These will be the largest single plate glasses ever made. The largest heretofore manufactured were exhibited at the Vienna Exhibition, and were nineteen feet long by eleven wide.

The suit against the absconded New York gigantic speculator, Tweed, was concluded last week by a verdict against him for $3,719,-949 35, and interest amounting to $1 817,-177.67. The Cross (X) Mark is to remind you that your subscription has expired. Let all renew promptly.

An interesting revival of religion is in progress at Edenton Street Church, under the direction of Rev. Dr. Burkhead, the pastor.

The revival at Franklinton, conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. S. Webb, has been attended with the happiest results.

The Ladies of the Sewing Society of Person Street Church have subscribed $50 for the New Metropolitan Church in this city.

We are much gratified in being able to state that the ADVOCATE is rapidly increasing in circulation.—Our preachers and laymen too are canvassing faithfully in its behalf.—Every member of our Church should take it.

A note from Bishop McTyeire informs us that he reached home on Wednesday the 29th ult. He has pleasant memories of his trip and of his visit to the Centennial Celebration of North Carolina Methodism.

Rev. Dr. Jas. A. Duncan, of Randolph Macon College, will preach the Sermon at Greensboro Female College at the Commencement in June. The address will be delivered by Maj. Seaton Gales of Raleigh.

The Baptist Sunday school of the Salisbury Street Church, through its excellent Superintendent, Mr. T. H. Briggs, Jr., subscribed $50 for the building of the Metropolitan Methodist Church in this city. It was a graceful and commendable act and is appreciated by the Methodists of this city.

Several prominent members of the M. E. Church, South, within the bounds of the Baltimore Conference, have purchased the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist. Rev. Samuel K. Cox, D. D., is announced as the editor, while Rev. Dr. Poisal is the agent and corresponding editor. Under this new regime, the prospects of the Methodist are flattering. May great success attend it!

At the late centennial meeting held in this city, we were requested to prepare for publication a historical sketch of the Advocate and its relation to North Carolina Methodism. We should be glad to have access to the file of the Advocate from its commencement up to 1865. If any of our readers preserved a file, will they do us the kindness to give us access to it?

WORKING.—Bro. J. J. Renn is a good worker for the ADVOCATE. He has forwarded the names of many new subscribers this year and promises more. He told us, during Centennial week, of a certain church on his charge at which there was not a single copy of the ADVOCATE received, when he entered upon his work. The members were careless about church duties and contributed almost nothing to the support of the pastor and the discharge of other financial obligations. He saw what was needed and among the first things he did was to secure a club of subscribers to the ADVOCATE at that church. The result is that the church is awake, and has gone beyond its assessments in financial duties.—He attributes the change to the introduction of the ADVOCATE.

Bro. Eli Shankle, of Norwood, Stanly county, will accept our thanks for a club of subscribers and his promise to send another. It cheers us to receive such testimonials from our friends—especially from laymen. It shows that our work is appreciated and that laymen do not pass over to ministers the entire responsibility of working for the Church and its institutions, but are willing to assist their pastors. Bro. Shankle lives in the neighborhood of "Center" the seat of the last session of the Charlotte District Conference, in as good a county and among as good a people as the earth holds. The Advocate is freely circulated there—the Church and its institutions are well supported and Bro. Ricaud the excellent pastor, would no doubt favor the movement towards an extended pastorate. We trust that many laymen in all parts of our Conference will follow the example of Bro. Shankle.

In his letter our good brother says: "We have a good Sunday School in the Fork country this year. We don't go into winter quarters but continue all the year. We were favored with an elegant Centennial sermon last Sunday at Center by our pastor, Rev. T. P. Ricaud."

Mr. Philip Philips and Dr. Thoburn are conducting revival-meetings in Calcutta, India.

How to Succeed.

Rev. T. A. Boone, in charge of Mocksville circuit, is an indefatigable worker for the Raleigh Christian Advocate. He proposes to send us one hundred subscribers during the year, and we believe he will do it, for he has already sent us thirty-three, and still they come.

The secret of his success, as we learn from him, is this: In visiting among his people, he makes it a point to inquire of each member of his Church, (except in cases where there are several members in one family, then he inquires of some one member of that family) whether or not they take the Raleigh Christian Advocate. If they are not taking, it he present to them reasons why they should do so, and in nine cases out of ten, when the party, or parties are able to pay for it, he is successful in securing their subscription. We have ever insisted that the reason our Church journals are no better supported than they are is, that there is not enough pains-taking among the preachers to impress this important duty upon their members. Who, among the preachers or laity, will resolve as Bro. Boone has done, to send us 100 subscribers during this Centennial year of North Carolina Methodism?

The Metropolitan Church.

During our Centennial celebration the movement towards building a new and spacious church edifice in Raleigh, met with marked favor. Our Bishops and visiting brethren agreed with the more directly interested Methodists of our city, that a church building, worthy of our beloved Methodism and of our great State and growing city, is needed here and should be erected at an early a day as possible. In response to the call for subscriptions, on Wednesday evening, nearly nine thousand dollars were pledged. Among those who subscribed large amounts was Mr. Geo. T. Cook, of this city, who pledged himself for $1000. The Ladies' Sewing Society of Edenton St. Church pledged itself for another thousand.

On Friday evening, and Saturday morning and evening, the call for subscriptions was repeated and finally the amounts pledged aggregated $12,145. On Saturday morning, a gentleman of this city who, when making donations (which he does frequently and liberally) always prefers that his name shall remain unknown, sent up to the Secretary's stand a donation of $1,000 cash.

The subscriptions were confined to the residents of Raleigh. Liberal pledges were made by parties in other parts of the Conference, and from the interest which ministers and laymen outside of Raleigh manifested, we infer and certainly hope that Methodists in all parts of the Conference will contribute freely to the erection of our Metropolitan Church.

When the cash donation of $1,000 was made to the Metropolitan Church, a friend telegraphed the fact to Bishop Marvin, who was on his way to Richmond. The wires flashed back the Bishop's reply: "Thank God!"

Methodism—Its Founders.

With the foregoing as his theme, Bishop McTyeire inaugurated the series of Centennial addresses which so greatly edified those who attended the exercises. It was a masterly effort and, though an unwritten address, was unsurpassed by any that followed and was as clear, logical and instructive an exposition of the motives and work of the Founders of Methodism, their trials and triumphs, their labor and its glorious results, as could have been made in the most elaborately prepared lecture. The citation of statistics showing the great strength and resources of Methodism in the world and particularly in the United States, as compared with other denominations, was gratifying to the laudable pride of Methodists and surprised even many who thought themselves conversant with Methodist history and statistics. It stayed the attention of people other than Methodists and caused them to reflect upon the magnitude of Methodism now and its future possibilities. In short, the address elevated Methodism in the eyes of other people and increased the veneration of Methodists for their own Church—it built up and strengthened Methodist "back-bone."

He glorified Methodism but in such a way as not to give offence; and though other denominations were shown by his comparative statistics, to be inferior in strength and resources and less efficient in spreading the gospel over the world, yet his manner and language were so courteous and guarded that they offended no one. A distinguished lawyer and a staunch Presbyterian was heard to remark: "It was one of the most massive, polished and impressive addresses I ever listened to, and not its least admirable feature was the tender regard had for the feelings of other denominations." That was the opinion of an educated and competent critic.

We regret that we have not before us the statistics which Bishop McTyeire gathered and employed in his address. They will appear in the forthcoming volume of the Centennial proceedings and will, of themselves, make the book worth the price at which it will be sold.

It is said that among the thirteen thousand ministers who belong to the Baptist church, only one hundred and fifty are in open communion.

Methodism—Its Revival History—by Bishop E. M. Marvin.

The Bishop commenced his address by saying: "Revivals are no mere incident of Methodism. It is itself a Revival. The entire significance of it is given in that word. It originated in no dissatisfaction with any form of church government. It did not undertake to form a new church. That it ultimated in distinct church organizations was due to no design of those who were its first and principal instruments, but to the fact that its innate force was too great to stop short of that result. It was too vital to find expression in existing organizations. It had, of necessity, to create its own organs of expression and action. If it had found an adequate organization it would have been only too glad to use it. The originators of it were not aware that the methods and agencies they were setting on foot would, by a vital law which was in them, develop into a most imposing church organization—an organization having greater reproductive efficiency than any other in christendom. Mr. Wesley saw it and accepted it before he died. But that occurred at a very late period of his life, and it seems unaccountable to us now that a man of his wonderful acumen should have been so slow to make the discovery. * * Methodism was not a revolution against existing ecclesiastical authority, nor against established doctrines, but a Revival of Religion. It was just that—nothing less—nothing more."

The "Revival" was considered under the following analysis. 1st, Its Origin—2nd Its Methods—3d Its Effects.

1st. Revivals come from God. They are His work. Too great emphasis cannot be given to this fact. It must not, in any case, be lost sight of. The power is of God. If then the Wesley an movement was a genuine revival it was the work of God. It was a special outpouring of the Holy Ghost. The genesis of all vital movements tending to holiness is in God. This part of the subject was replete with the history of the labors of the Apostle and Reformers and the Wesleyan movement with an interesting and able elucidation of the character of John Wesley and his methods of work and organization.

2d. The methods by which this revival has been carried on were considered under several subdivisions.

The preaching of Mr. Wesley and his co-laborers dealt mainly with the most vital doctrines of the gospel—sin, the wrath of God, repentance, attonement, pardon, regeneration, eternal death, eternal life.

The humility, piety, and faith of the preachers and their devotion to their work, were considered as great elements of success.

"These men were in communion with God. From a holy agony of wrestling in the closet they went to their congregations. They had power with God, and that was the secret of their power with men."

"They were untrammeled by conventionalities. Thought did not exhaust itself in the mechanical structure and literary finish of their sermons. They were charged with the word of God and must deliver it. They used the language of the common people, and eschewing a phraseology that was stale and stereotyped, their message sounded fresh and came in spontaneous expression from the heart."

The preachers were men of the people and in full sympathy with them.

They preached faithfully, a present salvation, a free salvation, a full salvation, a conscious salvation.

The secret of the efficiency of the itinerant system in keeping alive the revival spirit of the church was considered

"Singing was a prominent and striking feature of the work. The old Wesleyan hymns were of a higher order of poetry, with much more of solid evangelical thought and a nobler style of sentiment, than the songs in use by the revivalists of our time. There was nothing frivolous in them. They had a merit that caused them to live. They gave a just and full expression to all the emotions of penitence, the deep consciousness of faith and the rapture of worship. They enlightened the understanding and melted the heart. Many a hardened sinner who had resisted the gospel in the sermon was conquered by the gospel in the song. All the people sang, and only as those who know their sins forgiven can sing. The pathos was irresistible."

3d. The results of the Methodistic revival were eloquently reviewed. A history of the work in Great Britain and Ireland, its commencement in America and the great achievements following it and a glowing tribute to the memory of many of Methodism's most faithful laborers, formed the conclusion of this truly great effort.

Bishop Marvin said, "Methodism can never perish. I dare not affirm that the churches which are its present incarnation will never become effete. But the spirit and essence of the great revival can never die."

"Blessed be God that you and I have been admitted to the company at a time when, in the midst of Centennial rejoicings, we enter into the abundant labors of these glorified men. When we transmit the inheritance to our successors may they not find it all gone to barrenness and weeds under our thriftless hands. God forbid! May we live so that the tears of our survivors shall be made irridescent with the glory of our departure! May we leave the great Revival in full vigor when we go to join the multitude of Methodists on Mount Zion in the general assembly and Church of the first born."

The Progress of Methodism in the Nineteenth Century, by Bishop D. S. Doggett.

This address, as we stated in our last, was one of rare excellence, and we should like to give our readers a full synopsis of it, but we must be content in giving in part the statistical portion of his address. John Wesley, said the Bishop, began his system with a class meeting of some eight or ten, in London in 1739. The first Methodist church formed in America was the John Street, New York, in 1766. From these small beginnings, a little more than a hundred years ago, the Methodist church has assumed stupendous proportions.

The general summary, given in the Methodist Almanac for 1876, is as follows:

EPISCOPAL METHODISTS IN U. S.

Itinerant Ministers, 1875	14,845	3,926,000
Local Preachers, Lay Members	25,484

NON-EPISCOPAL METHODISTS.

Itinerant Ministers, 1875	1,901	117,307
Local Preachers, Lay Members	1,442

Total—Itinerant Ministers 16,746; Local Preachers, 27,926; Lay Members, 3,043,307. Adding the preachers to the members we have 3,816,561.

Now, if we take the aggregate of the church throughout the world there will be according to the same authority, 27,591 itinerant preachers, 61,474 local preachers, and 4,189,105 members, making a grand total of 4,278,170. If now we estimate three adherents to each member, the usual proportion, the Methodist church will have a following of 12,834,510 souls.

Next in size to the Methodist is the Baptist denomination. According to the Year Book of 1875, which contains the statistics of 1874, two years behind the Methodist almanac, which is for 1876, the Regular Baptists number in the United States, 21,511 churches, 13,354 ministers, and 1,761,710 members. With other Baptist bodies, the Baptist membership reached the first of last year, 2,335,737. The Presbyterians are next who number 7,790 ministers, and 613, 368 members. The Protestant Episcopal church has 3,140 ministers and 273,092 members. The Roman Catholics have 4,873 priests and claim 6,000,000 members, though they count many who are really in no church and many in Protestant churches.

As to church property, the Methodists are in advance of all others. The census of 1870, puts down their property at $69,854,121; the Baptists $41,607, 198. Episcopal, $36,514,549; the Presbyterian, $53,265,156, and the Roman Catholic, $60,985,566.

Nor has their progress in the cause of education been less extraordinary. The Wesleyans have 3 theological seminaries, 9 colleges, and 900 day schools. The M. E. Church North has 3 theological seminaries, 27 colleges and universities and 69 academies and institutes. The M. E. Church South has 2 universities, 17 male and 30 female colleges, with 12 academies—making a total of 1072 institutions of learning under the control of their conferences.

Greensboro Female College.

Rev. Dr. T. M. Jones, President of G. F. College, in his address at the Centennial celebration gave an interesting history of the college which will be read with pleasure by the friends of that noble institution. The following is a synopsis of his address:

The Greensboro Female College was chartered in 1838. The corner stone was laid in 1843. Oration on the occasion delivered by Rev. Sam'l S. Bryant.

The building made of brick, three stories high and containing 34 rooms, was completed in 1845, and cost about $20 000

It was built by public donations. The largest ever made to the College was a bequest of $4.000,—by Mrs. Susan Mendenhall, of Guilford county.

The Trustees selected a faculty in Feb. 1846, and the exercises of the school began in April 1846. Rev. Soloman Lea, of Leasburg N. C. was the first President. He had the honor of organizing the classes in the first regularly chartered female college in N. C., and the second, south of the Potomac. He continued in charge of the college 2 years, and was succeeded by Rev. A. M. Shipp, of the S. C. Conference, who was elected in Dec 1847.

Rev. Mr. Shipp's administration continued 2½ years. He resigned in June 1850. Rev. Charles F. Deems, of the N. C. Conference was chosen as his successor, and continued in charge of the Institution for 4½ years. He resigned the presidency in Dec. 1854, and was succeeded by T. M. Jones of Franklin co. N. C. He continued in the position until Aug. 1863, 8½ years.

At this time the College was burned down, and the school was necessarily suspended. Number of pupils since the school first began, about 1450, number of graduates 204

Efforts to rebuild the College, were immediately made. The work was progressing rapidly, when the war en ded in 1865. In consequence of the change in the condition of affairs soon after the war closed, the enterprize was temporarily abandoned.

After a few years, the great necessity for the school caused a renewal of an effort to complete the building. its capital, and its shaft covered with $20.000 were secured in bonds, upon loans, scholarships and stock, Greensboro taking one half this sum. In 1871 the work on the unfinished building was resumed under the superintendence of Rev. W. Barringer.

On the 10th March, 1873, a few months before the building was completed, occurred the saddest event connected with the history of the College—the death of the lamented William Barringer, caused by a fall from the gangway leading to a window in the 3rd story. In the death of Rev W Barringer, the College lost one of its warmest friends and wisest counsellors, the Church an earnest, faithful and successful minister of the gospel, and the community a liberal, useful and honored citizen.

On the 27th August, 1873, ten years and 17 days from the destruction of the old building by fire, the new building was ready for occupancy, and the school was opened. It has been in successful operation for nearly 3 years The prospects of the school are flattering. Still there is one difficulty that rises up before it—the heavy debt hanging over it. The largest portion of this debt is due to Rev. Dr. N. H. D. Wilson and Col. Charles Shober of Greensboro, N. C.

When all funds in the hands of the building committee had been exhausted, and the work was far from completion, these gentlemen, with a confidence in the Methodists of the State, that reflects credit upon the Church, liberally furnished the funds needed to complete the building.

Will not the Church and the friends of Female Education in the State, honor this noble confidence, and during the centennial year of Methodism in N. C, raise funds to repay these liberal men, and relieve the College from debt?

The new College building is very large, commodious, and well suited for school purposes. It is situated on an eminence a few yards west of the limits of the town of Greensboro, in the center of an enclosure of 40 acres, most of which is well shaded, and capable of a high degree of improvement. It contains 84 rooms, and has capacity for the accommodation of 200 boarding pupils.

The dormitories are plainly but neatly furnished, well ventilated, and warmed by means of fireplaces. It has been furnished with all the appliances of a first class Female College. It offers superior advantages for the mental and moral training of young ladies.

Synopsis of Rev. J. J. Renn's Address at the late Centennial Celebration in Raleigh.

The Sunday School—a field for the employment of the best talent.

The speaker introduced his subject by reference to the general neglect of children by the Church until the origin of Sunday schools less than a century ago, the lively interest felt in the subject now, and the magnitude of the work in its extent and results.—To show the necessity for the best talent in the work he discussed

1st: The design of the Sunday school to form character, to prepare for usefulness, for adversity, to learn the theory and practice of religion

2d. The desire of young minds for knowledge, in which the child was represented as an embryo philosopher searching for the design, the Designer, and the destiny of all things, his failure without competent instruction, his success with it.

3d. The great display of talent in the cause of modern infidelity. Infidelity has ceased to dogmatize, to persecute, to ridicule religion, but more subtile still, endeavors now to destroy by the aid of reason Let the children be trained in the precepts and practice of our holy religion, with its gracious experience in their hearts and they will be safe from infidelity in all its forms. The present great revival largely the result of what the Sunday school has already done.

4th. The use and progress of the Sunday school in connection with other events of the last century. The present state of the world contrasted with a century ago, the introduction and results of the telegraph, the steam engine, civil liberty, temperance, missions, the translation and circulation of the Bible, tract society, Methodism and the Sunday school, and how all these contribute to the work of the Sunday school, showing that it stands among the first in importance and usefulness

5th. The present social and religious condition of our country and its probable future. Here was shown the mixed condition of our people as to nationality, race, religion and politics, and the absolute need of harmony in view of the present and future greatness of our country. The Sunday school seems to be divinely appointed to secure this end. This may be seen by considering

6th. The Sunday school work of the present day and its probable results. Only three of its present methods were noticed, viz: the system of Object teaching, the International Sunday school Convention and the International Lessons. Probable results, increase in number and efficiency of the regular clergy, large increase of lay preachers, universal revival, universal extirpation of bigotry, universal fraternity in politics and religion.

7th. The vast variety and importance of the subjects of knowledge embraced in the Scriptures. The Bible was presented in allegory as a massive and lofty pillar and bell around its base, with heaven crowning

Church and State.

Hon. John N. Staples, of Greensboro', spoke on Saturday of Centennial week, on the above subject. The following synopsis was omitted last week on account of the press of matter.

The speaker said "The Church is older than the Patriarchs and the prophets—more ancient than the thrones of Egypt. It has outlived the glories of the oriental empires and the splendor of the Jewish Courts. He spoke of the triumphs of the Church over all opposition, the sword, the stake and the prison: of Luther's Reformation and the conflict between Popery and Protestantism, the progress of the Church and the great revival in the time of Whitfield and Wesley. He pointed to the ultimate destiny of the Church, its final triumph and reign.

Under the second head, the speaker defined the American system of government to be of, from and for the people—its public officers are servants and not masters of the people. "Every public official should be regardful, to the strictest degree, of the public weal, and public scorn and condemnation should follow those who regard not their official obligation. Office is a trust, not a perquisite. Nothing short of that high sense of honor, and fidelity to public trusts—that elevated spirit of patriotism, which characterized the founders of the Republic should satisfy the demands of an honest public sentiment." He denounced the usurpations and tyranny of party and said "it is dangerous to liberty and perilous to our institutions whenever the best interests of the government are made subservient to the advancement and perpetuation of party supremacy." He then spoke at length on the advantages of Education in the Church as well as State, saying "an ignorant people are always easily governed, but when you invest a man's mind with the livery of heaven, knowledge, you make him God-like, and knowing his rights he will dare maintain them. If you would make your nation mighty in war, grand in peace and great in history, encourage with a liberal hand the arts and the sciences and the promotion of letters.

Under the third head, Mr. Staples said that the Church and the State should be kept separate and distinct—the former should be under the protection not the control of the State There are three classifications respecting the relation of the Church and State, 1st That maintained by the Jews. 2d That prevailing in England. 3d That which is generally recognized by all Protestants in the United States and which should be maintained throughout Christian civilization. Civil and religious liberty have gone hand in hand in the United States, each contributing to the promotion of the others. Human legislation can not reach human souls—there must be a higher power than earth can give to control the conscience or religion of a man," American greatness is a result, in a great degree, of the entire separation of Church and State.

Mr. MOODY recently read the Ten Commandments at the opening of a service in the Hippodrome, New York, remarking as he did so that they had short time ago occasioned the conversion of a man. Not a few of such instances are on record, and they confirm the propriety of the usage in some churches of having the Decalogue always used in public worship The Ten Words distinctly read have a marvellous power of quickening the conscience not only of impenitent persons, but even those who profess and call themselves Christians.

Centennial Item.

From Rev. F. L. Reid, of Lonisburg Station, we gather some interesting facts relative to John King who was among the first preachers who came to America. He was educated in London as a physician—was converted under the preaching of Mr. Wesley—disinherited by his brother on account of this—came to America with Robt. Williams. These were the 2d two that came to America; he wanted to preach but Pillmore refused to license him, but this did not deter him from preaching. Pillmore went to hear him and was so struck with his preaching that he gave him license. He finally located and died in Franklin county. He frequently preached, it is said, when rotten eggs would be thrown at him by enemies of the Methodists. He has two grand children in the Lonisburg charge—members of the Methodist Church. His Bible, which was shown us by Bro. Reid, is 216 years old—now belongs to his grand son whose name is John G. King, a true Methodist in theory and practice. In the book his name is written thus; "John King's Book, Preacher of the Gospel in Carolina 1779."

A Calamity.

We regret to learn of a serious loss sustained by Rutherford College on the 19th ult. Bro. R. L. Abernethy has strugled in the face of difficulties to build suitable and more commodious College buildings, and it is hard that in the moment when his plans were about to be realized, at least partially, the misfortune should have occured. In a letter of the 20th, Bro. Abernethy says:

"I am truly sad to day. We had borrowed some $500,00, last May and erected a large new College house; but in the absence of means, we were not able to cover and weatherboard it. The Fall and Winter rains sobbed the timbers, and on yesterday a strong wind crushed the entire frame to the earth, breaking the wall plates, posts, joists, sleepers and all into a thousand fragments!

The house was three stories high: and all the shingles, weatherbording, &c., &c., had just been laid around the frame ready for the workman to complete the house, and even the day to begin the work had been set, when the wind blew it down.

I am still determined to build the house, though hundreds of dollars in debt for the broken rubbish, and not a dollar in my pocket

Are there no sympathising hearts among the readers of the Advocate to help me?

Enemies of our Church "mock at my calamity," but I still believe God will help me.

Yours in trouble,
R. L. ABERNETHY

Help Us.

This is a Centennial year. The Town of Columbia, Tyrrell Co, N. C has been a town, from what I learn, about one hundred years, and, wonderful to be told has, never had a church. We are making an effort to build one this year. The parsonage of the Columbia circuit is located here, and the interest of our beloved Methodism demands that we have a church here. We are not quite able of ourselves to build one. Therefore we ask all who love the cause of Christ to help us. Will not every preacher in the Conference, and every local preacher in the bounds of the N. C Conference send me the small amount of fifty cents? And will not the lay brethren do likewise. If you will, forward to me in a letter directed Columbia, Tyrell, Co, N. C. The amount asked, will hardly be missed by you, but will do us much good.

CAMP MEETINGS.

When was the first Camp-meeting held in America and in North Carolina?

I think it is stated in "Bangs' History," that none were held previous to 1800. I find that in this section they go back nearly that far. Who knows when and where Sunday Schools began in this State? It may be that these facts were brought out at the Centeunial in Raleigh. If not, some of us would be glad to hear from the brethren through the ADVOCATE.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

MOODY AND SANKEY. An authentic account of their Lives and Services. By Frank S. Reader. E. J. Hale & Sons, Publishers, New York.

This is a new volume just published by the Messrs. Hale, and though other books have been written and published concerning the two great evangelists, it is claimed that none is more reliable and complete than the one before us. The author, Mr. Reader, has enjoyed facilities for a correct account of the lives and work of Moody and Sankey that few possess. He is a personal friend of Mr. Sankey and for many years was an intimate companion of the great "singing evangelist." The history of the work of these two men who have done so much in promoting vital religion, is interesting and will prove profitable to the reader.

Leroy Merritt Swindell, father of Rev. F. D. Swindell, died at his residence in Hyde co. Jan. 25th 1876, in the 87th year of his age.

His health began to fail five or six years ago. He was confined to his bed about two months, and still rod much but patiently endured assuring Him who is invisible.

He joined the Methodist Church in 1828, under the ministry of Rev. Wilson Buckell, and for forty eight years lived a consistent christian life.

He was for several years a steward of the circuit and his brethren bear testimony to his uniform piety, his untiring devotion to God and the church of his choice his amiable manners, and the universal esteem in which he was held by all classes of society.

It had not the pleasure of a long or intimate acquaintance with Bro. Swindell, but had occasion to visit him at two periods, which may be called test periods in any man's life. The first visit was in the year 1863 when owing to the condition of this section of the state, a pastor was sent to this circuit Bro. S. spoke freely and lovingly of the condition of the church and state, and deplored the spiritual declension in professors of religion, but he evidenced by word and look and act, that he was still standing on the "Old foundation." The circuit was indeed without a preacher. The love of many waxed cold, and not a few had departed from the faith, but Bro. S. continued to look to the Lovable Head of the church and was comforted and sustained. The flock was without a shepherd, but Bro. S. went in and out before the Shepherd and Bishop of his soul and found pasture. He Bishop of his soul and found pasture. He ministry continually shone with a heavenly lustre.

The second visit was the day before he died. He declared that as his body became weaker, his faith grew stronger. Said he, I shall soon reach the place I have been seeking many years." He—as L. L. Swindell, who attended him, and witnessed the final scene, informed me—that in the last moments, his father offered a prayer to the Lord Jesus saying take me, take me, take me," fell asleep in Jesus.

Bro Swindell leaves a wife and eight children and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

One coincidence in this case deserves notice. White L. M. Swindell was dying his son Rev. F. H. Swindell pastor of Tarboro cir. Rev. F. H Swindell pastor of a glorious revival, and was in the midst of a glorious revival, not aware of his father's critical condition

Neither triumphing over the last enemy death, the son reading the hosts of Israel to certain and glorious victory over sin, both trusting in the same Redeemer and each saying take me through things. Christ who by Death do all things through Christ who by Death do all things through Christ who strengthens me. The father passing away to his everlasting reward; the son developing the fruit of the people, example and influence of that father by reaching sinners how to live and how to reach the everlasting reward. May the Lord save all the family of our deceased friend and brother!

NEW GOODS!!

A. CREECH

Still Ahead!

JUST RECEIVED

Seven cases of a very handsome Plaid Spring Calico at 10 cents per yard.

Three cases at 7 and 8 cents per yard.

BUT LISTEN! READ BETTER STILL!!

Just received seven cases at 6 cents per yard. A plenty to make all the children a dress, apron and sun bonnet, for a trifle, all for one dollar! (20 yards)

COME TO CREECH'S,

He is the man to make prices.

DRESS GOODS OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS

The trade will always find on hand the largest and most attractive assortment of

SPRING DRESS GOODS

Both found in the city, especial attention has been given to their selection, I pronounce them for beauty of effect unsurpassed by any offered at any previous season. As early call will guarantee you entire satisfaction for all I say.

STAPLE AND FANCY GOODS

My stock embraces most everything that is kept in a first class dry goods house, and in fact I have to-day I have had the pleasure of offering in the history of the dry goods trade in an experience of twenty five years so large and complete and ununiformly cheap a stock as I have on hand, and I am fully prepared to meet the hard times as below prices.

HATS & SHOES

ONE OF MY SPECIALTIES.

I keep the largest and most complete stock of shoes to be found in the city and having bought them at the large sales in New York, from first hands, the same to be sold at astonishingly low prices.

NEVER PASS BY CREECH'S

When you want a pair of Shoes.

TO COUNTRY MERCHANTS.

NEW YORK IN RALEIGH.

I have this day opened a wholesale department separate from my retail department, which embraces full lines of all staple goods usually kept by country merchants, and as I buy them by the case or package, from first hands, I feel confident that I can save you money by buying goods from me. All that I ask is a call and look for yourselves.

For the Children's Column.

DEAR CHILDREN: For a long time I have felt a desire to do you good —to write you something that would help you to think about your souls,—to help you to understand your duties as children, and how you could be useful and happy children of God; but have been held back by the thought that I was not capable of writing well enough to put in a paper to be read by every body And then I thought the Lord was able "to raise up children unto Abraham outof the stones of the earth" and He could bless my feeble efforts to good both of your souls and mine. Then will you not unite with me morning and evening, ask Him to help me to write with the spirit and with the understanding; and that my only desire be the good of the souls of the children of our Church; yes and of all Children who may read these letters. I desire to write to you every week on some subject that may improve your mind and heart. I design this letter as an introduction to you and will only make one or two requests of you, that you will patiently read my letters through (if they are dull,) and that you will pray for me and for my bright eyed little daughter. I am a poor widow, very poor and afflicted. We have no home except the one kind hearted relations have given us, and I cannot get work to do to make money to feed and clothe my child and myself. Will you not pray for us that the Lord will hear our prayer and give me a school, or some kind of work, or a way of living better than being an object of charity? I am thankful for this great blessing; but think every body ought to work, and then the friend who gives us a home is poor too, and a widow, it is all she can do to feed us all. I will bring this to a close by asking you to remember one command of our Saviour "Search the Scriptures daily." Every day read a portion of the Bible Read it prayerfully, and you will be surprised to find how much you will learn in one year.

AUNT JANE.

Clean Culture.

The full importance of clean culture is appreciated only by a few in comparison with the many, although so much has been said and written upon the subject. The gardener and those having only a small area of tillable ground, understand the necessity of keeping it clean of weeds and in proper condition; but how is it with the great mass of farmers? Do they not practice as if they thought it a matter of small moment whether they grew valuable crops or weeds? It is too frequently the case that they think, or at least act, as if it did not pay to spend very much time in destroying weeds. Is not this a mistake? Take any hoed crop; corn, potatoes. cabbages and roots for instance; let one field be kept perfectly clean of weeds through the entire season, and another have less attention given to exterminating the weeds, say half or three quarters cultivated; take the same crops on the different fields when they have matured, and compare quantity and quality, and you will have a striking evidence that clean culture does pay, and pay well too. It costs very little (if any) more to keep a field of any of the foregoing crops clean, than to let it go, regardless of weeds, if the proper course is pursued in cultivation.

In the first place, many farmers make a great mistake in not employing sufficient working capital for the acres under cultivation, so that they feel obliged to plow and plant (a portion at least) too early, or else they do not more than half fit the ground for a crop. Let the ground be sod or fallow, too much pains cannot be taken in plowing and fitting the soil for the roller, to follow. Plowing, to best economize culture should not be commenced until near the season of planting, and then be rapidly pushed until completed; and here let me say, it does very little good to plow unless the ground is in a suitable condition to do the work well. The roller should follow the plow, after a few hours, and the harrow follow the roller, in such a manner as to pulverize the soil without disturbing any sod just turned under. The harrowing should be sufficient to produce a fine, mellow seed bed but do not be in a hurry to get the crop in; remember that good farming requires that one hoeing of the crop is required before the crop is planted, and it can then be done at much less expense than afterwards; and that is often the only hoeing required by the crop, the plow and cultivator or harrow doing the rest.

It always pays to give corn a dressing of some fertilizer, like wood ashes or plaster, or both mixed, or some other equally good or better stimulant of growth, soon after the young blades show above ground. As soon as the rows can be distinguished across the field, the harrow or cultivator should be started, and without reference to any long time usage or arbitary rules, cultivate with these implements sufficiently frequent to keep the soil clean and properly mellow,even if necessary to cultivate twice a week for awhile, or even till the corn gets so as to entirely cover the ground. If all these essentials are properly carried out, and, when hand hoeing has to be resorted to, it is thoroughly done, and deep, seldom will it become necessary to hand hoe corn after it is planted. The importance of deep culture, with plow or cultivator, in a dry season, cannot be over estimated. By sitting down and mourning over the drouth, we cannot remedy its effects, but by being up and doing, driving the cultivator and plow, we guard the crop from the effects naturally resulting from dronth.

Although the forgegoing remarks may have a local application, the principle advocated is of universal application, and should be generally adopted in all sections. What a grand thing it would be to farmers, as well as all consumers, if the principle would be universally adopted! All our great cereals and crops would be largely improved in quality, as well as quantity, we should hear less of poor flour, second and fourth quality of grain, &c., and the farmer would be better content with his productions — W. H. White in the Country Gentleman.

THANKS—FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE HEART.

WILLIAMSTON, Martin Co., N. C., Aug. 1st, 1874.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Your medicines, viz: Golden Medical Discovery, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, have proved the greatest service to me. My health—actually—for eight that I could possibly live long. I had a complication of diseases—scrofula, nothing; but in connection and great blotches on my head but made me think that I could not have my hair comb'd without causing me much suffering, also causing swollen glands, tonsils enlarged, enlarged or thick neck, sore throat and numerous boils. I also suffered from a terrible chronic catarrh, and in fact I was a loathsome object. My life was a burden to me. I had tried many doctors with no benefit. I finally procured one half dozen bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery and one dozen Sage's Catarrh Remedy and commenced their use. At first I was badly discouraged, but after taking four bottles of the Discovery I began to improve, and when I had taken the remaining I was well. In addition to the use of Discovery I applied a solution of Iodine to the roots of my thick neck, as directed in pamphlet wrapping, and it entirely disappeared. Your Discovery is certainly the most wonderful blood purifier ever invented. I thank God and you from the depths of my heart, for the great good it has done me.

Very gratefully,
MRS. L. CHAPPELL.

Most medicines which are advertised as blood purifiers and liver medicines contain either mercury, in some form, or potassium and iodine variously combined. All of these agents have strong tendency to break down the blood corpuscles, and debilitate and otherwise permanently injure the human system, and should therefore be discarded. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, on the other hand, being composed of the fluid extracts of native plants, barks and roots, will in no case produce injury, its effects being strengthening and curative only. Scrofula, which used to enjoy quite a carnival in the blood purifying, is a remedy of thirty years ago, and may well give place as it is daily doing, to the positive and valuable vegetable alteratives which later medical investigation and discovery has brought to light. In Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swellings, Fever Sores, Scrofulous Sore Eyes, Cutaneous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammation, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin and Scaly Eruptions and all other blood diseases Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has shown its great remedial powers, curing the most obstinate and intractable cases. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

The Old Ship of Zion

(FROM AN OLD ADVOCATE)

The following is a popular revival melody in the Eastern Counties of North Carolina. To be appreciat ed it should be heard as we have heard it, shouted forth from the hearts of a whole congregation at a camp meeting.

EDITOR.

Come tell me of your vessel and what is her name,
Oh! happy christian sailor:
Say who is her captain and what is his fame,
oh! happy christian sailor.
She is the Old Ship of Zion, hallelujah.

Say who are on board and from whence do they come,
Oh! tell me happy sailor:
And why do you hear them away from their home,
Oh! tell me happy sailor.
The chosen and called and holy, hallelujah,
We have left the land of strife, hallelujah.

Say is her keel sound and her larder well stored,
Oh! happy, &c.
And will you receive other comrades on board,
Oh! happy, &c.
Come on board the vessel, stranger, hallelujah,
We fear no want or danger, hallelujah.

But let me know ere on board I am found,
Oh! happy, &c.
The name of the port where your vessel is bound,
Oh! happy, &c.
We seek the port of heaven, hallelujah,
Bright crowns shall there be given, hallelujah.

But will you not fear when the ocean waves roar,
Oh! tell me, &c.
That you will be lost and never gain shore?
Oh! tell me, &c.
Our captain rides the ocean, hallelujah,
He can still the waves' commotion, hallelujah.

And when you have met and are sailing on the sea,
Oh! tell me, &c.
What then on the ship up your employment will be,
Oh! tell me, &c.
We will sing the songs of Zion, hallelujah,
And will keep our colors flying, hallelujah.

But may you not fear as you ride o'er the main,
Oh! tell me, &c.
Lest some foe may engage you and all will be slain,
Oh! tell me, &c.
We will hear no common battle, hallelujah,
Our ship never lost a battle, hallelujah.

And what will you do when you gain heaven's shore,
Oh! happy christian sailor:
Your trials at an end, your perils all o'er,
Oh! happy christian sailor.
We'll repeat the pleasing story, hallelujah,
And will sing and shout in glory, hallelujah.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. HUDSON.

NUMBER 2.

Robert Williams pioneers Methodism into North Carolina.

In the thread of our historical narrative stopped in New York which has been aptly called "the cradle of American Methodism." We start again at this point. The little society in this city, as if conscious of the magnitude of the spiritual harvest to spring from this seed, sent letters to England calling for pastoral help. They wrote to Mr. Wesley saying: "We want an able and experienced preacher." And their deep anxiety for a preacher is seen in this statement found in their letter: "With regard to money for the payment of the preacher's passage over, if they cannot procure it, we will sell our coats and shirts to procure it for them."—The appeal had its desired effect. Robert Williams applied to Wesley for authority to preach in America: permission was given him on condition that he should labor in subordination to the missionaries who were about to be sent. Williams was poor. He sold his horse to pay his debt, and with his saddle bags hung on his arm, he set off for the ship making ready to sail, having only the scanty allowance of a loaf of bread and a bottle of milk, and no money to pay his passage across an ocean stretching three thousand miles westward. His friend Ashton paid the expense of the voyage, and after being rocked and tossed upon the waves of a rough sea, he landed safely in New York in 1769. Dr. Stevens in his history says:

Williams immediately began his mission in Embury's Chapel, and thenceforward, for about six years, was one of the most effective pioneers of American Methodism—"the first Methodist minister in America that published a book, the first that married, the first that located, and the first that died." We have but little knowledge of his career, but sufficient to show that he had the fire and heroism of the original itinerancy. He was stationed at John Street Church sometime in 1771. He labored successfully with Strawbridge in founding the new cause in Baltimore county. In the first published Conference Minutes he is appointed to Petersburg, Va. "He was the apostle of Methodism in Virginia." He followed Strawbridge in founding it in 1772 on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.—In the same year he appeared in Norfolk, Va. Taking his stand on the steps of the Court House, he collected a congregation by singing a hymn, and then preached with a plainness and energy so novel among them that they supposed he was insane. No one invited him home, in a community noted for hospitality; they were afraid of his supposed lunacy; but on hearing him a second time their opinion was changed. He was received into their houses, and soon, after a society was formed in the city, the germ of the denomination in the state. In 1773 he traveled in various parts of Virginia. Jarrett, an apostolic churchman, and afterward a notable friend of the Methodists, encouraged his labors, and entertained him a week at his parsonage Jarrett wrote, later, an account of "the work of God in these parts"—Sussex and Brunswick counties—and says: "It was chiefly carried on by the Methodists. The first of them who appeared there was Robert Williams, who was a plain, artless, indefatigable preacher of the gospel. He was greatly blessed in detecting the hypocrite, razing false foundations, and stirring believers up to press after a present salvation from the remains of sin. He came to my house in the month of March, in the year 1773. The next year others of his brethren came, who gathered many Societies both in this neighborhood and in other places as far as North Carolina. They now began to ride the circuit, and to take care of the Societies already formed, which were rendered a happy means both of deepening and spreading the work of God."

Williams formed the first circuit of Virginia. A signal example of his usefulness (incalculable in its results) was the conversion of Jesse Lee. He was "the spiritual father" of this heroic itinerant, the founder of Methodism in New England. Mr. Lee's parents opened their door for him to preach. They were converted. Two of their sons became Methodist ministers, and their other children shared largely in the blessing of the Gospel, which he proclaimed with such flaming zeal, holy ardor, and great success. The religious interest excited by Williams' labors soon extended into North Carolina, and opened the way for the southward advancement of Methodism. He bore back to Philadelphia, says Asbury, a "flaming account of the work in Virginia—many of the people were ripe for the gospel and ready to receive us." He returned, taking with him a young man named William Watters, who was thus ushered into the ministry, and ever since has been honored as the first native American itinerant. Leaving him in the field already opened, Williams went south-westward, "as Providence opened the way." Subsequently he bore the cross into North Carolina. He formed a six weeks' circuit from Petersburg southward over the Roanoke River some distance into that State, and thus became the "apostle of Methodism" in North Carolina as well as Virginia.—Like most of the itinerants of that day, he located after his marriage, and settled between Norfolk and Suffolk, where, and in all the surrounding regions, he continued to preach till his death, which occurred on the 26th of September, 1775. Asbury was now in the country, and at hand to bury the jealous pioneer. He preached his funeral sermon, and records in his journal the highest possible eulogy on him. "He has been a very useful, laborious man. The Lord gave many seals to his ministry. Perhaps no one in America has been an instrument of awakening so many souls as God has awakened by him." "He was a plain, pointed preacher, indefatigable in his labors," says a historian of the Church.

"The name of Robert Williams," says Jesse Lee, "still lives in the minds of many of his spiritual children." "He proved the goodness of his doctrine by his tears in public and by his life in private. He spared no pains in order to do good—standing on a stump, block, or log, he sung, prayed, and preached to hundreds" as they passed along from their public resorts or churches. "It was common with him after preaching to ask most of the people, whom he spoke to, some questions about the welfare of their souls, and to encourage them to serve God." He printed and circulated Wesley's Sermons. "spreading them through the country, to the great advantage of religion—they opened the way in many places for our preachers, where these had never been before. Though dead, he yet speaketh by his faithful preaching and holy walk."

Thus we see how the fire of American Methodism began to kindle in the city of New York. This spark grew, ran southward and spread in the cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore. Waxing warmer it sped along down through Petersburg and Norfolk—it soon grew strong enough to leap over the winding stream of "the classic Roanoke," and spread its genial radiance in Halifax county, North Carolina. And thence, it has spread westward. Nothing could stop its onward course. With a fiery rush it swept through the thorns of opposition with crackling joy. The winds of persecution only caught up the sacred flame and spread it more rapidly over the country making it roar in louder shouts of invincible power, until the camp fires of Methodism now shine over all the piny plains of the East, glow upon the hill tops of the middle portion of the State, and blaze upon the mountain summits of the West.

CHILDHOOD.

NUMBER 2.

"Society itself which should create
Kindness—destroys what little we have got.
To feel for none, is the modern social art
Of the world's stoics—men without a heart."

Selfishness is so decidedly the most besetting, as well as the most prejudicial of the faults of mankind, that the mere circumstance of caring for another appears to work a very favorable and rapid improvement of our character. More especially is this so when that other, for whom we care, is indeed more than half ourselves:—pride, affection, instinct and custom, unite to enforce its claims—and although it is not the veritable "Ego" about which so many of us are almost exclusively interested, still it feels and seems to partake so much of our very self that that man must be incorrigibly unamiable, to stamp him with no worse crime, who is not greatly improved in heart and feeling by becoming a father.

Some there are however, we regret to know, and we also regret their number, who know not how to appreciate this kind of blessing with which a kind Providence has filled their quiver;—who receive with coldness, or it may be with repugnance, a son's greeting or a daughter's kiss—who have principle enough, it may be to probably feed, clothe and even educate their children—to labor for their support and sustenance—but possess not the affection which turns duty into delight—who are surrounded with blossoms, but know not, nor seek after the happy art of extracting their sweets, however exquisite they may be. But how different is the course of others and what a blessed thing it is for the world, and especially for children, that the effect of true parental love, where nature, duty, habit and affection combined constitute an attachment the deepest and strongest—the most enduring and the least exacting—of any of which the human heart is capable of exercising.

The selfish man—batchelor if you wish—may shudder when he thinks of the trouble and annoyances of a family—and without suffering him to draw upon his imagination for the startling array, we would invite him to take a peep, some of these cold mornings, in to one of our family bed rooms about the time

"The glorious orb of day, from his
Celestial chamber issues forth,
Gilding the clouds, and around his path,
Effulgent glories spreading."

For a few moments all is quiet and still. Anon—a little rustle and twittering like the wrens in early spring-time is heard—the white fleecy folds of the blankets are turned back, and pairs, one after another, of little gladsome sparkling eyes and dimpled arms are seen. And now the silence is broken by perhaps a happy greeting, or some childish outburst of pent up joy and glee. One is relating her dream, in which flowers and butterflies, fairies and angels are prominent;—another is singing a childish ditty in which mother and kittens figure—another is repeating his lessons of yesterday at school—another is vehemently detailing his plans for the day, in which chickens, dogs and horses are to carry forward his schemes:—another is whistling, singing, vociferating, having no definite object to subserve—giving vent to a sort of safety-valve of pent up happiness;—another is assiduous in her efforts—singing a sweet little lullaby—to get her doll to sleep, while the inhabitant of the cradle, in the midst of all this babel, lost his presence might be overlooked, is trying his musical powers upon a falsetto key. With these constantly recurring and varied introductory exercises the morning dressing and ablutions comes up—and now the scene changes. One has lost his shoe—another has mislaid her dress—another in drawing on his garment finds it wrong side out—wrong side before—or to complete his discomfiture, that it belongs to some one else;—another in his haste to finish his toilet upsets a chair, which in its fall sends another sprawling on his all-fours—curious to know why his nose fares so badly;—another bewails a missing button—in his estimation the crowning catastrophe of the morning; another still has lost a pin and is inconsolable—noise and tumult, cries and tears, misfortunes and casualties prevail and thicken. Shade of bachelordom! who is able to endure or to quell and calm this dire confusion, and rekindle the pleasure and happiness, which the first waking moments so brightly foreshadowed. While all, the mother appears, the great master wheel of society, without any very perceptible effort—with little or no disturbance of her usual equilibrium She soon dispels the swift brooding sorrows and mishaps of the hour—a little authority here, a word of sympathy there—a little reproof, direction and encouragement yonder, and lost garments are found, overturned chairs are righted, upheaved beds are smoothed down, by drawing upon her own unfailing resources; missing pins and buttons are replaced, and troubled countenances are brightened up—sorrowful hearts are comforted and satisfied, and a happy, happy throng rush forth to drink in the morning air and impart to all nature the artless pleasure and joy they cannot conceal.

"O life, how bright is thy morning!"

These scenes may be enacted every morning, and still every day in the pursuit of happiness, the fruition of parental love and affection—the attractions and associations of home—they will be as daily forgotten. These little clouds that overshadow and momentarily darken the morning of life—with so little impression upon our childhood memories as to leave no other recollection of these scenes, but that they were uninterrupted in their recurrence and unmixed in their enjoyment.

We will continue this subject.

Worldly Amusements.

One of the greatest troubles of the Church of God on earth, is the tendency among its members to indulge in those amusements that destroy the spirit of true devotion. Heart-worship, which is the only acceptable worship to God, is very difficult to exercise where the mind has been occupied by the various schemes of amusement, offered by the votaries of pleasure in a worldly sense. All amusements are worldly that have no reference to heathful or religious benefits. All idleness is a waste of time, and all unprofitable employments serve to encourage an appetite for dissipation in some shape. In assuming the vows of a christian, a person promises to "renounce the vain pomp and glory of the world;" and yet, how many there are, who seek opportunities to gratify a taste for worldly amusements with much more avidity than they seek occasions of religious enjoyment. All of which shows an utter absence of the true principles of christianity fixed in the heart.

Now the spirit that leads men and women to seek all manner of amusements is a thoughtless, reckless, inconsiderate spirit, opposed, in every respect to the worship of God. Truly wise people, without regard to religious experience, shun those amusements that tend to divert the mind from sound and profitable thinking. They have regarded it as an intellectual and moral evil without any reference to disobedience to the holy demands of christianity. Those who think that the Church is too stringent in its rules will do well to note what even a sensible heathen says on the subject. Let us take a few examples.

"No man in his senses will dance." CICERO.

"Plays raise the passions and pervert them, and by consequence are dangerous to morality." PLATO.

"The law ought to forbid young people the seeing of comedies, till age and discipline have confirmed them in sobriety, fortified their virtue, and made them, as it were, proof against debauchery." ARISTOTLE.

"Licentious plays and poems are the bane of sobriety and wise thinking; comedy subsists on lewdness, and pleasure is the root of all evil." CICERO.

"Nothing is so pernicious to good morals as to be present at these spectacles. Vice easily finds its way into the heart through the pleasurable emotions which they excite. From such scenes I depart" SENECA.

"They were brought in, upon the score of religion, to pacify the Gods, and remove a mortality. The remedy in this case was worse than the disease." LIVY.

"The theatres of Rome were the occasions of civil distractions, and the state first blushed and then plied for these entertainments." VALERIUS MAXIMUS.

"They tend to corrupt the young." PLUTARCH.

"They promote lewdness and dissoluteness of manners." OVID.

Many people imagine that such expressions as the above could only originate with some "old fashioned hide bound," Methodist preacher, who envied the young the pleasures they enjoyed. But they are the sober conclusions of the wealthiest and wisest of the heathen writers, some of whom had lived and died long before Christ and his disciples had given the world the New Testament and its holy teaching.

For the ills of this life, if there were no silence there would be no music.—Ignorance is a spur to knowledge; darkness is a pavillion for the Almighty; a foil to the painter to make his shadows.—George Mac Donald.

A Clergyman Who was Hung for Forgery.

To tell the story of Dr. William Dodd, who was hung for forgery in 1777, may be quite out of time in the beginning of the year 1876. But there is a purpose in it, and perhaps the story and the moral will be timely, though the event occurred 100 years ago save one. William Dodd was an English clergyman, born in May, 17-29, and educated at the university of Cambridge. He married a woman of extravagant tastes, and in this respect, as in many others, their tastes were alike. After being ordained he was made rector of the parish of West Hampstead, London. There he proved to be so eloquent that he was soon called into the city, and became one of its celebrities With his popularity and prosperity he was more and more extravagant and reckless in his stlye of living. To meet his expenses he engaged in literary work outside of his clerical duties; he was made tutor of young Philip Stanhope, afterwards Lord Chesterfield, and at length was appointed chaplain to the King. Chesterfield became his best friend, or worst; got him through many troubles, helped him to money and to his ruin, of course, for when he wanted more than his patron would give him, he committed a forgery upon Lord Chesterfield for $20,000, was tried, convicted, and executed. Great efforts were made to save him. The jury recommended him to mercy. Noblemen, clergyman, and 23,000 citizens of London petitioned the King to interfere, but the Government declined to do so, and the reverend criminal, under the law of the times, was hanged at Tyburn, June 27,1777. —New York Observer.

I Shall Not Fear to Die.

The following lines were suggested by the funeral sermon of Rev. Joseph Goodman, preached by Rev. R. T. Heflin, at McKendree Chapel, Halifax, Va., April 12th, 1856, and were published many years ago:

This world is not my home,
With all its grand array,
I know that death will come;
I would not live always.

There's a home where none can die,
Where all is pure and fair;
A home of joy; and I
Have laid up treasures there.

No fear to die at last,
Hail, angels high above,
The earth, the stars, the sky,
All speak to me His love.

I shall not fear to die,
And leave this vale of tears;
My heart is fixed on high,
In death I have no fears.

Companion in my home,
With many friends I've met;
But the dearest loved are gone;
I long with them to rest.

No bright and beaming hope,
Which in this world I see,
But it points my spirit up,
And speaks of heaven to me.

My Lord is ever kind,
I bow before his throne,
In Him all peace I find,
He'll bear my spirit home.

VIRGINIA.

THE CONQUERORS OF THE WORLD.—The aim of Genhis was literally the conquest of the world, as he conceived it, and was nearer its accomplishment in his own life, and in that of two of his descendants—Kublai and Timur—than it had ever been before or is likely to be again. The empire which he created counted probably within its limits one-half the whole human race, and extended from the Sea of Okhotsk, at the northeastern extremity of Asia over the whole breadth of the continent as far as the Black Sea. In some as such ambition seems, it must have its source in some perennial springs of action common to our nature, since it constantly reappears within a certain period in successive ages, fortunately far apart and in races still more widely separated by ethnographic characters and surrounding conditions. Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian, Greek, Roman, and French—have, each in turn, sent forth heroes on this quest for universal empire; with the Romans alone it became the insanity of ambition of a people, who for successive ages sought to be the rulers of the world, and actually founded an imperial sway over Europe from the Rhine to the Danube, and in Asia and Africa nearly as far as Alexander had penetrated on either continent. The whole of Asia and eastern Europe had not, however, been under the sceptre of a single ruler until Timur swooped down from his Mongolian steppes, the heir of the first great Mogul, and encamped in the heart of Hungary and Poland, with a mixed multitude of tribes, and nations for his arms.—Fortnightly Review.

"How had you the audacity, John," said a Scottish laird to his servant, "to go and tell some people that I was a mean fellow, and no gentleman?" "Na, na, sir," was the candid answer, "you'll no catch me at the like o' that. I aye keep my thoughts to myself."

During the year 1875 the Moravians in this country raised $1,364 for their mission in Bohemia.

Lawyers and the Bible.

An unusual spectacle was witnessed recently in the lecture room of the Middle Temple, London. It was the occasion of the first of a series of public readings in the Greek Testament, before an audience of lawyers, by that well-known scholar, Dr. Vaughan, Master of the Temple.

On announcing these readings in the London Times, Dr. Vaughan gave notice that they would commence at eight o'clock in the morning, and would be continued every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday through the Law Terms. Despite the early hour and the pressure of professional duties, the lecture-room was filled at the hour appointed, principally with lawyers, many of whom were men of distinguished eminence. A visitor, describing the attendance at the reading, says:

"It looked like a theological class in one of our colleges. Ranged along desks or seated in odd corners, where some facility for writing could be found, were seated thirty or forty men—some in the early morning of life; some who were drawing near to its evening hour. Judging by appearances, nearly all belonged to the profession which finds one of its favorite homes in the winding courts and halls of the Temple. Here and there, however, appeared a dress which told unmistakeably that its wearer belonged to the clerical order.—Every one, however, men work Note books and interleaved Greek Testaments were being rapidly filled with the words which fell from the lips of Dr. Vaughan. He was seated at a little desk with Greek Testament and Concordance before him, and with a rare grace of manner and finish and precision of statement, was discoursing of Paul's second letter to the Corinthian Church."

It is impossible to estimate the subtle and powerful influences that may flow from such a study of the Word by men of keen intellects, who are masters of the art of language, and whose opportunities for the duty of the operations of the mind and heart are so frequent and perfect. Is it not a hopeful indication, that in the early morning of these dark and uncomfortable days, a numerous company of the reading lawyers of the greatest city in the world should gather together to listen to the reading of those blessed words which were written aforetime for our instruction? Would such a thing be possible in New York? Is there sufficient interest in the Bible, or sufficient scholarship, to draw the bar of our city together as their brethren in London are drawn? And where shall we find a Dr. Vaughan?—Christ Intelligencer.

A SHARP REPROOF.—The earl of Chesterfield was called the first gentleman of his age. It was a cardinal point of etiquette with him never to exhibit ill temper in company, or to be remiss in courtesy to any guest, but he was sometimes sorely tried by the rude and awkward manners of his son, Phillip Stanhope, whom he tried in vain to educate to gentlemanly habits.

Philip was a great glutton, and could not restrain his appetite even in company. On one occasion, when his father had invited a large number of titled guests, and elegant entertainment was provided. One of the rare dishes was a platter of baked goose berries snowed over with rich cream Philip had been helped bountifully by Lady Chesterfield, who knew his weakness, but when the servant was taking up the dish in clearing the table, Philip beckoned to him, and taking it into his hand began to lap up greedily the rich cream. Lord Chesterfield was disgusted, but, without a change of face or voice to indicate the tempest of rage within, said in a calm tone to his servant—

"John, why do you not fetch a strap and razor—you see your master is going to shave himself."

Philip's greediness was checked at that meal.

A SUNDAY'S DINNER.—A Sunday's dinner is made the most sumptuous meal of the week in a great many households and the guests retire from the table more like gorged anacondas than intellectual human beings, with the result that during the whole afternoon there is such an amount of mental, physical, and religious sleepiness if not actual stupidity, that no duties whatever are performed with alacrity, efficiency, and acceptableness. The Sunday dinner made up of a cup of hot tea, some bread and butter, with a slice of cold meat, and absolutely nothing else, would be wiser and better for all; it would give the servants more leisure, the appetite would be as completely satisfied half an hour afterwards, while body, brain, and heart, would be in a fitting condition to perform the duties of the Sabbath with pleasure to ourselves, with greater efficiency to others, and doubtless with larger acceptance to Him toward whom all our services are due.—Dr. Hall.

Working Tools of Great Man.

It is not the tool that makes the workman but the trained skill and perseverance of the man himself. It is proverbial that the bad man never yet had a good tool. Some one asked Opie by what wonderful process he mixed his colors:

"I mix them with my brain, sir," was the reply. It is the same with every workman that would excel. Ferguson made marvelous things—such as his wooden clock that accurately measured the hours, by means of a common penknife, a tool in every body's hand; but then everybody is not a Ferguson. A pan of water and two thermometers were the tools used by which Dr Black discovered latent heat; a prism and a sheet of pasteboard enabled Newton to unfold the composition of light and color. An eminent foreign savant once called upon Dr. Wollaston and requested to be shown over his laboratories, in which science had been enriched by so many important discoveries, when the Doctor took him into a little study, an pointing to an old tea tray on the table, containing a few watch glasses, test papers, a small balance, and a blowpipe, said: "There is all the laboratory I have!" Stothard learned the art of combining colors by closely studying butterflies' wings; he would often say that he once knew what he owed to these tiny insects. A burnt stick and a barn door served Wilkie in lieu of a pencil and canvas. Bewick first practiced drawing on the cottage walls of his native village, which he covered with chalk; and Benjamin West made his first brushes out of the cat's tail. Franklin first robbed the thunder clond of its lightning by means of a kite made with two cross sticks and a silk handkerchief. Watt made his first model of the condensing steam-engine out of an anatomist's old syringe Gifford worked his first problem in mathematics, when a cobler's apprentice, upon a small scrap of leather, which he beat smooth for the purpose; while Rittenhouse, the astronomer, first calculated an eclipse on his plough handle.

What a Lady Gave for a Bible.

A short time since a young lady of cultivated manners came into the depository and inquired the price of Bibles. She said she wanted the finest Bible she could get for two dollars. I showed her one at the price; it suited her, and she said she would take it and call in the afternoon for it. She returned in the afternoon looking very sad; she looked at the Bible and asked me if I could not take less for it. I said, "I could not, as we sold them at cost price." I said "We have cheaper Bibles, and if any one was destitute and too poor to purchase we had Bibles to give." She replied, "If you knew the circumstances, perhaps you would take less than two dollars. This was the kind of Bible that was wanted." She said she came twenty five miles, and was acting for a lady friend who was in affluent circumstances before the war; that she had lost all her Bibles and had not been able to procure one since; that she wanted one so much, and of the kind selected; had that morning cut her long and beautiful head of hair off, and sent it by her to be sold, and the proceeds to be invested in a Bible. That she had expected to realize at least two dollars for it, and that after visiting every place where they purchased such articles, she could only realize $1.25, and this was all she could pay. I replied, "Most certainly, under such circumstances, the lady shall have the Bible." I then asked her if she had a Bible of her own. With a good deal of hesitancy she said she had not. I presented her with a Bible also. With many expressions of gratitude she left, declining to give the name of the lady who had sold her hair to purchase a Bible. —Cor. of Bible Record.

Says Professor Moses Stuart: "Whenever the Scriptures speak of wine as a comfort, a blessing, or a libation to God, and rank it with such articles as corn and oil, they mean—they can mean—only such wine as contained no alchohol that could have a mischievous tendency; that wherever they denounce it, prohibit it, and connect it with drunkenness and revelry, they can mean only alcoholic or intoxicating wine. If I take the position that God's word and works harmonize, I must take the position that the Bible before us is such as I have represented it to be. I cannot refuse to take this position without virtually impeaching the Scriptures of contradiction or inconsistency."

Even a child of God may tremble at the thought of dying, but he looks by faith through the Bible as through a telescope into the regions above, and is cheered by a glimpse of the "building of God, eternal in the heavens," which is preparing for his reception when the "house of this tabernacle shall be dissolved."—Rowland Hill.

Enthusiasm.

D. L. MOODY

"We want something more. We want enthusiasm in God's work. We find it in the world. Men are desperately in earnest in business circles. Hell is in earnest. Why should we not be? We talk about infidelity, and all the isms that are creeping over the world. I am more afraid of cold formalism than anything else. Let the children of God but see eye to eye, and Christianity will overcome all the hosts of hell and death. There is as much power in the gospel to day as ever. Man has been as bad as he can be. He was bad in Eden, he was bad for two thousand years under the law, and he has been bad these eighteen centuries under grace: but my friends, there is power in the gospel to save. When men are willing to give their lives to work for God, then he takes these men and uses them. One thing I admire about Garibaldi—his enthusiasm In 1867, when he was on his way to Rome, he was told that if he got there he would be imprisoned. Said he, "If fifty Garibaldis are imprisoned, let Rome be free!" And when the cause of Christ is burned so deep in our hearts that we do not think of ourselves, and are willing to die, then we will reach our fellow men. Five years ago I went to Edinburg, and stopped a week to hear one man speak—Dr. Duff, the returned missionary A friend told me a few things about him and I went to light my torch with his burning words. My friend said that the year before, he had spoken for some time, and had fainted in the midst of his speech. When he recovered he said, I was speaking for India, was I not? And they said he was. 'Take me back, that I may finish my speech.' And notwithstanding the entreaties of those around, he insisted on returning, and they brought him back. He then said, 'Is it true we have been sending appeal after appeal for young men to go to India, and none of our sons have gone? Is it true, Mr. Moderator, that Scotland has no more sons to give, to the Lord Jesus? If true, although I have spent twenty-five years there, and lost my constitution—if it is true that Scotland has no more sons to give, I will be off to-morrow, and go to the shores of the Ganges, and there be a witness for Christ.' That is what we want. A little more, a good deal more, of that enthusiasm, and Christianity will begin to move, and go through the world, and will reach men by hundreds and by thousands."

Scientific.

A curious point in connection with the deviation of the compass on iron ships has attracted much attention on the part of scientific men. It is now believed that some of the sudden and hitherto unaccountable changes in the deviation of the compasses of such ships—which are often unsuspected until alleged as the only conceivable cause of the vessel's running ashore—are the effects of an unequal and varying distribution of heat over the iron hull. Sudden slight changes of compass deviation, not exceeding five degrees, have been noticed on board iron ships on our American coast, and these are now attributed to changes in the hull, occasioned by the vessel's passing from warm to cold water, and the reverse. The warm temperature of the Gulf Stream, taken in connection with the cold counter-current, may account for many of the suspected compass errors on iron ships, and the devising of a remedy for this would be an excellent subject for study on the part of some enterprising inventor.

COBWEBS.—Cobwebs have been applied to various uses. The delicate cross-bairs in the telescopes of surveying instruments are fine webs taken from spiders of species that are specially selected for the production of an excellent quality of this material. The spider, when caught, is made to spin his thread by tossing him from hand to hand, in case he is indisposed to furnish the article. The end is attached to a piece of wire, which is doubled into two parallel lengths, the distance apart exceeding a little the diameter of the instrument. As the spider hangs and descends from this, the web is wound upon it by turning the wire around. The coils are then gummed to the wire and kept for use as required. About a century ago Bon of Languedoc succeeded in making a pair of gloves and a pair of stockings from the thread of the spider. They were very strong, and of a beautiful gray color. Other attempts of the same kind have been made; but Reaumur, who was appointed by the Royal Academy to report on the subject, stated that the web of the spider was not equal to that of the silk worm, either in strength or luster. The cocoons of the latter weigh from three to four grains, so that two thousand three hundred and four worms produce a pound of silk; but the bags of the spider, when cleaned, do not weigh above the third part of a grain, so that a single silk worm can accomplish the work of twelve spiders.

Bishop Johns of the Episcopal Church of Virginia, died in Alexandria on the 5th inst., aged 80 years.

A Daily Advocate will be published during the General Conference of the M. E. Church, commencing in May. It will contain much matter of great interest. Price, during the Conference, $1.25, postage paid. Nelson and Phillips, of New York are to be the publishers.

We learn that centennial meetings are being held in the Raleigh District, in compliance with the resolution of our Conference at Wilmington, and in obedience to the announcement of the Presiding Elder, setting apart this as the centennial month for the Raleigh District.

A series of meetings are being held at Person Street Church, under the direction of the pastor, Rev. W. C. Norman. The attendance upon Divine worship is large, and much seriousness prevails among the congregation. Penitents are at the altar, and some have found peace in believing.

Centennial Committee.—Bishop McTyeire in a note to us requests us to say that under the resolution of our last Conference calling for a committee to make suitable preparation for the Centennial Celebration at the next session of Conference in Greensboro,' he has appointed as said committee the following brethren, to wit: Rev. N. H. D. Wilson, D. D. Rev. S. D. Adams, and Prof. W. C. Donb.

Bishop Haven, in a letter to the New York Tribune, says he has the best of reasons for thinking that the Roman Catholics desire to make the Pope President of the United States. The Bishop forgets, if he ever knew, that a foreigner cannot be President; —lamentable ignorance in a man who claims to have large ideas on social and governmental policy. Bishop H. is such a man as "never opens his mouth, but that he gets his foot into it."

A distinguished ex-judge, and a member of the Episcopal Church, was constant in his attendance upon the services at our late Centennial Celebration in this city, and seemed to be greatly edified by what he saw and heard. He was heard to remark: "I have not, until now, known how ignorant I was of what Methodism is and has done. I cannot afford to be ignorant of such a great fact as Methodism is, and want to purchase, as soon as issued, the volume containing the addresses &c., of this occasion. I shall hereafter enjoy religion more than I have heretofore done."

We are pleased to learn from a layman that the Front street Methodist Church at Wilmington, N. C. is undergoing a work of grace in her midst. For three weeks past the pastor, Rev. James E. Mann, has been holding nightly meetings which has resulted in great benefit to the membership of the church and in the conversion of several penitents mostly those from the Sabbath school. On the first Sabbath in April the ordinance of baptism was administered to one adult, seven received into church membership and the sacrament administered to at least three hundred persons. To God's name be all the glory.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church meets in May, at Baltimore. Among the changes that will be attempted in Church polity will be the abolition of the President Eldership, over which there has been long discussions in Northern Church papers. An unlimited pastorate will also be striven for, and we note that at the late session of the Philadelphia Conference the committee on proposed changes in economy reported against the ordination of Bishops as illogical, inconsistent, vain, and misleading, in view of the fact that we recognize but two orders in the ministry—that of Deacon and Elder—and that the Bishop holds only an office, no ordination shall occur when no additional order is conferred.

Bro. Carraway, writing from Charlotte, April 6th, says:

"Our meeting is still progressing and the interest is unabated. About 60 persons have professed and 33 have been received and others will join.

Bro. Duncan was compelled to leave. Bro. Bobbitt will be with us several days. Pray for us."

Revivals are reported in the west of Ireland. Three hundred have professed conversion.

A Word to the Farmers.

The season for planting has arrived and you are not fully decided, perhaps, what proportion of your land you will plant in corn and what in cotton. This is a matter heretofore easily determined. When cotton was from eighteen to twenty cents per pound, all the available land upon the farm, suited to the growth of cotton, was appropriated to its growth. Now that the price of cotton is down to ten and eleven cents, the question naturally arises, among the considerate classes at least,—Would it not be best to plant more corn, potatoes and other articles for home consumption, and less cotton? This is a practical question, and one of much greater moment than can be seen at first glance. If we had the ear of every farmer, in the cotton growing regions of North Carolina, we would do our best to help him decide the perplexing question. We would unhesitatingly say to one and all, make the growth of cotton secondary, and give special attention to raising grain and pork, and such other articles of produce as are needed at home. Raise some cotton, but do not go into it expecting to make money. The price of labor will not justify you in expecting large remunneration for cotton at eleven cents per pound. Some may differ with us in these views, and even others, in all probability, will plant more cotton, buy more fertilizers, and put forth greater exertions than usual. They reason after this fashion: Since many will be deterred from cotton raising by reason of low prices, the next crop will of necessity be short, and prices will range higher, and as a consequence, the supply being lessened, the price will be enhanced.

This is the delusion, we have no doubt, of very many. The country will never return to its former prosperity under the system of farming which has prevailed since the war.—The idea that "cotton is king," predominates with many, and they make heavy outlays for fertilizers, mortgaging even the growing crop to secure them,—rise early and to'l late, under the inspiration of this one idea.—Make less cotton and more grain, and give more attention to the raising of stock.

The following from the Eufaula News is suggestive. Who, that has been a close observer, has not noticed just what is here mentioned:

"We have noticed, in the beginning of every year, that the farmers are going to plant more grain and less cotton. In the fall we noticed that there had been just about as much grain as there was the year before.—We have noticed every year that the farmers are going to make provisions enough to supply themselves; but, notwithstanding this, we notice that about the same number are engaged in hauling provisions out of the towns, which they buy at ruinous prices.—We notice every year that the country is next year going to be self supporting; but when next year comes it is painfully evident that the country gets its support from the far West.—We are told every spring and summer by the farmers: "Publish in your paper that the cotton crop is going to be a failure;" and when we smile incredulously they tell us of the cater pillar, the boll-worm, the drouth, the rust, the bad stand, and numerous other indubitable proofs that the crop must turn out a failure. We suspect at the time that they are trying to create an impression through the papers that the crop will be small, so as to induce a rise in the price.—But how futile are their efforts! The price of cotton is never affected by newspaper reports, and it always stays down. At the end of each year we notice that the crop reaches away along toward four million bales, and the farmers sell for less than it costs. We notice that the farmers try every means except the right one to raise the price of cotton. We notice that the policy of raising a great deal of cotton and very little provisions causes the country to languish, and spreads bankruptcy throughout the land. We notice that some of the Grangers are wofully false to their professions of raising their own provisions and buying for cash; and we believe that they are the truest Grangers who live at home and do not have store accounts. We notice that farmers get more advice than any other class of men, and apparently pay less attention to it. But we notice that the advice still flows on; the supply seems inexhaustible; and, as we believe it is good, we propose to continue to do our share as long as the types hold out to print it."

The Washington Echo of a recent date says: We received a call from Rev. Dr. Closs on Friday and were truly glad to see him in such fine health. The Dr. informed us that he came very near being killed about two weeks ago. While riding along the road in his sulkey his horse stumbled and fell, and threw him out, and in his fall his left leg got entangled between the cross bar and shaft, in which condition he remained for some time, his entire weight being supported by the entangled leg. Had his horse started off at that moment, the Dr. thinks he would have been killed, but being gentle he instantly stopped, and thus the Dr.'s life was saved. Dr. Closs still suffers from a bruise about the ankle. With this exception, his health was never better.

Making Preachers.

There is often too much haste in furnishing authority as exhorters, local ministers &c., to those applying, for orders. The Southaven Advocate, under the above heading, sensibly remarks:

"Put the candidate on trial before his church as an exhorter without even formal license for some time; let him have its recommendation to the Quarterly Conference for the authority to exhort (not to preach). After such trial in this capacity, let him be recommended to the District Conference for license to preach, the recommendation proceeding from the Quarterly Conference. As matters now stand, the Quarterly Conferences are too small, too meagre every way, to be invested with the high and hazardous prerogative of granting such license. Very often the candidate comes before his kindred in a Quarterly Conference, always before his neighbors, who by reason of delicate relations fail to act discreetly and candidly. Removed from the narrow, local sphere of a Circuit, placed before a broader and abler body of men in a District Conference, the action is likely to be more cautious and disinterested. Preparatory to a vote on his case let him be examined in open Conference, and let the cause then rest on its merits. Make the District Conference the body for the passage of a local preacher's character, and the renewal of his license.—We all know how difficult it is to get a Quarterly Conference to confront an unworthy and inefficient local preacher and to deprive him of his license."

Practical Christian Unity

The Presbyterian Weekly publishes a letter to its editor from Dr. Howard Crosby, of New York, which has the right ring:

My religious beliefs are either matters of faith or matters of opinion. In matters of faith I am as much with my brethren of the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, and Methodist Churches as I am with my Presbyterian. I regard them all as having 'like precious faith.' We gather around the cross of Jesus, and know no difference. God honors them in their work for man's salvation and God's glory, just as much as he honors us. In my intercourse with them I allow no denominational fact to mar my perfect fraternization. In this spirit I contribute, in my very small way, to their charitable societies, as well as to their newspapers. If I should shut up my energies to my own denomination, I should cut off the expression of my Christian love and sympathy from the large majority of earnest and devoted Christians. They could stand that, but I could not. I must testify to the oneness of Christ's body. My heart and my conscience would cry out if I did not.

From Albemarle Circuit.

Messrs Editors: Our 1st quarterly meeting for the present Conference year was held here, Saturday and Sunday last, Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, P. E. officiating, and giving delightful satisfaction both as a presiding officer and preacher. The sermons preached by him, was full of unction, and power from on high.

The official attendance was large, and its action liberal and harmonious, the religious element predominating.

All the financial demands, were promptly met, and ready responses to other enterprises of the church freely given. We have added to the size of the parsonage, and now it is a comfortable preacher's home, and the pres ent occupants happy in the consciousness that it is their home, for this year.

We have raised thus far, the present quarter, for various church enterprises, the sum of five hundred and fifty dollars, notwithstanding the stringency of the times. This is indeed doing well, and furnishes fresh evidence, that Bro. Gray's exhortation at the close of his communication last year in reference to District Conference, was not in vain, but has been earnestly heeded, and with them sure enough it is "on. Stanly. on!"

The membership are united and the spiritual condition of the church, thank God! is "No. 1" "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

Yours in Christ,
T. Page Ricaud.

The Centennial Book.

At the Centennial Celebration held in Raleigh, N. C., March 21-26—1876, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, viz:

Whereas, In obedience to resolutions passed by the N. C. Conference, of the M. E. Church, South, at its late session held in the city of Wilmington, N. C., a grand celebration of the Centennial of Methodism in the State of North Carolina has been held in the city of Raleigh, and during their centennial exercises, much valuable homiletical and historical truth has been brought to light, and

Whereas, It is needful that these truths should be suitably preserved, for the encouragement and instruction of future generations, and for the defence and propagation of Methodism, therefore be it

Resolved 1st, That the Bishops and brethren, who have delivered the various addresses on the occasions of these centennial exercises, and the unread address of Rev. W. M. Robey, President of Davenport Female College, be and are hereby earnestly and respectfully requested to furnish the manuscripts of their several addresses to the commitee of arrangements and that they, the said committee, proceed, at the earliest possible day, to publish the same in book form.

Resolved 2d, That as the "Raleigh Christian Advocate" has, and does now, hold an important relation to North Carolina Methodism, the Rev. James B Bobbitt is hereby earnestly requested to prepare a sketch of the Advocate's history and its relation to North Carolina Methodism, and that the same be published in connection with the various addresses herein referred to.

Resolved 3d, That all profits arising from the publication and sale of the said anticipated volume shall be applied to the buiding of a Metropolitan M. E. Church, South, in the city of Raleigh Signed

Thomas A. Boone.

Dear Brethren: The committee of arrangements has determined, in obedience to the above resolutions, to publish all the addresses delivered at the centennial mass-meeting—together with the "unread address of Rev. W. M. Robey" and "Sketch of the Advocate" called for. The sermons will not be published, for the reason, that several of the special sermons arranged for in the programme were not delivered. We desire to get the Book out as soon as possible; but cannot make definite arrangements for publication until all the manuscripts are in hand. Therefore, we earnestly beg all concerned to send in the manuscripts at the earliest possible day.

The Book will contain a brief introductory chapter, and then will follow addresses in regular order as on programme. No address will be mutilated—but printed precisely as written

The volume will be one of rare excellence It will contain more valuable information in reference to the operation of Methodism—"Christianity in earnest," —than any book of the same number of pages, ever published.

Every Methodist in the land should have a copy.

Letter From Bishop Pierce.

Mr Editor: Marshall is an interesting town—well supplied with churches, and seems to be progressive. Here, on my first visit to Texas, I held a Conference long years ago. At this time the Presiding Elder was holding his last Quarterly Meeting, and several preachers on their way to Conference had dropped in, and there was no lack of service on Sabbath The labors of the day were divided among us, and I remained over and preached again on Monday night. Tuesday morning a goodly company of us set out for Carthage, thirty miles distant. After a slow travel over a bad road—in Western phrase—"we made the trip."

I was assigned to brother Booty, who took good care of me and many others. Conference opened and moved smoothly on. The presence of various brethren from other Conferences added much to the interest of the occasion. We had Dr. Wiley, President of Emory and Henry College; McCarver, the Bible Agent; Mitchell from Texas, and Veach from North west Texas Conference. These brethren each had a message for the Conference, and while there was some conflict of interest, they managed dexterously to avoid all friction Wiley was for Emory and Henry. He thought every Conference ought to patronize its own institutions, but if the people would send abroad, no place like Emory and Henry. Veach plead manfully for Georgetown and the Texas University, and made a strong appeal to the pride and independence of Texas. Emory and Henry was a good place—none better out of Texas, but the University was first in its claim upon every Texas preacher and citizen Mitchell went in soul and body for the Huntsville Female College—never mind the boys—they can rough it and struggle for themselves—take care of the girls—educate the women. So they had it—good sense and good humor—and each man won a victory. At least, all were satisfied. We adjourned in peace and love.

Carthage is a hard place to get to, and still harder to leave. It is a pleasant place, with a clever people—but without carriages of any kind, either private or public. How to get away was, with many of us, a very serious question. To increase the trouble, a wet spell was upon us—the rain was falling, the sky all covered with clouds, the wind strong and cold. I was to preach in Henderson that night, and at Austin next day. First one plan failed, and then another. At last a gentleman (Dr. Latimer) who was going to H., hearing of my perplexity, offered me a seat in his buggy. I got another, place for George, and away we went, through rain and mud, and a wind that seemed to whet its edge on every tree it passed. Yet the day was not without its cheer. Good company, pleasant talk—a good dinner by the way, provided by a brother who would not let us pass—and the prospect of meeting the engagement at night, robbed all outward discomforts of their power to afflict.

Through much exposure to wind and weather, I met both appointments. Now then, for Galveston After my late experience, how glad I am for a railroad! Another night travel—but the track is smooth, and the cars luxurious, and "balmy sleep" helps me through. By a change of schedule I am thrown behind time, but my German brethren, understanding the difficulty, wait for me. I was reconciled at my old Galveston home—but, alas! brother Briggs was not there. He perished at sea a few years ago with all on board the ill fated steamer. I missed his genial face and lively conversation Sister Briggs and the children gave me a heart warm welcome and made my sojourn delightful. I like Galveston. It is a charming place to live in. It is well known and need not be described.

The German Mission Conference is a small body, but full of pluck and enterprise. The preachers and the people are loyal to the Church. They stand up liberally to all its interests. The Conference covers a large territory, and at some points has had considerable prosperity. In the examinations the brethren deal with each other with great discretion and fidelity, and all appear deeply concerned to maintain and propagate a pure evangelism With them, Methodism embodies their highest conceptions of spiritual religion, and of wise and strong organization for doing good. The financial help furnished by their American brethren is gratefully appreciated. Would that we could do more The religious services conducted in German did not edify me much, but those who understood, seemed to me to say amen at the right place, and with a will. They respond freely—heartily. Most of our churches are asylums for the dumb. In crowded houses oftentimes I feel as if I were praying in a graveyard. This dead silence is a compliment to the word, at the expense of simple, hearty, outspoken religion. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.

One more Conference—the seventh, and last for this campaign. Early in the morning we took the cars for Houston, and next for Hempstead, and then for Burnham—the seat of Texas Conference. Arrive in good time, and take lodging with Col Giddings, of whom I and many more might say as many good things as Paul said of "Gaius mine host." We were fed and lodged, and transported back and forth every day, in princely style. A way to ride I rank high on the list of favors. Walking is an addition to other labors I neither covet nor enjoy. I can do it, but had rather be excused. Bro. G. made me very comfortable in all respects. The parlor, the chamber, the table, all had their appropriate charms—and then I rode in and out, and thus saved strength for the chair, the cabinet, and the pulpit.

Twenty-four parishes, twenty six priests and fifty thousand of the laity have voluntarily re-entered the Greek Church. This is stated, by a leading article in the Russian Imperial Gazette to be the only result which has followed the hostile attitude adopted toward the Greek Church by the Pope and his priests.

The New York Observer says. "Three hundred men of intemperate habits, and many of them confirmed drunkards, met in one room at the hippodrome last Friday, and on their knees besought God's help to abstain from intoxicating drinks. The scene was intensely affecting."

The Congregationalist says: Do you not know how a Church fair works? The principle is a very ingenious one. Some ladies borrow money from their husbands, buy materials, and make up fancy articles, which they give to the fair. Then they change places, borrow more money, and buy the articles back again.

The Methodists have gathered a little congregation of twenty-six persons in several villages of Shantung, China, near the chief temple in the empire dedicated to Confucius, and in the very stronghold of his system. The convert through whom this work was mainly done, a man of intellectual strength and great earnestness, received in the peace of the gospel.

A Family Baptised.—At a service recently in the Free Church Mission in Calcutta, a Hindu man, once pupil of the institution, and now employed in the office of Harris, an attorney, was baptised with his wife and seven children. This is said to be the first instance in that part of India of a whole Hindoo family coming at one time into the Christian Church.

Blessings long desired are sweeter when they come; if soon given they lose much of their value. God reserves for thee that which he is slow to give thee, that you may learn to entertain a supreme desire and longing after it.—Augustine.

Died in Wilmington, N. C, on the 26th of March, Henry K. Perrin for a long number of years a worthy and an acceptable member of the Front street, Methodist E. Church, South.

Died in Catawba county N. C. on 15th of March, Mrs. Sarah Hill consort of Isaac Hill in the 34th year of her age, leaving her husband and seven small children to mourn her departure. But she died as she had lived many years, strong in the faith, committing all to the care of that Savior who had saved her, and fell asleep in the arms of Jesus in great peace.

J. W. Pickt.

Died at his residence in Plymouth N C. on the 13th February 1876, W. F. Sanders, in in the 55th year of his age. He was born near Plymouth in Washington co. N. C. August 1821 in and near which place his life has been spent. He was converted and joined the M. E Church, South, in 1842 under the ministry of Rev. L. S. Burkhead, and ever since that time, lived a consistent christian life to the time of his death. He was a man of fine character and many estimable qualities, a kind husband and devoted father, and leaves, besides a sorely bereaved family, many other friends to mourn his loss. He spoke of his approaching death with calmness and expressed a willingness to die, and is now without doubt numbered with the saved!

Rev John Williams died at Gold Hill N. C. Feb. 25th 1876 aged 55 born in Cornwall, England. Was a Wesleyan preacher 8 years came to America, remained out on the church some years, went back to the world, was reclaimed 8 years ago and spent the rest of life as a local preacher in the M. E Church, South He left a wife and a large family of children, who need the prayers of the church. Rev Mr Corne buried him. His neighbors miss him, but believe he is in heaven.

A. D. Betts

Died in Guilford co, Feb. 18th 1876, Mrs Sallie A. Roney, daughter of Mason Tarpley, decd. in the 22d year of her age.

She professed religion when quite young and joined the M. E. Church, South at Mt. Pleasant, South Guilford circuit, in the year 1867. She was loved by all who knew her, and bore her affliction with patience and often spoke of what a blessed saviour whom she longed to see. She exhorted all her friend to meet her in heaven, and with a smile resigned herself into the arms of Jesus.

She died in the full assurance of a better world, rejoicing as she passed through the valley and shadow of death. She leaves a husband and many friends to mourn their loss. May they all meet her where parting is no more.

J M. Ward.

Died on the 25th March, in the town of Madison, at his home Dr. B. F. Foy, M. D. in the 42d year of his age

He was a skilful physician, an active Mason, a good citizen an affectionate husband and for many years a loving member of the Methodist church. In systematic benevolence he was scarcely ever equalled and seldom surpassed.

Trinity and Greensboro Colleges are both indebted to his charity.

His illness was protracted for about three months During most of that time, he very much desired to be restored to health that he might be a still greater blessing to his family, his friends and the church.

He often requested the church to pray for his restoration, and many times had his pastor and friends to do the same in his bed chamber. But before he died, he said unto the Lord, "not my will but thine be done." The angel of death triumphed and he is gone.

His funeral was preached by his pastor to a large and weeping congregation, who thronged the church to pay him the last tribute of respect. He was then buried with Masonic honors.

He leaves a mourning wife, and one child behind. May the benediction of God rest upon them.

L. E. Stacy.

Died, near Fulton Davie co. N. C on the 21st Feb 1876, Mrs. M. J, wife of Nathaniel Peebles, and daughter of C. F. Lowe. Lexington N. C. aged 31.

During silent midnight watches round the bedside of the sufferer, the noble winged angel of death had crouched, and when aurora was beginning to paint the oriental horizon in dazzling brilliancy of daylight, snatched from a weeping husband and four small children, this cherished one, and waited her to a land whose day knows no darkening. Never was a community more united in tendering its sympathies to the bereaved family. Indeed there would be but little solace to the rebellious heart, but for the conviction that she is now basking in the divine presence of her Redeemer. Stricken husband, she is not dead, but lives and waits ir. eternal glory, and may it be thy highest aim to consecrate thy life to her God, and lead her little ones to be Lambs of God, so that when earth no more affords a resting place for thee and them, there may be a happy reunion in that better land where sickness and death are forever banished.

M. C. Bridger.

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."

Mrs Mary J. Walker, daughter of James N. and Elizabeth Millis, and wife of Samuel Walker, was born in Guilford county, N. C the 31st day of October, 1844 and died at Asheboro on the morning of the 16 h of March 1876. For more than two years had the consumption been slowly developing with the usual fluctuations of hope, so flattering only to culminate so surely in death.—but for her death had no terrors—for death bridged the "sunless tide." The protracted suffering attendant upon this disease was borne with the patient endurance which only the supporting power of God's love can give. With many endearing ties to bind her to earth she awaited with calmness the footsteps of the Messenger Divine," which were so slow and noiseless," that his presence was scarcely known, ere the soul awoke in heaven. Her only earthly thought was compassion for her bereaved husband and children, "behind or before unto death," to the duties which God had entrusted to her, as mother and wife. For the poor she was the truest friend ready always to assist the cause but lacked assistance ready always to resist "the wrong that needed resistance." To those who mourn for her we say, she is not dead, but sleepeth

Weep not for her, there is no cause for woe:
But rather pierce the spirit that is with Unshrinking o'er the thorny paths below.

SOMETHING NEW!

An Imported Remedy.—Cannabis Indica.

This wonderful preparation, known by the above title, which has attained such celebrity during the last few years in all parts of the United States as a POSITIVE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA, can now be obtained at all first class druggists. We have made permanent arrangement in CALCUTTA, INDIA, for obtaining "Pure Hasch," and having it extracted upon its own soil (the climate in America being too changeable to extract large quantities free from mildew). These remedies are now prepared from the best Hemp, gathered at the right season and extracted during midsummer in Calcutta. There is now a single symptom of CONSUMPTION that it does not dissipate and it will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical.

$2 50 per bottle, or 3 bottles for $6.50.

As this is an imported article, we do not commission our remedies, but will be pleased to make Cash agents every where.

Still Ahead!

JUST RECEIVED

Some splendid and handsome Plaid Spring Calicoes 10 cents per yard.

Some good Calicos 6 cents per yard.

BUT LISTEN! READ! BETTER STILL!!

Some 4-4 Sheeting 5 cents per yard. A child with a dollar can buy a dress apiece and have a penny left, all for one dollar! 20 yards!

COME TO CREECH'S,

If you want to make prices.

He is constantly receiving ALL DESCRIPTIONS of Goods, and always finds on hand the largest and most attractive stock in the city.

SPRING DRESS GOODS

In this department special attention has been given to the selection of goods. I pronounce them for beauty and cheapness far ahead of any other fall stock previous to the present season, and will guarantee your entire satisfaction in all cases.

STAPLE AND FANCY GOODS

My stock in these lines consists of everything that is kept in a first class dry goods house, and in fact I have taken pains and pleasure in ordering in the history of the trade such a complete and uniformly cheap assortment as I am now opening, and I am fully prepared to sell at bottom prices as low as the lowest.

HATS & SHOES

ONE OF MY SPECIALTIES.

I have the largest and most complete stock of Hats and Shoes ever kept in this city, and having bought them for cash, I am prepared to sell at astonishingly low prices.

NEVER PASS BY CREECH'S

Who is constantly keeping a full stock of DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS, NEW YORK IN MINIATURE, RALEIGH.

I have this day opened a wholesale department, separate rooms and department, which embraces a full and complete stock of staple goods usually kept by country merchants, and as I buy them by the largest package, you may rest assured that I can save you money by buying goods from me. All that I ask is a call and I ask for no more.

THE STAR AMMONIATED SOLUBLE PHOSPHATE.

THE BEST FERTILIZER IN THE WORLD.

We have concluded, after mature deliberation, to sell

THE STAR PHOSPHATE

again this season for $41 per ton of 2000 lbs delivered on our cars or before November 1st 1876, or for $37.50, payable on or before May 1st, 1876. We now sell our Star Phosphate on account at the low price of $35 at this time, we do not expect to make much money on it—[illegible] are willing to run the risk of making a small profit this season. Besides it seems to be the universal opinion among Farmers that the price of Guano ought to be governed by the price of cotton.

THE STAR

still retains its high and unadulterated standard. We sell nothing but

FIRST-CLASS FERTILIZERS.

We are also agents for

MAPES' NITROGENIZED

SUPERPHOSPHATE OF LIME.

This is comparatively a new Fertilizer to our Farmers, but by calling at our Store for a pamphlet with testimonials, Farmers will soon know what we are selling.

LESSON HYMN, 131.

"I'LL PAY YOU FOR THAT."—A hen trod on a duck's foot. She did not mean to do it and it did not hurt her much. But the duck said, "I'll pay you for that!" So the duck flew at the hen; but as she did so her wing struck an old goose who stood close by.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose, and she flew at the duck; but as she did so her foot tore the fur of a cat who was just then in the yard.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the cat, and she flew at the goose; but as she did so her tail brushed the eye of a sheep who was near.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and he ran at the cat; but as he did so his foot hit the foot of a dog who lay in the sun.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the sheep; but as he did so his leg struck an old cow who stood by the gate.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and she ran at the dog; but as she did so her horn grazed the skin of a horse who stood by a tree.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the cow. What a run there was! The horse flew at the cow; and the cow at the dog; and the dog at the cat: and the cat at the goose; and the goose at the duck; and the duck at the hen. What a noise they made to be sure!

"Hi, hi! What is all this?" cried the man who had the care of them. "I cannot have this noise. You may stay here," he said to the hen. But he drove the duck to the pond, and the goose to the field, and the cat to the barn, and the sheep to her fold, and the dog to his house, and the cow to her yard, and the horse to his stall. —"I'll pay you for that!" said the man.—Nursery.

Rural and Domestic.

A WAY TO PREVENT COUGHING IN HORSES.—The organization of many colts and horses is so delicate that when they eat dusty hay they will cough to an alarming extent. When such is the case we have often obviated the difficulty by sprinkling the hay with water a few hours prior to feeding it. The dust on hay will do the horses no harm if taken into the stomach without irritating the throats of the animals. Clover hay, which is usually dusty, should be passed throug a fodder cutter, and be wetted and mingled with meal before it is fed. J. C. R. writes on this subject:

"It is well known that feeding horses on clover hay often makes them cough, but the why and wherefore may not be so generally known. From observation I have become fully satisfied that the manner of feeding hay to horses is the cause. The usual custom is to let them draw it through a rack, thus stripping off the fine dust which adheres to the stalk, which, being drawn into the lungs in respiration, produces the cough. The cure consists in removing the cause—that is, the racks—and allowing the animals to take their food in the natural way. I have removed all of my racks, and now feed my horses on the barn floor, having a breastwork sufficiently high for them to eat over In this way they can be fed hay without raising a dust. They get none under their feet, and the labor of cleaning out mangers is saved. Whatever is left is easily pushed out with a rake into the yard for the cattle. Since making the improvement, above mentioned in my feeding apparatus I am not troubled with coughing horses."—Practical Farmer.

I have in days past been a very successful cucumber producer. In 1837 or 1838 I had a near neighbor, and as good and true was Dr. "Tom" as the next one: a mere picket fence seperated our gardens. Mrs. "Tom," a young Virginia matron, did the garden work, for "Tom" was not much at anything but a fine horse and his profession—an only child and ninety workers. Well, Mrs. Tom took me to task on cucumber culture. I laughed at her —so young (only one boy,) and so pretty too—to be telling me how to grow cucumbers. But I tried, and never changed. Make low ridges, two feet apart—rich, deep preparation—drop the seed six or eight inches apart and cover. Sow soot when dew is on; keep the earth clean, and when the fruit is one inch long begin and pick, every morning, all you can find. It is incredible how many ten feet square will produce. I suggest that some one make an acre rich, use one hundred pounds of oil meal, begin this winter to use meal, and plow in deep, and every dry spell, for two or three times, with plow and subsoil, put in oil meal; stir and plow until the whole thousand pounds is in, and just leave it rough, so that the surplus water will merely run off. As soon as the season is fit make flat ridges three feet apart, and put in seed each one foot. Have barrels of strong brine to put daily pickings in, and send off for sale.—P., in Southern Farmer.

A TEST FOR EGGS.—Among the minor troubles of city life is the difficulty of procuring a regular supply of fresh eggs. When we cannot remove our woes, the next best thing is to try to understand them. So we devote this paragraph to what will interest all out of hearing of the cheerful sounds of the barn yard. An egg is generally called fresh when it has been laid only one or two days in summer, and two to six days in winter. The shell being porous, the water in the interior evaporates, and leaves a cavity of greater or less extent. The yolk of the egg sinks too, as may be easily seen by holding it toward a candle or the sun; and when shaken a slight shock is felt if the egg is not fresh. To determine the precise age of eggs, dissolve about four ounces of common salt in a quart of pure water, and then immerse the egg. If it is only one day old it will descend to the bottom of the vessel; but if three days it will float in the liquid. If more than five days old it will come to the surface, and project above it in proportion to its increased age.

"O wad some power the gift to gie us,
To see oursel's as others see us."

To see ourself as others see us.

Behold that pale, emaciated victim, with down cast eye, like some criminal about to meet her fate! See that nervous, distressful look, as she walks along, with a slow and unsteady step. The pink has left her cheeks and the cherry her lips. Her once sparkling, dancing eyes are now dull and expressionless. The once warm, dimpled hands are now thin and cold. Her beauty has fled. What has wrought this wonderful change? What is that which is lurking beneath the surface of that once lovely form, that she realizes her terrible condition? Is she aware of the world's opprobrium she makes? Woman, from her very nature, is subject to a catalogue of diseases, from which man is entirely exempt. Many of these maladies are induced by her own carelessness, or though ignorance of the laws of her being. Again, many Female Diseases, if properly treated, might be arrested in their course, and thereby prove of short duration. They should not be left to an inexperienced physician who does not understand their nature, and is, therefore, incompetent to treat them. The importance of attending to Female Diseases in their earliest stages cannot be too strongly urged. For if neglected, they frequently lead to Consumption, Chronic Debility, and oftentimes to Insanity. In all classes of Female Diseases, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is without a rival. No medicine has ever surpassed it. In "The People's Common Sense Medical Advisor," of which R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., is the author and publisher, is an extended treatise on Woman's sex and Diseases. Under this head, the various affections, to which she is subject are carefully considered, accurately portrayed, and a restorative course of treatment suggested. Every woman, as she values her life and health, should possess a copy of this valuable book. If she be diseased, this "Adviser" will show her how she may be restored to health, and also direct her how she may ward off many maladies to which she is constantly being exposed. Let every suffering woman heed this timely advice and see herself as others see her. Price of Adviser, $1.50 post paid to any address.

The Light of that Radiant Shore.

BY JOY HENRY DICKSON.

[illegible] that life's tempest hath tossed,
[illegible] and high on sorrow's dark coast,
[illegible] the hands where their merciless sweep,
[illegible] thing of all that was cherished and sweet,
[illegible] radiant light of that beautiful shore,
[illegible] across death's river's dark roar.

[illegible] the tears that below the pale cheek,
[illegible] weary with watching the "flesh groweth
[illegible] transmuting those tears into jewels whose light,
[illegible] shall take that heed at the end of the night,
[illegible] matchless light of that radiant shore,
[illegible] across death's river's dark roar.

[illegible] the path where the pilgrim must tread,
[illegible] the cloud that is rolling ahead,
[illegible] ons and the breaks that may lie in the way,
[illegible] never a resplendent its ray,
[illegible] light of that beautiful shore,
[illegible] across death's river's dark roar.

[illegible] hearts that are toiling be glad,
[illegible] that soon glorious our suffering hath made,
[illegible] ng the river of death for us,
[illegible] the light heaven glorious,
[illegible] light of that radiant shore
[illegible] to rest forever more.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. HUDSON.

NUMBER 3.

The early introduction of the Gospel into North Carolina.

Before I proceed to trace the regular history of N. C. Methodism, let us notice the other denominations which had been operating in this missionary field prior to the introduction of Methodism. The first permanent settlement made in the State dates back to the year of 1663—just one hundred years before the voice of a Methodist itinerant was heard in her wilds.

THE QUAKERS

are entitled to the honor of planting the first seed of the Gospel in the field of North Carolina. As far back as the year of 1672, Mr. Edmonson and George Fox held meetings in this State, when it was a province under a proprietary government, and had a population of but six thousand whites. In 1698, Thomas Story, an English Quaker, began his work in the State with zeal and earnestness. These meetings were the first assemblages for religious worship ever seen in the province.

Although the Friends began to operate in the State, 200 years ago, their progress has been exceedingly slow. They have at the present time only 3,633 members—an increase of only about 18 per year. These are settled mainly in Guilford, Randolph, and Davidson counties.

While the Friends are proverbial for soundness of piety, frugality and in lustry, they are signally defective in aggressive power, because they reject the active and demonstrative instrumentalities of propagating the Gospel. It is a church of negatives rather than positive institutions. Avoiding the showy pomp of ritualistic demonstrations practiced in the Roman Catholic Church, they have run into the other extreme of whispering quietism, that fails to awaken a world sleeping in sinful indulgences. But it is due to the Friends to say, that their meekness of spirit, their simplicity of life, their bold and uncompromising hostility to all forms of war, have diffused a very mellow and salutary influence through society beyond their own Church. By the late reports, it appears that there are in the United States about 150,000 members of this Society, settled principally in Pennsylvania.

The Established Church of England was the second agency that began to sow the gospel seed in the missionary field of North Carolina.—The first missionary sent out to our State by the English Propagation Society was the Rev. Mr Blair in 1701. He labored hard for several years in this unpromising field, which was said to have been near heathenism.—The first church built in connection with this mission was near Edenton in 1701. Three other churches were built in 1703. Mr. Blair returned to England. Mr. Adams and Mr. Gordon came as the next missionaries in 1708. They preached faithfully and suffered much in their work of evangelizing the people committed to their charge. Their labors had but a limited success. For the lack of support Mr. Gordon was compelled to return to England. Mr. Adams soon after died and "the now lies in a nameless grave somewhere in the lowlands of N. C."

It will be seen that the Episcopal Church, which is the continuation of the English Church after the war and modified to adapt itself to the free in stitutions of this country, has made as show progress as the Quaker Church. After occupying the territory of the State about one hundred and seventy five years, the Episcopal Church counts in North Carolina only 3,333 communicants. Not as many as one of our ten Districts. There are 40 counties in which there is no Episcopal church organized. They have about 80 organized churches, mostly in the cities and towns.

THE PRESBYTERIANS,

according to Dr. Foote's sketches, settled in Duplin country as early as 1737. Rev. Mr. Robinson preached in the State in the year of 1742.—About this time Rev. Jas. Campbell began preaching among the Presbyterian families on the Cape Fear river, and Rev. Hugh McAden was operating in Caswell. Prior to the Declaration of the Revolutionary War, Pattillo was preaching in Orange county, Dr. Caldwell in Guilford, McCorkle in Rowan, Hall in Iredell, Craighead in Mecklenburg. Along the fertile belt of land stretching from Danville across the State to Charlotte, the Presbyterians had organized over twenty flourishing churches when Methodism began in the State.—But notwithstanding this great advantage as to time, preoccupancy of the ground, and a learned ministry, they have fallen far in the rear of Methodism. While the banner of Methodism is planted in every county of the State, there are 33 counties having no Presbyterian church, and while Methodism numbers her hundred thousand, Presbyterianism counts only fifteen thousand in the State.

THE BAPTISTS

began at an early date to operate in North Carolina. I have not been able to find when or where the first Baptist church was located in our State. Mr. McAden in 1755 speaks of meeting with Baptists at his preaching places. Dr. Howell says the first Baptist Church established in Virginia was in the year 1714.

The Minutes of the N. C. State Convention say, that Liberty Association was organized in 1332—just 160 years before Columbus discovered America. Of course this is a mistake chargeable to the slippery uncertainties of types. Sandy Creek Association is put down as having been organized in 1758—Yadkin in 1793, Eastern in 1794; Cape Fear in 1804. The organization of individual churches must have preceded that of an Association; consequently, I suppose that the Baptists began their work of organized efforts about 1750. All this however is subject to correction as soon as I shall be able to obtain the facts in the case.

THE METHODISTS

came into North Carolina later than the other denominations mentioned All the Methodistic Historians agree that the first circuit formed in North Carolina was in 1776. But the Methodists had preached in the State before this date. Pilmoor had made a tour through the State down towards Charleston and preached at several places on his way in 1773. "Robert Williams entered it in the same year, and in the next, formed societies within its bounds." To Williams is due the honor of pioneering Methodism into the Old North State. The point of entrance was Halifax county, which "especially gave the denomination a hearty reception, and was the scene of many of its earliest societies, and for years, of its principal strength in the State." In 1774, John King, John Wade, and Isaac Rollings, were sent on the circuit lying south of Petersburg, and during the year came into North Carolina and preached to the Societies formed by Williams.—"These preachers," says Jesse Lee, were blessed among the people, and were made a blessing to them in their turn; and in the latter part of the year, there was a most remarkable revival of religion in most parts of the circuit." It is probable that this gracious work extended into North Carolina. In 1776, the fourth Conference was held in Baltimore. "At that time," says Jesse Lee, there were four new circuits added, three of which were in Virginia. The other was called Carolina, as it lay in the State of North Carolina. In the same year, the Carolina circuit appears on the Minutes for the first time, having 683 members, and Edward Drumgole, Francis Poythress and Isham Tatum were the preachers sent to it Of these pioneers I expect to speak in my next.

CHILDHOOD.

NUMBER 3.

"God be praised for little children! How do their young ministries of gladness and affection bless our households and bind about our hearts the tendernesses of their better, purer nature."—(Old Author.)

The selfish and unfortunate bachelor may well be horror-stricken when he contemplates the noise and confusion—the cares and anxieties—the expense and support of a family, and may hug his good fortune on his lone and solitary pillow, wrapped in his cold sheets—and from his very heart pity his unfortunate neighbor who has probably a "baker's dozen" of squalling children, to litter his rooms, claw his furniture, displace his tools, eat out his substance by day and tax his patience at night.

This unfortunate (?) neighbor, however, returns his sympathy with interest, and from his heart of hearts pities the loneliness and poverty of his bachelor friend, (though in this world's goods he may be called wealthy) and can never look into his richly furnished rooms where no stray plaything reveals the occasional presence of a child, without regret, cannot see in all his extensive and tasteful garden a tiny foot print to remind him of his treasures at home.

He has listened to his heart and learned from it a precious secret, unknown to his wealthy bachelor neighbor—he knows how to convert noise into harmony, expense into self gratification and trouble into amusement and pleasure, and he reaps in one day's intercourse with his family a harvest of love and enjoyment rich enough to repay years of toil and care.

When business or duty calls him away from home, how reluctantly he numbers the miles as they lead him off—how joyously he turns his face thitherward—with what elastic yet impatient steps he measures the distance—how he antidates the blissful moment when he can spy the light of home and hear the "deep mouthed welcome of his faithful dog," and when at last his door is reached, how he lingers upon its threshhold to listen to the pattering of his darlings' feet and nerve himself for the happy, boisterous greeting he is so sure of receiving.

But it is not to parents and near connections only that children are interesting—they are general favorites—and that man who is not pleased with the friendship or flattered by the caress of a child, is fit for stratagems treason and spoils—let no such man be trusted"—if he fears the taunts and sneers of the world for his childhood proclivities. We have a great many splendid examples of ancient and modern living and dead heroes, conquerors, statesmen, orators, philosophers, divines and judges, who have thought it no "letting down" of their dignity to evince a love and interest for these pigmy play things—even kings have been known to have their noses snubbed—their ears pinched and their eyes gouged—by some little sprig of royalty, whose empire was the nursery.

We have however the strange and humiliating anomaly of a fine lady (I will not say a woman) preferring a puppy or a kitten to a child—a perversion of womanly instincts and feeling—a lowering of female taste and delicacy too intolerable to contemplate. While we condemn, we perhaps ought to pity their unnatural taste and misguided affection.

But the picture we have drawn of the general attractions of childhood is sometimes tarnished with one or two blots, which seem to mar its otherwise perfect outline.

One of these is the spoiled child—the unfortunate victim, generally, of a parents misguided, misdirected authority—or rather want of authority; unreasonable, impatient, selfish and exacting, they become a terror to everybody, and make one marvel at their early depravity.

Another blot is found in the over-educated, supra excellent child—another victim of parental or pedantic folly. This has put away childish things" at too early a year—ignores dolls, drums and holidays and fairy tales, must have a seat in the upper chamber—thinks nothing of criticising your grammar, correcting your geographical or chronological knowledge; can "let off" upon the Copernician system or the saburian or old red sand stone formation, and quote excerpts from Latin and French authors. But after all it is not fair to charge upon the poor child the sin of blotting the fair page of its history—parental folly and indulgence have done the one—pedantic ambition and worse than folly have accomplished the other—the child is only a victim in either case.

Without attempting to discuss all the relative bearings which the subject of childhood suggests, I cannot in this connection well avoid noticing the intellectual and physical training of children, as too important and too closely allied to their happiness to be passed by—aware as I am that many of the readers of the ADVOCATE are earnestly engaged in the great work of the moral and intellectual training of children, I cannot of course venture many remarks upon this point;—will resume this point in the next number.

Worldly Amusements.

In a former number it was shown that the wisest, wealthiest, and most upright heathens, disapproved of public amusements, as dancing, circuses, and public games. Let us notice now the sayings of the earliest "christian fathers" on this subject.

"What business has a christian in such places as these? A christian, who has not the liberty so much as to think of an ill thing, why does he entertain himself with lewd representations?" ST. CYPRIAN.

"What need have I to speak of the lewdness of the spectacles and be particular in description? For what's there to be met with but lewd laughing, but smut, railing, and buffoonery.' ST CHRYSOSTOM.

"Dare we presume upon the liberty of your shows, lest our senses should be tinctured with indecency and profaneness" THEOPHILUS, Bishop of Antioch.

"We have nothing to do with the lewdness of the play house, or the barbarities of the beer garden," TERTULLIAN.

"The circus and the theatre may not improperly be called the chair of pestilence. Away with these lewd ungodly diversions." CLEMENT of Alexandria.

"They are cages of nuckaduess and public schools of debauchery.' ST. AUGUSTINE.

So much for the opinions of the early writers on the subject of christian behavior. Now turn to the language of eminent men of modern times and of the present day, first noticing that ROUSSEAU, the infidel said: "I observe, in general, that the situation of actors is a state of licentiousness, and bad morals."

"Putting together, in one class, all gamblers, circus-riders, actors, and racing jockeys, I pronounce them to be men who live off society without returning any useful equivalent for their support. In the support of gamblers, circus riders, actors, and racing jockeys, a christian people are guilty of supporting mere mischief makers, men whose very hearts are diseased, and whose sores exhale contagion to all around them. H. W. BEECHER.

"The theatre of to day is evil—evil from its purpose, evil in its matter, evil in its acting, evil in its fruit. It is evil, and only evil, continually.' DR. FOWLER.

"The present stage entertainments not only sap the foundation of all religion, but tend to drinking and debauchery of every kind, which are constant attendants on these entertainments." JOHN WESLEY.

"A nursery of licentiousness and vice; a recreation which ought not to be allowed among a civilized, much less among a christian people." ARCHBISHOP TILLOTSON.

It would be very easy to produce such quotations as the above to the number of one or two hundred. The wisest and best men of every denomination have put their seal of disapprobation upon such things.

But above all it behooves us to remember that the Bible tells us to "avoid the very appearance of evil," that 'jesting, and 'foolish talking,' are classed among sins that lead the soul astray. It may be said truly, that, "the authority of great men should not silence doubt or crush the spirit of inquiry,' but where an immense body of the most sensible men the world has ever produced unite in one sentiment, it has a weight that none but fools and idiots would treat lightly.

The Bible, however is 'the end of controversy, and that tells us to 'walk circumspectly,' not as fools, but as wise men.' Wise men shun vain and light amusements.

E. L. P.

In an article upon the best mode of constructing sewers, in the Atlantic Monthly, Col. G. E. Waring, Jr., thus describes the most common defects in their construction: "Sewers choke and overflow during heavy storms mainly because they are too large for the work they are ordinarily called on to perform. If a sewer is so small that its usual flow is concentrated to a sufficient depth to carry before it any ordinary obstruction it will keep itself clean. But if, as is almost always the case where the engineer lacks experience or where he defers to the ignorance of the local authorities, it is so large that its ordinary flow is barely more than a film, with no power even to remove sand, we may be quite sure that its refuse solid matters will gradually accumulate until they leave, near the crown of the arch, only the space needed for the smallest constant stream. And, in order to make room for a rain-fall flow, the whole sewer will have to be cleared by the costly and offensive process of removal by manual labor."

A man can find fault in any direction he is pleased to look for it.

Easter

TRINITY COLLEGE, April 4, 1876.

Mr. Ennies:

DEAR SIR:—At last I send my answer about Easter. I have prepared it for the press. I want it published with my name to it. It required much research and calculation to prove my positions. I am right, and I know it. The Prayer Book is wrong. Your Almanac is the only correct one in the country.

Yours truly,

B. CRAVEN.

EASTER.

The conflict of opinion as to the true time of Easter for 1876, has elicited various explanations, none of which seem to be satisfactory. In my opinion, the designation of April 16th, according to the English Book of Common Prayer, is erroneous, and April 9th is the true day.

Differences of opinion as to the true time arose during the first century, and so serious was the contest, that it was deemed essential for the Council of Nice A. D. 325, to settle the matter decisively. That Council passed the following resolutions:

1. Easter shall everywhere be begun to be observed on the first day of the week, that is, Sunday.

2. Easter shall be on the Sunday, that shall next follow, immediately after the fourteenth of the moon, that shall follow next after the vernal equinox.

3. It shall be referred to the Bishop of Alexandria to calculate every year according to these rules, when the festival shall begin.

Previous to this time the Eastern Churches kept Easter on the 14th of the month Nisan, corresponding to the Jewish Passover; the Western Churches waited till the Sunday following. By defect in various cycles used to determine the time, hatred of every thing Jewish, haughtiness of the priests, and obstinate sectionalism, there were numerous discrepancies and contests during the following three hundred years. Finally Victorious, a Presbyter of Limoges, compounded some of the existing cycles, forming a new and better one. This was improved by Dionysius a Roman abbot, A. D. 527, and was finally adopted in England, at a council held at Whitby in Yorkshire A. D. 664. Those who claimed the 14 Nisan, irrespective of the day of the week, cited as authority the usage of St. John; the supporter of the Nicene decision, quoted St. Peter as infallible authority. Oswey, King of the Northumbrians, who presided, asked if it was certain that St. Peter held the keys of heaven. Being answered in the affirmative, he said: "I decide for the Nicene rule lest when I come to the gates of heaven, Peter should shut them against me."

By this decision the Dionysian cycle and the Nicene rule were established in England, and are the basis of the calculations in the book of Common Prayer.

By the Nicene decree, and in accordance with the fifth rule of the Council of Whitby, the first Sunday after the 14th of Nisan is Easter, which is the same as the first Sunday after the first full moon after the Vernal Equinox. The Council of Whitby added, contrary to the Council of Nice, that if the 14th Nisan was on Sunday, then Easter should be the Sunday following. This year the month Nisan began March 26; April 8th is the 14th, and the following Sunday, which is the next day, is Easter; hence the designation of April 9th as Easter, accords with the Nicene decree, and also with the bigoted sixth rule of Whitby. In 1717, a scheme was published according to these rules, to determine the church days forever in England, this scheme puts Easter on April 9th in 1876. See Prideaux's Connexion, vol. 2, page 163.

I am aware of the pretended rule that says: "If the full moon falls after twelve o'clock on Saturday night, it is to be considered as Sunday, and Easter is to come on the Sunday following." This rule is absurd and without authority; it is not supported by any calendar, nor any other rule of calculation.

1. It is absurd. When the moon falls April 8, the time is different at different places. It is 10 o'clock 11 minutes, P. M., at Jernsalem; 7:39 P. M., at London; 2:30 P. M., at Washington; 11:31 A. M., at San Francisco; 9 A. M., at the Sandwich Islands. Hence by this rule there would be two Easters, except in Idaho and Eastern Nevada where there would be none at all.

2. There is no computation of time that makes the day begin at noon, except Astronomical. Astronomical Sunday does not begin till 12 at noon of our Sunday; and hence by this the moon is full at Jerusalem itself thirteen hours and forty-nine minutes before Sunday begins.

For hundreds of years after the Nicene Council, the calculations were made at Alexandria and Rome by Roman time; and by this the moon was full at Rome March 8, three hours and thirty two minutes before Sunday began. By every known rule of calculation April 16th is erroneous.

The whole matter is explained by this: the tables in the Prayer book are incorrect. The Julian year by which the prayer book is calculated exceeds the solar year by which almanacs are made, nearly one day in one hundred years, and at the expiration of this century the golden number in the prayer book must be moved forward one day to repair the error. Assuming the prayer book correct or nearly so, at beginning of this century, it is now wrong by at least twelve hours, and the full moon falling nearer than usual to the dividing line, the prayer book missed the canonical Easter by one week.

According to Toinard and others, Christ was crucified on the 3rd of April at or near 9 o'clock a. m.: darkness was over the land from 12 to 3 o'clock; he died a little after three and was taken from the cross before 5 o'clock; he lay in the tomb during 4th of April, and arose on the morning of the 5th. Hence Easter on the 9th is four days beyond the true anniversary, and the 16th is still worse.

The Bolted Door.

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Rev 3:20.

God is knocking,
Ever knocking,
At the heart's three bolted door,
Which we're locking,
Ever locking,
As we oft have done before;
And we hear, yet hearing, heed not,
While we faster bolt the door.

He is calling,
Ever calling,
In a soft and gentle tone,
To the fallen,
And the falling,
To the weary and the lone;
Still they answer not the summons
Till the Spirit voice has flown.

He's entreating,
Ever entreating,
By His mercy, by His care,
Knocking, knocking,
And repeating,
"Let Me enter!" How it mortal
Open with the sin-locked portal;
Hear it, mortal, open quickly!
God is waiting at the door.

Dr. Peterman, the great German geographer, expresses himself satisfied that the diamond fields at Zimbaye, Africa, are identical with the Ophir of the Bible, from which King Solomon is said to have conveyed gold and ivory and precious stones for the construction of the temple.

A boiling lake has been discovered in the Island of Dominica, which excites the interest of geologists and scientists. It is about two thousand five hundred feet above the level of the ocean, and about two miles in circumference. When discovered by the explorer, clouds of sulphurous vapor covered the surface, and a mound of water ten feet higher than the general surface was seen, caused by ebullition. The margin is formed by beds of sulphur, and the waters issue over a waterfall of considerable height.

A new rain gauge is described in La Nature, which is the invention of M. Herve Mangon, and is in action at his observatory at St. Mariedu-Mont. The rain is caught in a funnel and conveyed to a cylinder, in which there is a float moving between guides. This float is connected with a pencil, which marks its height by a continuous line. The time is marked by an electro-magnet, which is set in action at regular intervals by a clock. The record is taken on a paper stretched between two cylinders, also moved by the clock, and the scale is so chosen as to enable the same paper to take a rainfall of one meter for a year, which suffices for most of France.

A French commission, appointed to devise some means for disinfecting the River Seine at Paris, have recently reported. It appears that from where the large sewer enters at Clichy the river gets into a very repulsive state, which is considerably aggravated below that, as far as the Island St. Denis, by fetid water from new factories and from other sewers. It is only below Meulan and Mantes that the Seine water becomes fit for use again. The commission think the whole of the sewage of Paris (one hundred million cubic meters a year) might be employed on the surface of about two thousand hectares which has been devoted to this use near the peninsula of Gennevilliers; but they recommend to convey half of it to the domanial forest of St. Germain. They consider purification by chemical processes (in particular by sulphate of aluminum) too expensive and difficult to be applied to the whole of the sewage, and they urge a strict enforcement of the law regarded pollution of rivers, the removal of infected deposits by dredging, etc.

To every man there are many dark hours, when he feels inclined to abandon his best enterprises, when his heart's dearest hopes appear delusive, hours when he feels unequal to the burden, when all his aspirations seem worthless. Let no one think he alone has dark hours. They are the common lot of humanity. They are the touchstones to try whether we are current coin or not.

Said a lad who was walking with his father, "They are knocking away the props from under the bridge what are they doing that for? Won't the bridge fall?" "They are knocking them away," said the father, "that the timbers may rest more firmly upon the stone piers, which are now finished." God only takes away our earthly props, that we may rest more firmly upon him.

But trials clear away the obscurity, and give distinctness and beauty to his piety.

The discipline of suffering is a test of the soul's sincerity. The time when loaves and fishes were distributed was not the time to test the people who thronged around the Saviour. When he had nothing but prayers and groans to give, where was the multitude? It was easier to be known as a follower of Christ when "Hosanna" was the popular song, than when the rabble shouted "Crucify him!"

KITE DAY IN JAPAN.—A letter from Nagaski, Japan, printed in the New Orleans Southwestern Presbyterian, says: "On the 15th of April was the great kite day for Nagaski. The Japanese are very fond of kite flying, and display a great deal of skill. The kites have no tail like ours, and are made of two pieces of bamboo crossed, covered with the thin, but very strong Japanese paper. The people all assembled on the top of 'Kompira,' a hill about eleven hundred feet high, and the air was thick with kites. Several hundred kites were in the air at same time, and the great aim of each operator is to so manoeuvre his kite as to cut the string of the others. For this purpose the first couple of hundred feet of string from the kite is covered with rosin and pounded glass. Sometimes four or five kites would get foul of each other, then the thing was other to get your kite clear or cut the strings of the others. Then again, having cut a kite string, it was wonderful to see them catch this detached kite, away up in the air, with their kite and capture it, the universally accepted rule being, that a kite belongs to you as long as you can keep it out of somebody else's hands. The Japs never get angry about such things. It would have been hard to find 20,000 or 30,000 people anywhere else in the world to enjoy themselves so much and with nothing disagreeable attending it."

HIVING BEES.—The swarming season will soon be here, and this may be of importance to our bee raisers. We were told by Mr. Wm S Stephenson, last Fall, of a novel and effective way of hiving bees. He says, when a swarm is settled, if a mop (made of limbs with leaves on them, tied on a pole, which could be kept for the purpose,' is stirred around among them that they will leave the settling place and gather on the mop, when they can be safely and easily taken down and placed in the hive.—Give the plan a trial; it is easily done.

AGRICULTURAL.

Preparation of Soil for Cotton.

A contrariety of views exist among farmers in regard to the best method of preparing the land for cotton and also in reference to distance of planting. By the way we remember that a kind providence has not made success contingent upon mathematical exactness, but liberally rewards labor performed even with skill. The great point being in the productions of the earth—labor. We have known large crops of cotton produced with very shallow preparation. Indeed we have been impressed with the fact that under certain circumstances [illegible] better, the tendency is to too much stalk deep plowing contributes to the growth of stalk and shallow plowing has a tendency to develop the stalk and to increase the tendency to fruit, and in our higher latitude we cannot grow too large a stalk for the reason that the season is too short to mature the bolls. We have also thought that in light sandy soils nothing is gained by deep preparation as the subsoil is open enough for the top root to penetrate without the assistance of the plow.

Again we have been impressed with the fact that moderate manuring implies necessary loss depth of preparation. To plow very deep and manure very moderately is equivalent to an extension of the surface over which a given quantity of manure is spread. To illustrate: Two hundred pounds of guano is perhaps as much as will pay on an acre of land plowed at the usual depth of 3 or 4 inches, while land plowed 6 or 8 inches deep would readily bear double the quantity.

The intelligent farmer ought to consider the depth of preparation and regulate the quantity of fertilizer accordingly. We tested our theory last year by applying 400 pounds of a good fertilizer upon land prepared as usual with a one horse plow and could see no advantage of 400 pounds over 200 pounds. Again, we applied 300 pounds per acre upon a lot well prepared and which produced the year before 8 bales of cottton, and last year we gathered 10 bales or a differnce of two bales of cotton for 1000 pounds of guano, admitting the season and cultivation for the two years to be equal. The first year we think was quite as favorable for the growth of cotton as the second, but the cultivation the last year was somewhat better.

In reference to the distance at which cotton should be planted, the same contrariety of views exist among our best farmers. Some say crowd both in rows and drills, while others insist that it should have distance at least one way. Circumstances must govern as in the use of fertilizers. Upon thin land rows 2½ or 3 feet at farthest, with cotton standing 8 or 9 inches apart in the drill will beyond question produce more than 4 feet rows, while upon improved lands rows 3½ to 4 feet are unquestionably better. We are decidedly of the opinion that cotton in our climate should be crowded so as to develop the stalk if we realize the largest yield. Distance gives a larger stalk but the season is too short for the fruit to mature, and hence the custom of planting in checks may do for the Southern States but will not do for North Carolina.

The best general direction which can be given is: To give such distance to the rows as that the cotton may meet without locking too much, and upon land either rich or poor crowd in drills and let the degree of crowding depend upon the strength of the land. 6 or 8 inches on poor land and 8 or 10 on good land.—W. T. Walters in Biblical Recorder.

To Our Friends.

The ADVOCATE, though prospering, needs more subscribers, and every charge in the Conference needs more copies of the ADVOCATE. In proportion to the number of ADVOCATE subscribers on a circuit or station, is the interest in church matters and the support of church enterprises. We are constantly assured of this fact by the expressions of our ministers and agents. The Church cannot afford to dispense with the ADVOCATE, and we trust that our preachers will regard it as both a duty and good policy to look after the extended circulation of the paper. We are gratified at the number of renewals and new subscriptions we are receiving, but we feel that the Church is yet far behind its duty in the support of the ADVOCATE. Many of our preachers are working nobly for the paper: to them we are deeply grateful. Others are wanting in zeal: such we invoke to be zealous in the good work.

Now brethren let there be a united effort all along the line. This is Centennial year: give us a Centennial blessing! One of the very best things you can do is to take a copy of the ADVOCATE into your pulpit and show it to the people, and urge all old subscribers to renew, and then see how many new subscribers you can obtain.

Send the cash with the names if possible, but if the people cannot pay and you will be personally responsible, we will send the papers. Remember the ADVOCATE costs but $2.20 a year; to clubs of ten, $2 a year.

Self Interest.

Among the long catalogue of evils with which society is afflicted, selfishness, perhaps, heads the list. Its effects are everywhere to be found.—It is not confined to any particular class of persons exclusively. Starting in the lowest strata of society, it reaches out into all the professions of life, cutting its way as it goes, and leaving in its track festering sores to tell its sad story. By selfishness we mean an inordinate regard to self and self interest or happiness,—a supreme self love or self preference which leads a person to direct his purposes and plans to the advancement of his own interest, power or happiness without regard to those of others. Mackintosh says it is 'a vice utterly at variance with the happiness of him who harbors it, and, as such, condemned by self love.' It not only destroys the peace and happiness of him who has cultivated it until it is the ruling passion of his heart, but oftentimes it inflicts the greatest injustice and injury upon the innocent. The man who sells, undertakes to secure the advantage of the purchaser, and the purchaser would fain get the better of the seller. The result is that the side best skilled in shrewdness gets the best bargain. One is the gainer, the other the loser, by the transaction.—This vice has become so common that even good men are sometimes betrayed into the grossest inconsistences before they are aware of it. It is right that every man should take care of his own interest, but in doing so he should be careful not to come in conflict with or damage his fellow man. The pulpit and the religious press are at fault in not uttering strong and repeated denunciations against the sin of selfishness in its multifarious forms.

Orders are already coming in for the Centennial volume, not only from North Carolina, but from sister States. The book, which will be published as early as practicable, will no doubt have a large sale.

Rev. F. L. Reid spent several days in the city the past week, assisting Bro. Norman in his revival meeting at Person Street Church. We are glad to know that the meeting has been one of great spiritual profit to the membership of the church, and that several persons have become the subjects of converting grace.

Death of A. T Stewart.

Alexander T. Stewart, the great Merchant Prince of New York City, died on the 10th inst Commerce mourns the loss of her greatest votary, for the world held no greater merchant: his store houses were in every quarter of the globe, his agents bought and sold in every land, his caravans were on the desert and his ships on the sea, all going and coming at his orders and laden with merchandise for his giant store-rooms. The fortune that he had made was colossal—estimated at from fifty to one hundred millions of dollars. It was made in trade and not by speculation—the result of a judicious investment of about $4,000 fifty years ago, and the skillful management of his capital and honest dealing with patrons for a half century. To him New York is indebted to a great degree for the magnitude of her commercial interests and the great world of trade has lost in him, its acknowledged head.

He was the living incarnation of the genius of trade and the remarkable success which attended all his business transactions, proves that he was a man of wonderful shrewdness and most unerring foresight. His giant business with all its details and ramifications, was under his personal supervison and it is said that he kept himself informed of the rise or decline in the price of every article in his line of merchandise. The books at his "up-town" and "down town" stores he inspected daily and a glance sufficed to show him the condition of his business, the amount of purchases, sales and profits and the state of his stock on hand. His "up-town," retail store covers a whole block, and about 2000 employes are in its service. Though nearly seventy four years of age, he was as active and successful in his last years, as in his prime, and up to within a month of his death managed for himself his vast concerns. His will provides for the continuation of all his business under the style of the firm A. T. Stewart & Co., and the bulk of his large estate is left to his wife. No children survive him and he has no blood relatives in America. He received a liberal education in his youth and was fond of the works of literature and art. He had the finest private art gallery in America and the last painting which he purchased cost $75,000. His charities were not as frequent and great as his large estate enabled him to make them, but his will provides for some large benefactions to his race.

Sincerity

we clip the following, which we commend not only to the children but to the grown people:

"By sincerity I mean very much more than truth-telling. I know people whose word can always be trusted, and who never break a promise, yet who are not through and through sincere. Sincerity in character is like transparency in crystal. It is character without a flaw to hide, with no desire to appear better than it is, and it is not afraid to let itself be open as the day, for the day to shine through.

Absolute, rigid, uncompromising principle in all essentials is the rule of the sincere. Courteous consideration, generous self forgetfulness, and kind approbation, is equally the rule of the sincere. I cannot refrain from warning my readers against gushing. Think when you are writing that letter to that beloved friend, whether you mean all you say. Say nothing you do not feel sure you mean. Too many ardent intimacies burn themselves out, too many life long friendships grow cold through the fierceness and fervor of the sentiment on which they are built. They are like fires of chips or brambles, not like deep smouldering furnace heats.

"Faithful," says the Holy Book, 'are the wounds of a friend." It is the kiss of an enemy that is deceitful. I believe that between the best friends there are times when plain speaking is necessary, but when there is a solid foundation of mutual trust, it will never give offense.

"Sine cera—without wax. Being in reality what it seems to be, not hypocritical or pretended, nor simulated." So says the lexicon. Please look up the word for yourself, with all its synonyms."

The Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia will not be open to visitors on any Sabbath while it lasts. We are glad to note this respect for our civil laws and the religious sentiments of our people. It will, perhaps, seem strange to some of our European visitors, but we are glad to know that the managers do not pander to the tastes and customs of those who make no distinction between Sundays and week days. Americans, we suppose, more than any other people, love and keep the Sabbath, to their honor be it said.

Just as we put our paper to press, we received a letter from Rev. N. M. Jurney announcing the serious illness of Dr. Closs, at Toisnot. He is ill with pneumonia and his physician regards his condition as critical. We join with Bro. Jurney in the prayer that the reverend Doctor's life may be spared.

In the place of doing, we too often exhaust ourselves with preparing to do.

The First Camp-Meeting and Sunday-School in North Carolina.

MESSRS EDITORS: In answer to the inquiry of Bro. W. C. Willson as to the first camp meeting and Sunday school formed in North Carolina, I have searched out the following information:

The first camp-meeting ever held in America was in Kentucky. In the latter part of 1799, John and William McGee, two brothers—the first a Methodist local preacher, the second a Presbyterian minister, who had emigrated from North Carolina and settled in Tennessee, set out on a preaching tour into Kentucky. They attended a sacramental meeting under the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. McGready, a Presbyterian minister. An overwhelming revival broke out.—Sobs and cries pervaded the whole congregation to such an extent that Messrs McGready, Hoge and Rankin, Presbyterian ministers, left the house. The two McGees, however, stood their ground, and managed as best they could the extraordinary spiritual manifestations "The tidings spread far and wide, and the people came in crowds to see what these things meant." They came with their wagons, bedding and provisions. Some built temporary huts, others pitched their hunting tents, and there they remained for days and nights. And this was the beginning of the "camp-meetings" in the United States.—Whatever honor may be attached to the origin of camp meetings must be jointly shared between the Methodists and Presbyterians, though the Methodists have reaped a grander harvest from them than the Presbyterians.—Now to the question—Who held the first camp meeting in North Carolina? Dr. Foote in his sketches of North Carolina (alias sketches of Presbyterianism) says: "In October 1801, a fall communion was held in Hawfields, under the pastoral charge of Mr. Paisley. People came from a distance in their wagons, and remained on the ground all night The meeting continued for five days with great religious results." And then he adds in large capitals: "This was the first camp-meeting in North Carolina."

Father Doub in his "Historical Incidents" makes the following statement: "The first regularly arranged camp meeting ever held east of the Blue Ridge was on my father's premises in the year 1802. Daniel Asbury was on the Yadkin circuit that year and the year previous. It was mainly by his influence and my father's that this meeting was appointed. It was largely attended, and there were many canvass tents and large congregations. The camp-meeting spoken of by Dr. Foote was [illegible] communion meeting, not as a regularly arranged camp meeting, and resulted by reason of the extraordinary religious interest, in a protracted meeting of such a nature as induced the people to remain on the ground all night, sleeping in their wagons.—It does not appear that a single tent was built on the ground—nor was it given out in advance as a camp meeting, but was "the usual fall communion." But the camp meeting held on the Doub premises was a regularly arranged camp meeting—given out in advance to be a camp-meeting, tents were arranged for the occasion, the day set when it would begin and close; and therefore I conclude that it was the first camp meeting held in North Carolina.

Next as to the question—When did Sunday schools begin in North Carolina? Let us go back a little in order to give a probable answer to this inquiry. A young Methodist woman who afterward married a Methodist preacher, first suggested to Robert Raikes the idea of organizing Sunday Schools in 1781 at Gloucester. Wesley immediately copied the account into his Arminian Magazine, and was the first man in England to recommend this new institution. In the same year Fletcher introduced it into his parish.

In the year 1784, five years before any one else had organized a Sunday School in America, Bishop Asbury established the first Sunday School at the house of Thomas Crenshaw, in Hanover county, Va.

In the year 1790, the Conferences passed an ordinance for establishing Sunday Schools in all the bounds of the work. The Minute cited in Lee's History says: "Let us labor as the heart and soul of one man, to establish Sunday Schools in or near the place of public worship. Let persons be appointed by the bishops, elders, deacons, or preachers to teach all that will attend and have a capacity to learn, from 6 o'clock in the morning till ten, and from 2 o'clock in the afternoon till 6, when it does not interfere with public worship. The council shall compile a proper school book to teach them learning and piety." This is supposed to be the first Conference recognition of Sunday Schools by American Methodists. As it was a Conference order, it is presumable that the preachers carried it out when they reached their respective fields of labors; and as such faithful men as Daniel Asbury, Thomas Ware, Jesse Richardson, Enoch George, Isaac Lowe, and many others, were sent to labor in North Carolina during this year, the inference is conclusive that a general move was made in organizing the said schools in every state. In the absence of any other proof, I conclude therefore, that the first Sunday Schools formed in N. C. began in 1790. The question, however, is open for further discussion, if any other brother has more information on this interesting subject.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

MESSRS EDITORS: I see that the honor of originating the Centennial idea has been given to several. I wish to call attention to the fact that brother R. S. Webb, is entitled to the honor of originating the idea and first wrote an article proposing to celebrate the Centennial of organized Methodism in N. C. His first article appeared in your paper dated March 24th 1875, which you will find to be true by referring to your file. In this article he proposed that Centennial meetings should be held and that we should take advantage of these meetings to liquidate our College debts. In October following, Bro. H. T. Hudson wrote an article on the same subject, proposing to try to liquidate the College debts and to build a new Church in Raleigh. He opened his article by referring to Bro. Webb's article, which had preceded his. You will find Bro Hudson's article in your paper of Oct. 20th 1875

So you see that Bro. W[illegible] is entitled to the honor of writing the first article on the subject and first suggesting the idea of celebrating the Centennial of N. C. Methodism.

I write this not to detract from any one, but that Bro. Webb may receive the honor that is his due.

Yours truly,

F. L. REID.

Revival at Charlotte

MESSRS EDITORS: We closed our protracted meeting last night. It has been a very gracious season for five weeks and a half. From the first to near the close of the meeting the congregation was very large and exceedingly serious.

I suppose that quite a number have been led to the Savior who never appeared at the altar for special prayer; therefore the number of converts is not known: I judge not less than seventy five. Many of the converts were members of the church who had never professed conversion. Forty-six joined our church and I hope others will join. Other churches of course have received several. Our Presiding Elder, Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, assisted me at different times during the meeting with marked success. Rev. C. M. Pepper, and Rev. T. P. England, both preached for us in passing through the city. Rev. W. W. Duncan rendered very efficient aid. He was with me two Sabbaths and several week days and labored with unusual zeal and success. God abundantly blessed his labors and he will long be remembered in Charlotte by all denominations.

The Lord has done great things for us. [illegible] all the glory.

Enthusiastic Temperance Meeting.

The neighbors of Bethany, Davidson county, met on Sunday evening, April the 9th, at Bethany Academy for the purpose of organizing a society of Friends of Temperance.

Mr. Burton was called to the chair and nominations for President, Vice President, Secretary and Marshal were handed in and voted upon, which resulted in the election of B. H Palmer, President; Miss Flora Siseloff, Vice President; Jasper Motsinger, Secretary; and Rufus Hiatt, Marshal.

The meeting was large and enthusiastic, and after the warm and earnest appeals of Mr. Burton to the old men and women, Mr. Huff of Thomasville, to the middle aged and newly married, and Mr. Palmer to his students and the young generally, between 35 and 40 were enrolled upon the list.

The Centennial Book.

At the Centennial Celebration held in Raleigh, N. C., March 21-26—1876, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, viz:

WHEREAS, In obedience to resolutions passed by the N. C. Conference, of the M. E. Church, South, at its late session held in the city of Wilmington, N. C, a grand celebration of the Centennial of Methodism in the State of North Carolina has been held in the city of Raleigh, and during their centennial exercises, much valuable homiletical and historical truth has been brought to light, and

WHEREAS, It is needful that these truths should be suitably preserved, for the encouragement and instruction of future generations, and for the defence and propagation of Methodism. therefore be it

Resolved 1st, That the Bishops and brethren, who have delivered the various addresses on the occasions of these centennial exercises, and the unread address of Rev. W. M. Robey, President of Davenport Female College, be and are hereby earnestly and respectfully requested to furnish the manuscripts of their several addresses to the commitee of arrangements and that they, the said committee, proceed, at the earliest possible day, to publish the same in book form.

Resolved 2d, That as the "Raleigh Christian Advocate" has, and does now, hold an important relation to North Carolina Methodism, the Rev. James B Bobbitt is hereby earnestly requested to prepare a sketch of the ADVOCATE'S history and its relation to North Carolina Methodism, and that the same be published in connection with the various addresses herein referred to.

Resolved 3d, That all profits arising from the publication and sale of the said anticipated volume shall be applied to the building of a Metropolitan M E Church, South, in the city of Raleigh. Signed

The Religions of the World.

Dr. Hurst's "Outline History of the Church" gives the following populations to the creeds of the world; Christianity, 407,000,000; Buddhism, 340,000,000; Mohammedanism, 200,000,000; Brahminism, 175,000,000, Confucianism, 80,000,000; Judaism, 7,000,000; all other forms of religious belief, 174,000,000. Of the Christian populations of the world 131,007,449 are assigned to Protestantism, 200,339,390 to Roman Catholicism, 76,390, 930 to the Oriental Churches. In the New World, comprising North and South America, the Roman Catholics are in the majority, having 50,931,983 of population to 36,936,800 Protestants.

This, of course, is, to a great extent, an estimate made up from as many reliable resources as possible. It is unreliable, mainly, in respect to the swarming millions that inhabit the southeastern and eastern countries of Asia, of whom no census has ever been taken. Dr. Hurst is a very intelligent man and his estimate comes probably as near the mark as it is possible to do at the present time. It presents food for a good deal of reflection.

The present population of this globe, according to the above, is about 1,383,000,000. An immense number of human beings. Our population of 45,000,000, therefore, is only about one thirtieth of that of the whole earth.

The number of nominal Christians is 407,000,000; about one third of the population of the earth. It cannot be said that Christianity has not made great progress in these eighteen centuries of its existence. It has conquered one third of the human race, two thirds yet remain to be gathered into the fold of Jesus. A large work this. But here lies the encouragement. In the last three centuries Christianity alone has progressed, and has progressed wonderfully, while all other forms of religious belief mentioned above have retrograded in in the number of adherents, unless, possibly, the Jews may form an exception.

The Buddhists and Brahminists make up together 515,000,000, or nearly one-half of the human race. These are found mainly in the East Indies, China, Japan and Central Asia. They are the two great divisions of the Oriental nations that stand related to each other somewhat like Catholicism and Protestantism stand related to each other in the Occidental nations. Buddhism arose as a Reformation of Brahminism, just as Protestantism arose as a Reformation of Catholicism. It must be remembered also that ethnologically our European and American nations are descended from the same family as these Asiatic nations, and our European languages are, like theirs, descended from the Sanskrit, or at least allied to it. Of late years an immense amount of missionary labor has been devoted to these people, and with reasonable success.

The followers of Mohammed count 200,000,000, about one-sixth of the total population. These are evidently declining in numbers, and their political power is falling into ruins. But the work of missions among them has not had much success.

The Confucians are a portion of the population of China, followers of the celebrated teacher Confucius. They are still a large body (80,000,000,) but not increasing.

The Jews are set down at only 7,000,000. These may possibly be increasing in numbers, but they are not increasing in the strength of their adherence to their ancient faith. Large numbers of them are becoming rationalists.

The Pagans, of all sorts, number 174,000,000, about one eighth of the whole.—Herald and Presbyter.

Bishop Kavanaugh

The California papers speak in glowing terms of the sermons and addresses of Bishop Kavanaugh. He is now closing his extraordinary plan of visitations on the Pacific Coast. He has been abundant in labors in California, Oregon and the Washington Territory, and everywhere the most gratifying results have followed. The Bishop is expected to reach his home in Louisville, Ky. next month, and will join his colleagues at their annual convocation at Nashville, Tenn., in May. By the way, the question is often asked, "Why has Bishop Kavanaugh never attended a session of the Baltimore Conference?" Much as we are always delighted to have any of our chief pastors with us, it would be a source of sincere pleasure to us, and would afford universal gratification to the Baltimore Conference, to have him with us at our next session.—Ex.

BISHOP MARVIN recently preached in the M. E. Church, South, at Charlestown, W. Va. In speaking of the occasion the Free Press says:—"The sermon was one of tremendous power, and eloquence so intense and soul thrilling that no words of description can convey any adequate idea of its grandeur. His text was the parable of the ten virgins—his theme the Christian's need of watchfulness in view of the uncertainty of the time of the coming of the Lord. A large audience gave breathless attention to the discourse. Revs. Norval Wilson, Wade, Tyler, Hammond, Ferguson, and other ministers were present.'

Minister's Wives

We hardly see a religious paper now-a-days which does not make allusion to the hardships of ministers' wives. Indeed, they have their trials. They have not only to look after the congregation, but the minister. The pastor's wife has to be the friendly critic of the husband's sermon and its delivery. If the preacher comes home with the suspicion that he has made a dead failure in his discourse, she has to persuade him that it was not as bad as he supposed; that he will yet hear of good done by it; that our weakest efforts may sometimes result in a great harvest; that she liked it better this time than when he preached it in the other settlements, etc. She has to stand between him and the doorbell; suppress unpleasant things brought to the house by pestiferous gossips; tear up insulting anonymous letters: and often, on a small salary, navigate a household around the Cape Horn of large expenses.

But oh, the joys of being a minister's wife! Is she not generally the pet of the congregation? If she have culture and disposition, she will have more attention shown her than any other lady in the neighborhood receives. She is sought after, bowed to, and consulted on all sides. She has an open door to all the confidences of the people. In a word, no one has so fair a chance as she She may sometimes complain about the hardships of her station, but she is really so well satisfied with her place that she would not exchange with any one else. We can think of no position more desirable than that of a minister's wife, except that of a minister. Trials—of course. What women are without them? Ever since Eve was down sick from eating too many harvest apples, woman has had troubles; but the parsonage is not the favorite place for their congregating. The merriest wives we have seen, all up and down the land, are ministers' companions. We congratulate the parsonages of Christendom!—Christian at Work.

Religious Intelligence.

Thirty two unmarried American ladies are Protestant missionaries in China.

Fifty foreign missionaries of the American Board are children of missionaries.

The Baptists will hold a camp meeting at Ocean Grove, from July 11th to July 20th.

The Western Advocate, of the 5th, reports two thousand accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Two little girls in Knightstown, Ind., are making a rag carpet for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

The English company of Bible revisers have carried the revision of the New Testament as far as Galatians.

During the last twenty years the amount of Church property by purely voluntary contributions has been twice doubled.

It is stated that the Women's Foreign Mission societies of this country contributed last year $860 000 to foreign missions.

Nine hundred and ninety one new members have been received into Mr. Talmage's church in Brooklyn during the last two years.

The well-known hymn, "Rock of Ages," was written one hundred years ago, in March, 1776. Its author was Augustus Montague Toplady.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has in China 41 missionaries; 75 native preachers: 1,277 members; 689 probationers; churches valued at $68,800; and 1,043 Sunday school scholars

Four New York Methodists have subscribed the sum of six thousand dollars yearly for four years toward the current expenses of Drew Theological Seminary.

The Baltimore Episcopal Methodist has been purchased by a joint stock company, who elected Rev. Samuel K. Cox editor. Rev. Dr. Poisal is appointed traveling agent and correspondent.

The New York Methodist says that on St Patrick's day in New York City the managers of the procession were requested to suspend their music while passing the Hippodrome, where the Moody meetings were in progress The request was courteously complied with, and for four blocks this Catholic procession marched without music, to avoid disturbing a Protestant revival service.

In Japan the Methodist Episcopal Church has eleven missionaries, eighteen members and probationers, three churches, worth $2.000; four parsonages, worth $83,000; and one Sunday school, with thirty scholars.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has in South America, American missionaries, 5; assistant missionaries, 4; missionaries of the Woman's Foreign Society, 2; members, 307; probationers. 143; and churches, 3, worth $15,600.

The series of articles now being published in the ADVOCATE are of unusual interest, and we bespeak for them a careful and profitable perusal.

A writer in the New York Advocate suggests and urges that the General Conference should convene but once in eight years, for the purpose of repose and economy—thus saving the Church "from a quadrennial disturbance and the needless expenditure of thousands of dollars."

A CONDENSED SPEECH.—When the English fleet under Lord Nelson was bearing down upon the French ships anchored in Abourkir Bay, just before the ever memorable battle of the Nile, the captain of one of the British vessels addressed his crew at considerable length, and having exhorted them to remember their duty, and what their country required at their hands, he turned to the captain of the marines and said: "Now sir, you have heard what I said to the ship's company, it may be as well for you to say something to the men more particularly under you." Upon which the marine officer commanded "attention," and addressed them in the following pithy and laconic manner: "My lads, do you see that land? pointing to the shores which they were rapidly nearing "That," said he, "is the land of Egypt, and, if you don't fight, you'll soon be in the house of bondage." The effect was electrical

WORK OF GOD.—The works of God everywhere show perfect wisdom in the Author Take the air for example. If this were a few miles less in height than it is, men would soon be suffocated; if it were a few miles more, it would be unendurably hot wherever the sun's rays penetrated. Take land and water for another example. If the land were much harder than it is, it could not be cultivated; if softer, nothing could be made firm on the surface. If the water of the sea were heavier, the fishes would rise to the surface and could not swim; if it were lighter the fish would sink to the bottom and die. Another example is the proportionate weight and size of man and the globe. If a man were conveyed to the moon, he would weigh five times less then than on earth; he might bound up like a grasshopper, and would be easily upset. If the earth were as large as Jupiter, and otherwise as now, our weight would be increased eleven times, and none of us could walk or stand upright.

PRAISING THE WORK OF FRIENDS.—There is another matter about which we are apt to be unjust in our friendships. We are so sensitive to the charge of overestimating the value of a friend's work through prejudice; that sometimes we let a stranger get the better of us in the expression of appreciation and praise. This is a small and miserable selfishness. Why should we not praise the sermon, the picture, the story, the poem of our friend? How did he get to be our friend in the first place? Did we not choose him, from among ten thousand, because of those very qualities which attract us anew in his art?—The Old Cabinet; Scribner for February.

No mocking in this world ever sounds to me so hollow as that of being told to cultivate happiness.—What does such advice mean? Happiness is not a potato, to be planted in mould, and tilled with manure.—Happiness is a glory shining far down upon us out of heaven She is a divine dew which the soul, on certain of its summer evenings, feels drooping upon it from the amaranth bloom and golden fruitage of paradise.—Charlotte Bronte.

The City.

Col. W. H. Tucker, with his brother's three daughters, left our city for a six months' European tour last week.

GRAND LODGE OF ODD FELLOWS.—This body meets in this city on Wednesday, May 10th. Arrangements are already being made for the reception of delegates, and a good time is anticipated by members of the fraternity. The following delegates have been elected to represent the Lodges of Raleigh: Mateo, No. 8, J. C. Birdsong; Seaton Gales, No. 54, B. H. Woodell; Raleigh, No. 65, Albert Magnin.

NEW PAPER.—Mr. Johnstone Jones, of our city, who is well known in North Carolina as a publisher, will commence the publication of a weekly paper, to be called the North Carolina Farmer's Journal, about the first of August. It is to be purely a farmers' journal and devoted to their interests, independent of all sects, parties, factions or rings. He promises to make it as large as any paper in the State. Subscription $2,00 per year. For further information address Mr. Jones, this city. The Journal has no connection with the late State Agricultural Journal.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Charlotte Observer says the residence of Mr. Eugene Asbury, two and a quarter miles form that place, was burned Wednesday night Partly insured. Family barely escaped.

Wilson ADVANCE: The Church of the Disciples of this place was the recipient, last week, of an elegant communion set—from the liberal hands of Mr. Robert H. Rountree, of New York.

A negro named Bill Ingram was shot in Wadesboro on the 4 th inst., while trying to get away with a piece of cloth slyly from Mr. S. J. McLendon's store. He refused to halt. His leg was broken and had to be amputated.

Mr. Mills, the Superintendent of the Orphan Asylum, made $300 for the asylum by his recent trip with the orphans into Caswell, Orange and Person counties. He was gone twelve days, and his expenses for the time were three dollars and ten cents. There are now one hundred and nine orphans at the Oxford Asylum.

A beautiful infant, about one day old, was found in a basket at the door of a gentleman in Wilmington. It has fallen, the STAR says, into good hands as the gentleman and his wife have no children.

We sympathize with Bro. Pepper, of the Danbury REPORTER in the loss which he sustained by the burning of his residence and newspaper office. The publication of the REPORTER, though for a while suspended, will be resumed at as early a day as possible.

The Wilson ADVANCE issues an extra, reporting the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Edgecombe and Nash counties, held at Battleboro on the 6th, to protest against the charges for freights on the W. & W. Railroad.

Criscoe, who murdered Cagle, in Stanly county, recently, has surrendered himself to the Sheriff, after a reward of $50 had been offered for his arrest. He claims that Cagle was too intimate with his (Criscoe's) wife.

The ORPHAN'S FRIEND says: "Mr. Alexander Odell, of Greensboro, has adopted Carrie Buckner, late of the Orphan Asylum at Asheville, Mr. and Mrs. Odell will educate her as their own child and all the people say, 'lucky little orphan.'"

Other childless couples, wishing to adopt orphans, can now be accommodated either at Oxford or Asheville."

On Wednesday evening about 4 o'clock, while Mr. Rufin Holder, a well-to do farmer of Wake county, was driving to market with a load of cotton, the wagon wheel ran into a rut in the road, throwing Mr H. from a bale of cotton, on which he was seated, breaking his neck, and causing death almost instantly. Mr. H's home is near Earpsboro, in this county, and this accident occurred on the road near Crabtree, about three miles from this city.—ERA.

C. B. Green, Esq., of the Durham TOBACCO PLANT has accepted an invitation to deliver an address on Education before the pupils of Caldwell Institute on 19th May.

Fayetteville WIDE AWAKE, 8th: At a meeting of the stockholders of the Western Railroad, on Thursday last, L. C. Jones was re elected President of the Company; J. D. Williams, E. J. Lilly, A. A. McKethan, Sr., A. P. Hurt and R. T. Seamin, directors on the part of the stockholders, and R. M. Orrell, L. C. Limeberry, T. S. Lutterloh, and W. A. Guthrie were appointed directors on the part of the State. At a subsequent meeting of the Board all the old officers of the Company were reappointed for the ensuing year.

A BENEVOLENT SUGGESTION.—We respectfully but earnestly suggest that every person who has been recently nominated for a State office, or who may be nominated for one, by newspaper correspondence or editorial, be required to give five dollars, to the Orphan Asylums at Oxford and Asheville. We think by these donations a thousand or two dollars will be raised for the sustention of the two noble charities in the keeping of the people. What do you say, ye gentlemen of high aspirations, slim chances and great modesty?—Oxford Torchlight.

TESTIMONY OF RESPECT.

Whereas it has pleased almigh y God, in his adwise providence, to take from our midst our much esteemed friend and fellow member Lee S. Overman

RESOLVED, That we have received the tidings of his decease but recent with emotions of profound sorrow, cherishing as we do, a lively recollection of his many amiable qualities and his earnest zeal for the success of this society.

RESOLVED, That, while we bow with humble submission to the decree of the Supreme Ruler we shall ever cherish in our hearts the sentiments of esteem and friendship, with which his life and character have impressed us.

RESOLVED, That we cordially extend to the family of the deceased our condolence and sympathy in their sudden bereavement.

RESOLVED, That our society in his death has sustained an irreparable loss and has been deprived of one of its warmest and most zealous members, and that, as a token of respect our members wear a badge of mourning for thirty da s.

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and to the Raleigh Christian Advocate Statesville Landmark and Western Methodist, with a request to publish them, and that a copy be recorded in on our minutes,

J. W. COLTRANE,

Mrs. Sallie A. Hadley was the daughter of Langhorn and Susan Birkhead, was born in Randolph co. N. C 24th December 1852, and died near Troy, Montgomery co. 25th March 1876. She was married to Jno. B. Hurley, of Montgomery co. 4th of February 1875 with whom she leaves for care and cherishing a little son about four months old, a memento of his absent companion a comfort in his great loss.

True to the influence of an early training by pious parents she connected herself with the M. E. Church, at Oak Grove, near the old homestead in early life and continued her connection with it until summoned from the society of friends and loved ones here, to a happier home—the heaven of eternal rest.

O her true party, long suffering enduring patience, and entire resignation to the dispensations of providence, many hear cheerful testimony does it require an abundant supply of grace and christian fortitude to bear the afflictions she endured without murmuring and to meet death so calmly.

She was confined to her bed mostly for three months with that dreaded disease consumption and was conscious that the end of her affliction was near and that the parting, however much earthly friends might be of her, must soon come and she spoke of it as an advantage for an earthly journey and breathed to her kind attendants and to her husband many christian admonitions, entreating them to be ready also and to meet her in the home beyond this vale of sorrow.

After having given directions as to the manner of her burial and to the training of her little babe, awaiting the messenger death, she raised her hands heavenward, her lips moving with inaudible expression of joy and clapped them together, and crossed over

On sunday evening the 26th her remains were laid in the tomb in Troy N. C. Church cemetery amid grieving relatives and friends whose greatest consolation is that her spirit is at rest

A FRIEND.

Lest Earth for Heaven on the 5 h of January 1876 sis er Mary Ivey, in the 81st year of her age She was taken with sudden illness, and died in a few hours, and passed away to her reward.

She was connected with a family, whose name is identified with the foundation of methodism in this section of country, and lived such a life as to endear her to all acquainted with her, and leaves behind her a memoria as fragrance "Though dead she yet speaketh," and her devotion to the church of her choice, having been a member from almost early childhood was such as to enlist many others in its membership.

She leaves six faithful children to mourn her loss; amongst them is our worthy steward, and beloved brother Rev. C. W. Ivey, a member of our conferen e

May all of us who knew her well, remember her christian virtues, and imitating her good example follow her as she followed Christ

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the spirit that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

VALUABLE Real Estate for Sale

—AT—

PUBLIC AUCTION.

The largest amount of valuable land ever offered in North-western North Carolina! To all wishing Homes now is your time.

On Monday, the 21st day of August, 1876,

I will offer for sale at public auction, the valuable tract of land situated on Little Fish River, and containing 1 000 acres. This tract of land will be divided into lots to suit purchasers. It is one of the best farms in North-western N. C., under a high state of cultivation; fine cottom lands, with uplands, lying well; fruits, grain, tobacco and the grasses grow luxuriantly on these lands. Splendid grist, flour and circular saw mills are situated on this farm; the best of water-power, lying ready to be improved.—The land is well timbered, watered, and an abundance of good cool springs. In fact it is the best section in the country.

Also another tract, known as the "Saw-Mill" tract, containing 1,500 acres, 400 acres of which has been cleared and cultivated in tobacco, Wheat, corn, oats, rye, tobacco, fruits, and the grasses grow luxuriantly upon this plantation; it is well watered, has well, and is well adapted for dairy stock raising, fruit growing and farming generally; also good water-power and has a circular saw mill.

Also another tract of land lying in the suburbs of Mount Airy, containing 456 acres lying on Lovel's Creek, 100 acres of which is as fine bottom land as there is in the State.

Also another tract of land lying on the Ararat River, known as the Buck Shoals tract on which there are good grist, flouring and saw-mills; good residence and one large brick building 36 by 60 feet, and four stories in height, erected for a cotton factory. All the buildings and the dam are new, and the water is sufficient for 200 horse power, or even more.

Also another tract containing 353 acres, lying on Rutledge and Seed Cane Creeks, on which are fine bottoms, plenty of timber, and an abundance of good water.

Also several other tracts of fine farming and mineral lands, all of which are well watered and timbered, and on which are good buildings, and the lands are in high state of cultivation, a rare chance seldom offered to a small colony. This is the best body of lands to be found in the County, being situated near Mt Airy, the terminus of the proposed Mount Airy Narrow Gauge Railroad, and in one of the healthiest and most thriving sections of the State. Town lots from the Blue ridge, and is one of the most prosperous mill and towns in the State

I will also sell, at the above mentioned time, my Residence, Store House, Tobacco Factory, Foundry, and a number of town lots in Mount Airy.

The sale will commence at the Mill known as the Haystack, at 12 o'clock, M., on Monday, the 21st day of August, 1876, and continue from day to day until all is sold.

Persons coming from a distance to look at these valuable lands, will come via Greensboro to Salem, where they will find a 1ri weekly line of four-horse stages to Mt. Airy, distance 49 miles

Wait and Trust.

Think not the years are spent in vain,
In which you see no garnered grain,
No ripened fruits, no perfect flowers,
Though soft and freely fell the showers,
And you have watched through weary hours,
And toiled amid the heat and rain,
Ye cannot sow and reap in vain.

The reaping time is sure to come,
And soon in rich abundance fall
The crimson peach, the purple plum,
Glad bees build odorous flowers will hum,
And Nature's voice, now hushed and dumb,
In sweet, exultant measures call,—
For God, our God, is over all.

He, through the dark, unfruitful years,
With loving heart and sleepless eyes
Hath marked thy toilings and thy tears,
Hath the sweet voice that charms and cheers,
The peace that soothes thy doubts and fears;
The beams that light thy wintry skies
Shine from the hills of Paradise.

And every seed in faith thou'st sown,
He hides away with loving care,
And in his good time, yea, his own,
Upon thy longing gaze has shone
The harvest, beautiful and grown;
Rich sheaves for thy full arms to bear—
Then wait, and trust in hope and prayer.

Perhaps thou yet may'st toil and weep,
For many and many a year to come,
And then at last lie down to sleep
Where tangled vine and grasses creep,
And other hands thy treasures reap,
And shout with joy thy harvest home—
But God doeth right, whate'er may come.

Answers.

"Verily, I say unto you I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel," was said of the centurion who came beseeching Christ to heal his servant. —Sallie Atwater.

Sallie Atwater sends the following answer to the Enigma proposed by Florence Mercer: 1st is Eli; 2nd is Salmon; 3rd Timothy; 4th is Hadad; 5th is Eliphaz, 6th is Reuben. The whole is Esther, the beautiful queen. The answer to Enigma proposed by F. B. Jones is "Ezekiel."

ENIGMA BY OLLIE C. BYNUM.

My 1st is the well by which Isaac dwelt. My 2nd is he whose thumbs and great toes were cut off. My 3rd is the place where the angel of the Lord met Jacob. My 4th, the name of Joseph's second son. My 5th a mighty hunter before the Lord. My 6th the name of the orator who informed the governor against Paul. My 7th, he whom Paul almost persuaded to be a Christian. My 8th the land to which Jepthah fled from his brethren My 9th what Solomon's altar was built of. My 10th the sixth son of Jesse. My 11th the mount from which Moses viewed the promised land. My 12 the pool to which the blind man was sent to wash his eyes that he might see. My whole is one of the books of the New Testament.

ENIGMA BY MARTHA J. JONES.

My 1st begins the name of one of the sons of Aaron. 2nd, the father of Rehoboam, 3rd the mother of Obed; 4th the father of Ahaliab; 5th the father of Manasses; 6th the woman whose heart God opened. The whole is a great nation.

Rev. T. H. Edwards writes: Please add to the list of Bible readers 270 from Pleasant Grove Circuit.

I see that a number of you are reading the Bible. It is a good thing to learn, but it is better to obey Jesus Christ who said, "go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

Now let all the children unite in this proposition. We will make all the money this year that we can to carry out the command preach the gospel to every creature. Let all the Bible readers get a long list that will join them and give the numbers in the Advocate.

LESSON IV.—APRIL 23, 1876.

Subject: "THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CHURCH." Acts II. 37-47.

Commit to memory Verse 41.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Rom. x. 13.

CENTRAL TRUTH—Christ is the life of men.

READING LESSON—Acts II. 37-47.

HOME READINGS—Monday, Acts II. 37-47. Tuesday, John xvi. 1-15. Wednesday, Acts xvi. 19-34. Thursday, Matt. xvi. 1-18. Friday, Rom. x. 1-13. Saturday, Luke xv. 1-10. Sunday, Phil. II. 1-11.

ANALYSIS.—I. The people are convicted of sin under Peter's preaching, and inquire what they must do to be saved. II. Peter instructs them. III. Three thousand are received into the Church. IV. The Christian community dwells in harmony, and daily increases in numbers.

QUESTIONS.

1. What effect had Peter's preaching upon his hearers?—Verse 37.
2. What did they ask Peter and his brethren?
3. What two things did Peter say they must do?—Verse 38.
4. What did he say they should receive?
5. To whom did he say the promise was made?—Verse 40.
6. How did the people receive Peter's advice?—Verse 41.
7. How many received it gladly?
8. How should we receive the gospel?
9. What shows that the three thous and were real believers? —Verse 42.
10. What effect did this day of Pentecost have on the people?—Verse 43.
11. How did the early believers use their property?—Verse 45.
12. What shows that they did not forsake the old plan of worship?
13. Did the Church grow rapidly?

BIBLE-CLASS.

1. What is meant by "pricked to the heart?"
2. What led them to this state of mind?
3. What is it "to repent?"
4. What is it "to be baptized?"
5. In what name?
6. Why "in the name of Jesus Christ?"
7. What is the promise spoken of in verse 39?
8. Do you understand that the three thousand were taken into the Church?
9. What do you learn from verses 43, 44, 45?
10. Where did these Christians worship?
11. What does "breaking of bread" mean?

Lesson-hymn, 240.

THE tenderest Lungs may be rendered vigorous by the use of Baker's Cod Liver Oil and Phosphate of Lime. It relieves Cough, averts Consumption, cures Bronchitis, and gives stamina to the system and strength to the constitution; it is decidedly pleasant to take, and an entirely safe remedy. Druggists sell it. Jno. C. Baker & Co., Philadelphia.

Making Butter.

First, there must be the right feed—grasses, or white clover, or other good feed.

The cow must be right (some will make soft, white butter.)

There must be cleanliness throughout, from the milking to the eating of the butter, for milk, cream and butter are ever ready to absorb.

The temperature, for all that relates to butter-making, from the drawing of the milk from the cow till the butter is taken from the churn, should be about sixty degrees. Skim the milk, which must be kept in a pure atmosphere, and when it begins to get sour, churn immediately or soon after.

Churn rather slow, and take butter at once ont of the churn, and as soon as gathered, churning more slowly as it gathers, so as not to hurt the grain, and keep in the butter-bowl only as long as is necessary, else there will be a wooden taste imparted.

Avoid all rooms, in the setteng of your milk, that have smoke in them, or any odors; the milk is as sure to absorb as it comes in contract with them, and it will never give up an odor; neither will the cream or butter.

Salt to suit taste; or an ounce of salt to a pound of butter will do.

Work the butter slowly and carefully till the buttermilk is all out, then stop. It may be done with pure, cold water.

Butter made in this way is a new article comparatively; it is so much the more excellent than even the superior make that we get that it seems almost another thing.—Indiana Farmer.

STRAWBERRY CULTURE.—A very successful strawberry-raiser near Cincinnati gives the following as the essential requisites for the best success, and consequently the most economical mode of management:

1. Clean, rich soil; one that is entirely free from weeds and its seeds, which has been subjected to perfectly clean culture for a year previously, either with a hoed crop or summer fallow. Buckwheat is found to be a good crop to precede strawberries.

2. Planting in spring, not in summer or autumn, and after the severe frosts have past, as they sometimes at that place badly injure newly-set plants.

3. Selecting good plants, of the previous year's growth, that have not borne fruit, and keeping flower buds cut off so as not to bear the first year. The plants are fifteen inches apart, in rows three feet asunder.

4. Horse power for cultivating thoroughly, with small plow, cultivator, shovel plow, small round toothed harrow, hoe, etc.

5. Plant in clusters in the row (not matted rows,) with runners cut off.

6. Mulching with oat straw late in autumn, and raking it away into the spaces in spring, and not disturbing the soil till after the fruit is gathered. The first crop is always the largest and best, and hence only one crop is taken, which also obviates more laborious subsequent weeding. Wilson's is exclusively planted.

WEED OUT THE WEEDS.—Weeds are robbers. They steal the food ready to be used by the crops they infest, and kill them "when they take the means by which they live." Every weed is a pump taking water from the soil, which it pours out by the pores of its leaves. The earth gives more moisture, and the weeds suck it up; if it did not, they would be scorched to death by the sun, as they are when pulled from the soil and thrown on its surface. When they are beyond number they keep out the air and light, and the plants intended to be grown as a paying crop are weakly sickly, spindling, and too often a failure. But some are so well satisfied to have the earth bring forth thorns and thistles that they don't trouble themselves or the thistles.

Specialities in Medicine.

We publish on our eighth page a lengthy article describing the system of the noted specialist, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., in which he sets forth with considerable force and clearness his reasons for devoting his whole time and attention to a single department of medicine—the treatment of lingering chronic diseases. He says truly also that to the subjects of diagnosis, methods of consultation and treatment, etc., and will be found to contain many valuable hints to the invalid. Dr. Pierce is the author of a work which has already attained a large circulation—"The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser"—containing, some nine hundred numerous illustrated pages, and devoted to medicine in all its branches, a work well calculated for the guidance and instruction of the people at large, and which may be had for $1.50 post paid, by addressing the author. Dr. Pierce has now been before the general public long enough to enable the formation of a careful estimate of the efficiency of his treatment and his merits are, and his verdict, we are glad to know, has been universally favorable to both.—Ex.

A Model and Modest Creed.

I believe as I believe—no more, no less;
That I am right and honest one else, confess;
Feel as I feel; think only as I think;
Eat as I eat, and drink but what I drink;
Look as I look, do always as I do,
And then, and only then,
I'll fellowship with you.

That I am right and always right, I know,
Because my own convictions tell me so;
And to be right is simply this: To be Entirely and in all respects, like me,
In error not a hair's breadth, or begin
Communion, and to doubt,
Or hesitate, is sin.

I revere not the Bible, it will be
Translated first, and then explained—by me.
By currently laws and customs I abide,
If they with my opinions coincide
All creeds and ch—s I concede divine,
Excepting those of course,
Which disagree with mine.

Let sink the drowning, if he will not swim
Upon the plank that I throw out to him;
Let starve the hungry, if he will not eat
My kind and quantity of bread and meat;
Let freeze the naked, if he will not be Clothed in such garments
As are cut per me.

'Twere better that the sick should die than live
Unless they take the medicine I give;
'Twere better sooner a perish than refuse
To bow—of need to my peculiar views;
'Twere better that the world stand still, than move
In any other way
Than that which I approve.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. HUDSON.

NUMBER 4.

The three first regular Circuit Riders in North Carolina.

Who were they? They were Edward Dromgoole, Francis Poythress and Isham Tatum. How large was their circuit? All of North Carolina, but their labors were confined principally to the Roanoke region. The year is immortalized in American history by the memorable Declaration of Independence made on the 4th of July, 1776. At the time England was setting out with a fixed purpose to conquer these rebellious colonies, these three men mounted upon their horses, armed with the few yet effective weapons of the Bible, Hymn-book and Discipline, began the grander work of the spiritual subjugation of North Carolina. By the time they had gotten fully into their work, nature was putting on her beautiful robes of Spring, but the dark cloud of war was rolling up and spreading its raven wings over the land. The members of the Committee of Safety in Halifax were wide awake to watch the appearance and movements of these strangers. The roll of the drum sounded through the land, calling men to the muster ground to be drilled for the impending contest.—The battle of Concord had been fought, and the bold Declaration of Mecklenburg had thundered defiance to the British nation. The forces of England were gathering upon our shores. The pulse of the nation beat to the high fever of bloody war. War talk was heard along the roads, in the towns, around the doors of their preaching places. This state of things rendered the work of our pioneer preachers peculiarly trying and discouraging. Who can tell the peculiar feelings they had on their first round! How earnestly they prayed for and preached to men who sat in the shadow of death—the glory death of the battle field! How they taxed their brain and heart to impart soothing consolations to the bleeding hearts of mothers whose sons had gone to the field of deadly conflict, and wives whose husbands had shouldered the musket and shut the door of home between them and their families! These were times that tried the souls of men. But notwithstanding the war impediments to the free course of the gospel, their labors were crowned with good success. They reported an increase of 247 members on this field to the next Conference. But I must hasten on to give brief sketches of these primitive circuit riders in our State.

EDWARD DROMGOOLE

was an Irish emigrant. He settled in Bertie county near Bethoro—joined the Conference as early as 1774, and his labors as a pioneer Itinerant were exclusively mostly in Virginia and North Carolina, which continued down to the time he located about this time 1800, in Brunswick county, Va., where he continued to be a very useful preacher till his death in the 82d year of his age or eighty three. "He was," says Bishop Asbury, "a good preacher, respected and beloved. Two of his sons are local preachers. It is well known that one of them is an eminent lawyer and has been for a number of years a member of Congress, and had few equals in the gift of popular eloquence." One of his grand sons was the late Judge Dromgoole, of Randolph Macon College in its earlier days." The following description of Dromgoole found in Dr Bennett's Memorials of Methodism in Virginia, contributed by Rev. Benjamin Devon will be read with interest. Mr. Devon heard him preach at a camp-meeting in N. C.—He says: "Mr. Dromgoole possessed a high order of intellect; he was plain in his dress, gentle and unassuming in his deportment, of deep piety, and of great moral worth. He was for piety, zeal and usefulness, the embodiment of a primitive Methodist preacher. When he entered the stand to preach, he very deliberately put off his coat, and I think his neck cloth, which was nothing unusual with the old preachers of that day. He commenced by saying "That the attention of the people may not be drawn off by inquiring who the preacher is, I will tell you. You recollect about thirty years ago, there was a young man who traveled here by the name of Edward Dromgoole; I am the man." His text was: "God has spoken once; twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God." The power of God was the burden of his theme, and when, by the force of his Irish eloquence, he carried us in imagination to the place "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," it was awfully sublime, it was beyond description. His voice, his countenance, and his gestures, all gave a power to his eloquence which is rarely equalled even at this day The copious flow of tears, and the awful peals of his voice, showed that the preacher's whole soul was thrown into the subject, and it produced the most thrilling effect that I had ever witnessed. There was not a dry eye among the hundreds who listened to him on that occasion.

FRANCIS POYTHRESS

is the second man on the list of our pioneer heroes. He was a native of Virginia, and owned a large estate, and was wild and dissipated in his youthful habits. He professed religion under the ministry of the devoted Jarratt. In 1775 he began the work of an itinerant, and his second appointment, as the Minutes show, was to the Carolina circuit. In 1781 he traveled the New Hope circuit in our [illegible] Presiding Elder over a North Carolina District, which embraced Guilford, Halifax, New Hope and Caswell circuits. Here he broke up the fallow ground and sowed the seeds of the gospel, whose harvests the following generations reaped. One soweth and another reapeth. He bore the banner of the gospel across the Alleghany mountains, where he spent much of his life in laying the foundations of Methodism on which others have since built up its stupendous proportions. Reliable authority says: "Among the eight pioneers of Methodism in Kentucky and Tennessee in the year 1788, the name of Francis Poythress stands pre-eminent." He labored twelve years as an efficient Presiding Elder. For twenty six years his name stands without a blot, upon the records of the Conference. Bishop Asbury nominated him on one occasion for the Episcopacy. In his latter days his bright mind was partially eclipsed by the shadow of insanity, yet a relieving light broke over the last scene of his life. Judge Scott, his old friend, has paid the following beautiful tribute to his memory. "Poythress," he says, was grave in his deportment and chaste in his conversation, constant in his private devotions and faithful in the discharge of his ministerial duties. We have no recollection of his having ever disappointed a congregation, unless prevented by sickness or disease. As often as practicable he visited from house to house, instructed and prayed in the family. He was unwearied in his efforts to unite the traveling and local ministry as a band of brothers so that their united efforts might be exerted in furthering the cause of God.

As the weight of all the Churches in his district rested upon him, he sensibly felt the responsibility of his station, and put forth his utmost efforts to discharge, with fidelity, the important trusts which had been confided to him. The education of the rising generation he deemed to be intimately connected with the interest of the Church, and the result of that conviction was the erection of Bethel Academy. He was about five feet eight or nine inches in height, and heavily built. His muscles were large, and when in the prime of life, he was a man of more than ordinary muscular strength. He dressed plain and neat. When we first saw him, we suppose he had passed his sixtieth year. His muscles were quite flaccid, eyes sunken in his head, hair gray, turned back, hanging down on his shoulders; complexion dark, and countenance grave, inclining to melancholy. His step was, however, firm, and his general appearance such as to command respect. He possessed high, honorable feelings, and a deep sense of moral obligation. In general, he was [illegible] only in so far as it pays, or yields them an income.

Such sordid, secular, selfish views of teaching are greatly to be lamented.—Their tendency is to give to an avocation a mere mercenary character which, in dignity and importance, ought really to be esteemed as the hand-maid of the gospel, if indeed it is not its forerunner.

Children subjected to such training and example are really more injured than benefitted—as it will require months and even years of patient toil and effort on the part of faithful and competent teachers, to undo, correct and readjust what has been wrongfully done.

Again in this day and age there is almost an alarming relaxation of discipline—not only in our schools but also in our families—and the signs of the times indicate that parents and teachers, at least, should return to first principles—they should revive and reassert that authority and subordination which the Scriptures so emphatically enjoin.

Discipline (the word is full of meaning) must be brought to bear upon the mind, or we never can succeed in understanding the existence and relation of the commonest facts of every day life—much less comprehend the great truths of science or the still more abstruse and difficult problems of mathematics. It must be brought to bear upon the heart, or even the very child runs wild and becomes a source of untold sorrow and solicitude to its parents—corrupts its associates and grows up to manhood a monster of profligacy and infamy.

Discipline must be brought to bear upon the appetites and passions, or man soon degenerates into almost beastly degradation, the victim of licentiousness, gluttony and drunkenness.

To forestall and ward off these dreadful consequences, discipline must be instituted early, and firmly and perseveringly enforced until it becomes a habit of life and a rule of conscience.

Discipline! Let the word be written in letters of flame upon the inner and outer lintel of every door in our land, that parents and teachers may be thus constantly reminded of its importance, more especially to children

Discipline your child, and sanctified by grace,—you send forth into the world a benefactor—a blessing and an honor to his race Neglect it, and you send forth upon society a curse, whose life will corrupt by his presence and example, and whose death will prove too often a shipwreck of both body and soul.

But there is another point having a controlling influence upon the happiness of childhood that demands notice [illegible] of society [illegible] calamity and disaster upon our dear children be corrected and set right? The question is one demanding an answer.

I shall notice some other points in my next number.

WATCHMAN.

Cedar Grove, N. C., April 1876.

ISHAM TATUM

was a native of South Carolina. His appointment in 1776 on Carolina circuit was the only one he ever received within the bounds of our State. Dr. Bennett says, "He was for eight years a laborious pioneer in the new and hard field of Virginia. He "desisted from traveling" in 1781, and settled in the upper part of the State, probably in Madison county, where he lived to a great age At the time of his death, a few years ago, he was the oldest Methodist preacher in the United States, if not in the world He left a large number of descendants, most of whom are members of the Church [illegible] labored to establish."

CHILDHOOD.

NUMBER 1.

"Ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."—Timothy.

Every person who has looked into the practical workings of our educational system, more especially as it is seen in our common schools, (and from this source more than two thirds of the children of our State receive all the scholastic instruction they ever get) must have observed with regret that there is a sad deficiency in educational interest and success among our people. After all that has been done and projected there are yet hundreds of children untaught—while there are perhaps thousands whose education is so limited and defective that it has contributed little indeed to their intellectual elevation.

Great differences of opinion may exist in regard to the cause of these delinquencies. Beyond all controversy one among the most formidable obstacles in the way of success may be traced to the very large number of persons engaged in teaching—who are wholly incompetent—not more perhaps because their own education, as preparatory, has been limited and defective—than because they underestimate the importance of their position and work—do not feel the spirit of their station and are prompt [illegible] the duties and [illegible] the responsibilities [illegible] black.

Parents of children." Perhaps there is no part of the education of children (I use education in its enlarged sense) so little studied, so imperfectly understood and so generally disregarded as this—and the man who could awake more interest and concern and reform and set right the errors of society, at this point, ought to receive, as he would most justly deserve, the enduring gratitude of all children.

An effort to introduce a better system of physical education for children is certainly much needed; grave, and in hundreds of cases, fatal errors exist in reference to food, clothing, exercise, sleeping &c. [illegible] ought to right and corrected.—Prompted by a desire to do so, we propose, under this head, to notice a few of these

The custom of society in regard to the clothing of children must to be deplored, is that of substituting fashion for physiology in the quantity, quality and adjustment of their garments upon the body—physiology demanding apparel in keeping with the seasons, climacteric changes—and even daily recurring vicissitudes of weather—so regulated in kind and quantity and so adjusted upon the body as to give warmth and protection while no impediment is interposed to free muscular, respiratory and locomotive action.

Fashion, on the other hand, utterly disregards these physiological necessities, and in obedience to the whims and caprices of this changing, wide spread, self imposed law of society, with the consent, and prompted by the pride and ambition of its mother, dresses up the "little angel" in such way as to distort and impede its physical development and proportionably weaken and stultify its mental strength and capacity.

In thus way the mental strength and vigor, as well as the constitutional resistance and stamina, of hundreds and thousands of the dear precious children of our State are annually impaired and enervated and their lives jeopardized and destroyed.

To one who loves children, and has spent years of his life in their service, these conclusions seem almost startling, and yet he is not conscious of having overdrawn the picture.

The Christian Gentleman.

The grace of God is more important than the graces of polite society; but as the Christian is called to be courteous and patient, giving offense to none, in his perfected life, shine not only the graces of a Christian, but also the genuine courtesies of which the fashionable have only the counterfeits and imitations. So, too, the Christian gentleman is above a low thing. He cannot stoop to a mean fraud. He invades no secrets in the keeping of another. He betrays no secrets confided in his own keeping. He never struts in borrowed plumage. He takes selfish advantage of no man's mistake. He uses no ignoble weapons in controversy. He never stabs in the dark. He is ashamed of innendoes. He is not one thing to a man's face and an other behind his back. If by accident he comes into possession of his neighbor's counsels, he passes upon them an act of instant oblivion. Papers not meant for his eye, whether they flutter in at his open window, or lie open before him in an ungnarded exposure, are held sacred by him. He trespasses on no privacy of others, however sound the sentry sleeps. Bolts and bars, locks and keys, hedges and pickets, bonds and securities, not ices to trespassers, are none of them for him. He may be trusted, himself out of sight, near the thinnest partition, anywhere. He buys no office, he sells none; he intrigues for none. He would rather fail of his rights than win them through dishonor. He will eat honest bread. He tramples on no sensitive feeling. He insults no man. If he have rebuke for another, he is straightforward, open, and manly. He cannot descend to scurrility. From all profane and wanton words his lips are chastened. Of woman and to her he speaks with decency and respect. In short, whatever he judges honorable he practices towards every man.—Exchange.

People are always talking of perseverance, and courage, and fortitude; but patience is the finest and worthiest part of fortitude, and the rarest, too. I know twenty persevering girls for one patient one, but it is only that twenty first who can do her work out and out, or enjoy it; for patience lies at the root of all pleasures, as well as all powers. Hope herself dares to be happiness, when Patience accompanies

An Enforced Pause

God sometimes sends an "enforced pause." It comes in the shape of a trouble, a fever, an unforeseen journey, perhaps what we call an accident—and we are taken out of our ordinary lives and obliged to stop. From the confines of the sick room the world recedes. The cares that loomed so large to our sight yesterday, seem to have gone away indefinitely. The things that we thought nobody else could do, must be done by somebody, and it seems to us strange that we felt ourselves so important. Our vacation [illegible] not the one we wanted or planned for, or intended, but the best for us, because God has put it into our lives—and He makes no mistakes. There are fathers who would—strange as it may seem, and wrong as it is, never get acquainted with much but their children's faces, if they were not now and then kept at home for a few days by illness. There are mothers, who in their anxiety for their children's dress and deportment and culture, lose sight of the souls that they possess, till some sharp wind of sorrows blows the mists from their eyes, and they feel that "the life is more than meat, and the body than raiment." In hours of convalescence, the book is read that has been awaiting an interval of leisure; the song is listened to that the little daughter has learned at school; the buds on the rose-bush in the window are counted and exulted over; something kind and sweet is planned to be done for the neighbor over the way. Not in vain has the Lord sent this pause into the whirl and hurry and tumult in which the hours and days were passing.

Cross Wearing.

I am crucified with Christ—
With him nailed upon the tree;
Not the cross, then, do I bear,
But the cross it beareth me,
Solemn cross on which I died,
One with him, the crucified.

Shall I take that blood-stained cross,
Cross of agony and shame,
Cross of him who fought my fight,
Cross of him who overcame?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

Shall I drag thee through the crowd,
'Mid the laughter that is there;
Whirl thee through the giddy walls,
[illegible]
[illegible]

Shall I make that lowly cross
Minister of woman's pride,
Drawing eyes to me that should Fix upon the Crucified?
Awful cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I call this glittering gem,
Made for show and vanity—
Shall I call this gaud a cross,
Cross of him who died for me?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

Joy and Song.

The gospel is glad tidings of great joy. It was an outgush of song in a sad world—a burst of sunshine after ages of darkness. Paganism to-day is not jubilant, but gloomy and despondent. When in a Christian land, any class of people disregard Christ, their songs die out because their joy has withered. Spiritualism has no exultant songs because it has no gladness in Jesus. It may gather in the tented grove, under the inspiration of waving trees, singing birds, verdant fields, glittering stars and azure skies, but it confesses that it cannot counterfeit the Christian psalmody, which rolls down the ages, lifting the heart of the believer nearer to God. Mormonism, in her mountain-girded valley, sits songless. The habitations of Utah are gladdened by no melodious praise warbled from human lips. Travelers remark this death of song in a land smiling with plenty. The explanation is easy. There is no Holy Ghost in their religion. It sows to the flesh and not to the spirit. Free Religion assembles in conventions, and argues, denounces, and blasphemes; but when she tries to sing, her voice is like the gibbering of a ghost in a sepulcher.

Jesus Christ glorified in the soul by the Holy Ghost, is the fountain of true joy. The kingdom of God is "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." When the blessed Comforter fills the hearts of a people with his joy inspiring presence, they burst out into spontaneous singing. But where formalism, worldiness, and unbelief have crowded the Comforter out of their hearts, they pay thousands of dollars to a quartette to perform the service which their backslidden souls refuse to render. Hence joy is a very good test, not only of orthodox opinions, but of the strength of our faith in Christian truth, and our personal devotion to Christ.—From "Love Enthroned."

There was a very little boy wading up to his knees, almost, in the slush on Summit street, Friday afternoon, when a passing gentlemen said to him: "Why ain't you to school, young man?" "Cos I've got the hoopin' cough:" he explained.—Dunbury News.

Encourage Your Minister

Under the delusion that a cheering word may spoil the pastor, there are many parishioners who, however well they may be profited, never utter any encouragement. The fact is that there are so many disheartenments in a clergyman's life that he can stand expressions of approbation better than almost any one else. There are so many heavy weights put in on the wrong side of the scales, that it needs a good many pounds of approval to make the even balance. When, therefore, your pastor preaches a sermon that comforts your sorrow, or makes new revelation of your duty, or kindles a more blissful anticipation of realms ahead, rush out and stop his gig and tell him so. Soft, meaningless adulations sicken a minister, but positive statement of good done is to a preacher, and pastor, inspiration. Here and there a minister may be so well pleased with his own sermons, that his self conceit and vanity applaud him so loudly that any other praise would be supererogation. But the most of clergymen whom we have known, feel, after preaching, a depression of soul They think they have come short of the theme or the occasion. This is a nervous reaction, during which a pastor needs condolence. Speaking out of our own experience, from nine-tenths of our public services we feel a desire to walk up some unfrequented street, so that we may see no one in what we feel to be the hour of our disgrace We have gone home from services where we did our very best, to groan over our failure to do the work that was demanded of us. Generally the saddest moments of our life are between ten and twelve o'clock of Sabbath night after the day's engagements are over. Once in about six weeks we feel delighted with our own sermon, in which case we always find afterward that the service was nearly fruitless, souls neither saved nor comforted; and we then suspect that the commendation did not come from heaven, but arose from the opposite direction. If the veil were lifted from the experience of the majority of pastors, you would find that at times they suffer disheartenments from which a cordial grasp of a parishioner's hand might do much [illegible] word may seem to make no [illegible] son upon him at the time; but ask the minister's wife whether it made any impression. The pastor who stands two hundred times before his congregation in a year, presenting the great themes of repentance and godliness, and doing this amid rushing tides of iniquity all about him, the forces of darkness at times seeming to triumph needs all you can do and say in the way of approbative expression. The soldiers who go into battle do not forget the three cheers which rang in their ears, months before, when leaving the depot of their native village. Where there is one minister ruined by too much praise, there are a hundred ministers crippled and swamped by too little appreciation.

THE PHYSICAL BENEFITS OF SUNDAY.—Sunday is God's special present to the working man, and one of His chief objects is to prolong his life, and preserve efficient his working tone. In the vital system it works like a compensation pond; it replenishes the spirit, the elasticity and vigor, which the last six days have drained away, and supplies the force which is to fill the six days succeeding, and in the economy of existence it answers the same purpose as in the economy of income is answered by a savings bank. The frugal man who puts away a pound to day, and another pound next month, and who in a quiet way is putting by his stated pound from time to time, when he grows old and frail gets not only the same pound back again, but a good many pounds besides. And the conscientious man, who husbands one day of his existence every week, who, instead of allowing Sunday to be trampled and torn in the hurry and scramble of life, treasures it up, the Lord of Sunday keeps it for him, and in length of days the hale of age gives it back with usury. The savings bank of human existence is the weekly Sunday.

TREES AND PLANTS.—The setting of a tree or plant of any kind involves a promise to take care of it. Unless these conditions are accepted, plant no more trees. Young trees need constant supervision from the beginning. Horses or cattle often do much damage in young plantations, and must be kept out. Hogs are the only animals ever to be allowed in the orchard. Many insects can be successfully headed off through the Winter months. The eggs of the tent caterpiller (Clisiocampa Americana) are readily seen while the trees are leafless If a swelling is seen near the end of a twig it should be looked to, for it very likely consists of a de[illegible] around it.

Children's Singing.

On one occasion, says a Scotch evangelist, two little ones, about six and seven years of age, were taught the hymn, "I feel like singing," and the singing of it at home so aroused the ire of the father that he forbade them, but the mother having been awakened to concern, he felt himself so isolated in feeling that he said he would leave the house unless hymns and religion were banished. His wife just replied, 'Christ has come into this home, and he is far stronger than Satan." After a few nights he determined to go to the meeting, and see what was going on. There the Spirit of God laid hold of him. That very night he strayed to the second meeting, went home to bed, but not to rest. About one in the morning light dawned upon his troubled soul, so that he called out, "Mary, Mary, I feel like singing." In short, the result is that that family are now a united and happy family, going on their way rejoicing. After this we determined to have children's meeting wherever we go: and every where we have found the same blessed effects follow.

Prejudice.

Dr. Holland, of Scribner's Magazine, was asked recently to prescribe a cure for gossip, and he replied in one word—culture. If we were asked to name a cure for prejudice, we would at once adopt the reply of Dr. Holland, and say, culture. Ignorance is the mother of prejudice. It is uncultivated minds that harbor and secrete prejudice. The cultivated, the truly educated, the refined have hearts too broad, and souls too open to contain all those little and debasing feelings which prejudice begets. A prejudiced community may always be marked down, an ignorant community. The bigotted in politics, religion or in moral practice are always lacking in culture. If we would free any community from prejudice, we must educate the people; we must elevate the standard of intelligence. Make the people wise and we drive out their ignorance and consequently their prejudice.

We wish we knew of but one prain- [illegible] then would [illegible] elevate that community. But [illegible] what ignorance prevails, what bigotry is manifest, what prejudice is nursed! Away with prejudice, party bigotry and ignorance the mother of both.—Christian Sun.

Making Coffee.

The making of good coffee is a very rare thing in this country. Most persons boil it, making a decoction instead of an infusion; this effectually gets rid of the delicate aromatic flavor, and leaves a comparatively tasteless beverage. The following particulars will be found worth attention: Never buy your coffee ground, but grind it yourself immediately before using it; keep your coffee pot, whatever kind you may use, wiped clean and dry inside. A damp tea or coffee pot acquires a nasty flavor, that spoils the best tea or coffee. The cheapest, and perhaps the best coffee-pots are those made on the French plan, called cafetieres; if you have not one of these, adopt the following plan; put your freshly ground coffee into the coffee pot, previously made warm, and pour upon it water actually boiling; set the pot by the fire for a few seconds, but do not let it boil up; then pour a cupful out and return it back again to the pot, in order to clear it; having done this, let it stand on the hob or fender to settle, and, in less than five minutes, a transparent, strong cup of coffee may be poured out. The proportion of coffee (which should not be too finely ground) recommended, is an ounce to a pint, or a pint and a half of water.

Timely Hints.

What has been effect of the mild weather on the fall-sown crops we cannot as yet say. The effect upon live stock is the principal thing to be dreaded. A warm and damp winter makes an unwholesome barnyard, and trouble may be looked for so soon as the warm spring suns have had their effect. The least sign of discomfort among the stock should receive immediate attention. A dose of simple medicine, a little sulphur, or even a little nursing, with some warm slops or extra food, will generally ward off a serious attack or the loss of a valuable animal. No farmer can succeed at the present day unless he be a book farmer, and the first book he will need at this time will be a memorandum book in which he may jot down whatever occurs to him as needing to be done. If he attends to this book farming properly, he will find that a good many entries will have to be [illegible] and everything set down should be taken up in order. The secret of those who are known as great workers is that they work methodically and do everything at the proper time, and there is no business in which so much will fail, unless it be done at the proper time, as that of farming. One day's delay may not be recovered during the whole season.—American Agriculturist.

In the Rondout Methodist Church, on a recent Sunday morning, the usual dousing of overcoats was proceeding amid considerable confusion, but had not been completed when the pastor arose to pronounce the benediction. He paused a moment, and said, "Brethren, I guess I will put on my overcoat hereafter during the benediction, so as not to lose any time."

We have all heard of the enthusiastic Methodist brother who shouted "Amen, or bless," after having been warned not to interject his responses in the wrong place; but now comes the story of exhortation in which the speaker, on saying, "This is, perhaps, the last time my voice will ever be heard in this house," was followed by a vigorous, though thoughtless, Amen.

Preparing to Preach.

It is not an easy task to define a rule by which all ministers should be guided. There is in the ministry as great a diversity of talent as can be found in any other avocation, and each must follow the leadings of his own mind, to a very great degree, as to the manner of preparing his sermons. As to doctrine there should be oneness: but the thoughts presented, delivered, and the language and metaphors employed in the presentation of those thoughts cannot be prescribed by any one—not even by the best writers on homiletics of the past or present. No one can lay down a rule alike for all in the preparation and delivery of sermons. The most they can do is to suggest the best methods, viewing the whole question from their own stand point, based upon a personal knowledge and experience, bearing upon the whole subject. All this may be suggestive, and aid in pulpit preparation, but will not serve as an infallible guide. Very much has been written upon the relative advantages of written sermons, and extemporaneous preaching. Many have contended that every minister should thoroughly study and write his sermons with great care, and even take them with him in the pulpit.—Others have strongly objected to this and earnestly insisted that success in the ministry is largely dependent upon extempore preaching, while others, still, have maintained that the highest degree of pulpit success can only be attained to by careful study of the plan and the subject without writing and without notes in the pulpit. This is perhaps the most popular and most generally accepted opinion in our church, and the one to which we are most inclined and cheerfully commend. But still we believe that there are many in our ministerial ranks who have high mental endowments, nature and graces, who could not, in the course of the most vigorous and systematic training, succeed as well in the ministry by the exclusive adoption of this method. It is, however, worth the trial, and every one may consider himself fortunate who can succeed on this line.

Mr. Summerfield remarked to a friend on one occasion in alluding to the subject of preaching: 'I study my plan thoroughly beforehand, and then leave the selection of my language until I get into the pulpit, for the best word always comes to me in the heat of the moment.' These words are worthy a place in the memory of every true evangelical minister of Christ. Dr. James Alexander once remarked to a fellow laborer in the ministry in these earnest words: 'After twenty years of experience, I declare to you candidly that if I could live my life over again, I never would take another manuscript with me into my pulpit! I would take them in my head and heart and not on paper. We are sacrificing preaching to essay-reading. Yet I would have thorough preparation, (with a good concordance, which is worth more to me than my library) and then I go for a free delivery with great enthusiasm.' My young friend, said he, 'aim at a high degree of passion in preaching the doctrines.—Argument made red-hot by passion and holy fire is what pleases people and holds them. Argument admits of great vehemence and fire. But no man can be a great preacher without great feeling. Aim at a high and holy enthusiasm. The old Greek tragedies used to stir people up, and keep open the founts of rage and tears. Many ministers are enthusiastic about other things, such as art, poetry, history, authorship, &c.—Their week day conversation is full of entertainment, but their Sabbath sermon is like a sponge from which all the moisture has been squeezed out. Live for your sermon—live in your sermon.

If you would preach well, pray.—Even esthetically considered, one hour of prayer is a better preparation than a day of study. Keep your mind in a glow. Our young preachers are too much in the habit of 'frying all the unction out of a sermon over a lamp.' Read as much as you can, but prepare your sermons with as total forgetfulness of the language of books as possible. The Bible is, after all, the one book of the preacher. We may be exhausted, but the Bible never!—Make the Bible your prayer book; cut off all superfluous studies, and come back to the word of God. The best discourses are apt to be those prepared when we have nothing by us but our Bible and concordance. Upon this whole question of preaching, however, we are satisfied that there can be no universal rule of application. Some ministers can succeed better with written sermons—some by extemporaneous efforts, and others by a carefully arranged plan well studied, without notes. Each must follow his peculiar bent of his own mind in this particular. In one thing we cannot too strongly insist—in all preaching seek the spirit of the Master as the great element of ministerial success.

Death of Edwin W Fuller, Esq

It is with sadness and a deep sense of loss to society and the Church, that we announce the death of Edwin W. Fuller, Esq., of Louisburg, N. C. He died on Saturday last, a victim to the fell destroyer consumption, which for some months had given rise to apprehensions, in the minds of his friends, of his early death. We do not think that North Carolina contains a better or more polished writer than our departed friend and brother: we know that it contains no one of better impulses, purer nature, purer life and purer, gentler manners. Though quite a reputation as a poet and novelist. His 'Angel in the Cloud,' written first at the University of Virginia and occupying only a page or two of the University Magazine, but afterwards developed and amplified into a respectable sized book, is a gem of literary beauty and is read with delight by all who appreciate the creations of a rich and most excellent fancy, and richness of word painting and description. "Sea-Gift," a most readable book, shows by its plot, characters and development that he was at home in the field of romance as well as in the garden of poesy.

But aside from his merits as an author, he was a man of high integrity, pure life and pleasant temperament. He was an earnest Christian and was devotedly attached to the Methodist Church. He was a steward in the Church, and his wise counsels and earnest and energetic interest in everything pertaining to the Church, will be greatly missed by his pastor and brethren.

His business qualifications were of a high order, and in mercantile pursuits he was enterprising and successful. He had been Mayor of the town of Louisburg, and was highly esteemed by the citizens for his public spirit and faithful and intelligent discharge of duty.

We have just heard of his death and write this notice hastily, before learning the particulars of his death. We hope to receive and publish a more extended account of his life and character from his devoted pastor. In the meanwhile we extend to his bereaved wife, relatives and church our sincere sympathy in their great loss.

Rev. W. C. Norman of Person St. Church [illegible] occupied the pulpits last Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. Burkhead of Edenton Street Church of this city, preached an able missionary sermon last Sabbath, at the close of which he took up a missionary collection amounting to about one hundred and fifty dollars.

The commencement of Davenport Female College will take place on the 8th of June. Bishop McTyeire will preach the commencement sermon and the Junior of this paper will deliver the literary address.

We are pleased to learn through a friend that the Fifth Street Methodist Church at Wilmington, N. C., of which Rev. J. M. Rhodes is Pastor, is enjoying a glorious revival. To God's name be all the glory for the gracious work now going on in various places in the bounds of our Conference, of which we hope to hear good reports at our next annual session.

Death of Trusten Polk

Ex Gov. Trusten Polk, of Missouri, died suddenly at his residence in St Louis, on Sunday morning, April 16. The following sketch of the chief facts of his public and private life is taken from one of our exchanges:

Trusten Polk was a native of Sussex County, Del., born May 29, 1811, a graduate of Yale College of the class of 1831, and also of the Yale Law School. He removed to Missouri 1835, where he entered on the practice of law; in 1845 he was chosen a member of the convention to remodel the State Constitution; in 1848 was a presidential elector, and in 1856 was elected Governor of Missouri. He resigned the Governorship soon after his inauguration, in 1857, to take a seat in the United States Senate for six years from March 4, 1857, serving on the Committee on Foreign Relations and on Claims. He did not complete his term, however as he was expelled Jan. 10, 1862, for disloyalty.

In his private life and character he was exceptionally pure and blameless. He was a devout and active Methodist of the Southern Church, was a delegate to the last General Conference of that body, and was conspicuous on the friendly side in the reception and treatment of our fraternal delegates. If our recollections serve us correctly, he was among the commissioners appointed to attend our General Conference at its approaching session.—N. Y. Advocate.

Education as Capital.

Chas. Fo. Eaton, writing in the Atlantic Monthly about boys and the record of their achievements, says:

The Wesleyan University almanac records the graduation from its foundation of one hundred and [illegible] to 1875, of whom more than [illegible] were living at the time of publication, and of them only fourteen were classified "superannuated, or for other reasons out of employment."

I have been connected with three universities sixteen years of my life, and have seen about eight hundred young men graduate from college, and do not know now of five out of the whole number, alive and well, who are not making a comfortable living. Of them I do not know of one who "feeds on unbuttered crusts," or who is in a condition fairly described by that figure of speech. Nearly all the penny-a-liners whom I have seen, doomed to earn a scanty subsistence by the lowest kind of literary work—if long per sisted in—were not college graduates, but simply picked up just about enough practical ability with the pen to do that and nothing more.

I have known many college graduates to begin with such work, but never one, unless he was intemperate, long to remain in it. I have known a large number to enter into business of various kinds, some starting at the bottom—mechanical, mercantile, agricultural—but never one who did not find his education profitable to him, in the lowest practical money-getting sense of the word.

I am aware that there are some rich men's sons in our large cities sent to college rather than choosing a course of thorough study, who dally about home after graduation, and fail to accomplish much for a long time, but always, I believe, simply from the want of sufficient motive power to go to work; and, I am constrained to believe, usually doing much better than those same men could have been induced to do without an education.

The fact is, education is capital, and the best kind of capital in this country. To test the question, depend on no man's opinion, not even on mine, but consult the records of the alumni of any one of our colleges and abide by the actual facts.

Rev. Dr. Closs.

MESSRS EDITORS: I write this at the request of Dr. Closs. I called to see him this morning and found him very sick. He is suffering with pneumonia—contracted, he says, from riding a quarterly meeting two weeks ago, in an open church. His attendant physician regards his case very critical. So critical does he [illegible] regard it, that he [illegible]

A severe chill was just passing off, when he remarked to me: "Bro. Jurney, what folly there is in a man having his life by preaching in an old barn-of-a-church, in cold windy weather. "Mention this for me," said he, "perhaps it will do some good." What a discount on our religion!—That our houses of worship in many places are not fit to winter a faithful horse—much less for a man 70 years old—to preach the gospel to dying men in!

Scores of men are shortening their lives by preaching in such churches. The day is past when men are required to die at the stake in defense of our holy religion. Does God require a man to stand in a pulpit, or in a place where it should be, and preach in a draft of wind almost strong enough to blow his hat off, to an indifferent, cold, lifeless, inactive, careless congregation? Such trials will break down a constitution as strong as a four horse wagon. Some of my churches are in this condition, but I have preached any way:—sticking hat and over coat in the shattered windows—and the result is I have not been clear of cold since here I've been. But if we die in these cold vineyards, we can only lift the flag above the dark waves with this inscription upon it: "Tell my brethren I died at my post." These are his closing words to me:

"My daughter, Mrs Boshamer, cannot reach me before Tuesday. I have the best of Methodist attendance I am carefully nursed. My entire district are so untiring in their kindness and affection for me, that I desire to live that I may serve them longer with the hope of doing them good."

May the Lord spare him.

Respectfully,
N. M. JURNEY.

The Congregationalist learns that one hundred and ten Protestant missionaries in China have approved the plan of a conference, to meet at Shanghai, May 10. The characteristic ideas, manners, and institutions of the Chinese, the teachings of Confucius and other leaders in the national life and faith, will come under consideration, as well as the methods by which the missionaries are influencing the people—such methods as the better translation of the Bible, education, Church membership, etc.

On the 24th of March, Dr. Lovick Pierce completed his ninety first year. A pleasant circle of relatives and friends assembled at his home to congratulate him on that occasion.

WELL SAID.—The Augusta (Ga.,) Chronicle of a recent date contained the following.

"Times are very hard in Georgia." "Money is exceedingly tight." "Everybody is feeling the evil effect of the Booth played in the State" [illegible] nights and received twenty six thousand dollars and a diamond ring. Too poor to give to Churches, too poor to give to the poor, too poor to do anything but grumble and pay thousands to Edwin Booth! Poor Georgia!

Reader, have you not seen or heard of the like of that elsewhere as well as in Georgia? Do not the people somehow or other find money to pay their way to theatres, concerts and the like? Listen to their complainings and you might suppose they were near the point of starvation, but see them abroad and note how they are bedressed and bedecked, and beringed, and bejeweled, and becurled, and beruffled, and befrizzled, and you might suppose the gold of Ophir, the silver of Peru, and the gems of Golconda, with the "Emma Mine" thrown in, were all at their command! Ask for missionary money, or money to sustain schools or build churches or feed the starving, and then they are so poor, so miserably poor, that they are almost distressed to death because they have nothing to give, and the very best they can do is to get up a ball, or a concert, or some poor imitation of theatrical performances, or a fair, or a supper, or something else when they can give fifty cents or a dollar, provided there is a good prospect of obtaining a large recompense in the way of fun and frivolous amusement. Alas! many, very many are poor indeed!—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"REV."—A decision has at length been had in the highest tribunal having cognizance of the matter, upon a case where a Methodist minister attached this prefix to his name on the tombstone of his daughter. The rector of the parish decided that the stone could not go into the graveyard. On appeal to the Bishop of Lincoln he was sustained. But now the English Privy Council has reversed the successive decisions of the Bishop, the chancellor of the diocese and the Arches Court. Common sense characterizes the decision, which declares that "reverend," prefixed to a clergyman's name, is and always has been a mark of courtesy simply, and never an official title, and that under the law of England every man may take it who can get it. The decision has thrown some of the Establishment clergy into what our grandmothers used to call "conniption fits," and they all want to be called rector this and vicar that, "never no more' to be called "reverend." The Bishop of Lincoln had not yet been heard from.—Standard.

A WORD FOR RELIGIOUS NEWS-PAPERS.—The Southern Churchman says: "We do not hear a great deal of our new Illinois Bishop. We take for granted therefore, he is doing the work God has given him without much ado, or finding fault with his brethren and trying to make them 'offenders for a work.' But we see one sentence of his going the rounds worth quoting: 'It is a recognized fact that no agency not strictly ecclesiastical is better adapted to excite and augment the interests of the people in the work of the church than a paper, spreading before the parishes a monthly photograph, as it were, of the progress of the church, and of the wide field that remains to be occupied.' We think this a sensible remark, and we hope our readers will agree with it. Our Baptist cotemporary in Richmond publishes a letter, in which we read: 'Please find inclosed forty-one names, representing a church membership of one hundred and forty four.' While the circulation of this paper is larger than ever before, we think the clergy would be of service to their parishioners if they got this paper into every family of their charge. Suppose they begin at once, and let us hear from them."

The late Alexander T. Stewart is reported to have responded to congratulations touching the pleasure arising from his ample ability to gratify his tastes in furnishing his new house, by exclaiming, "O Mrs. F, it is a great piece of folly, a great piece of folly!"

During his recent visit to Florida Mr. William Astor gave $5,000 to finish the Protestant Episcopal Church at Jacksonville. He had already given $500 for the same purpose.

There are 223 Protestant Sunday schools in Baltimore, with 4,783 officers and teachers, and 44,619 scholars. There are also 14,000 children in the Roman Catholic schools. Ten Protestant schools were organized during the year. In the whole State of Maryland 160,300 children attend Sunday schools, and 86,100 do not.

Self-support advances in the churches in India. Besides the 20 or more American ministers who are supported by the Europeans and East Indies, among whom they chiefly labor, there are in Rohilcund 6 native preachers wholly supported by the native Christains, to whom they minister, and others partially supported.

The Methodists have in North India 141 Sunday schools, with 384 officers and teachers, and 7,149 scholars. The figures show a gain of more than 1,700 scholars over last year, and and more than 50 per cent. in two years. There are also in South India 1,175 scholars, making in all 8,324 scholars. Many conversions of heathen boys have taken place during the year.

An important proclamation has been issued by the Foreign Office at Foochow, China, explanatory of the rights of Christians as established by the treaties with foreign powers. It declares: 1. That contributions levied on Christains for processions, temples, theatrical exhibitions, etc, are illegal. Christians who refuse to pay such contributions are not to be molested. 2. The right of foreigners to leased houses and chapels in the cities and villages is not to be questioned. 3. Christians are to be treated with propriety. 4. The term "barbarian" cannot lawfully be applied to foreigners. 5. It is perfectly legal for foreigners to live inland in the departments, districts, cities and villages, and they must not be annoyed.

Miles Mitchener, near Smithfield says the Johnston COURIER, imagines that the whole race of Adam have conspired to poison him. He keeps a look on his well, and would not give a drop of water to a perishing human soul, neither will he let a spark of fire be carried out of the house. If any one puts a bush on his fence, he burns the panel, and fires a gun to counteract the supposed evil effects.

The Louisville COURIER-JOURNAL speaks thus handsomely of the Old Fayette Independents and of the North Carolina soldiers, generally, that were in the "late unpleasantness:"

"North Carolina will be represented at Philadelphia, in the Centennial Legion, by the oldest corps, the Fayetteville company, it having been in continuous existence since 1793. "Tarheels to the front" is correct. That is just the way it was with them in the late difficulty."

The Raleigh ERA says:

We learn that a colored woman of Chatham has just been jailed at Pittsboro for beating her little child to death against a stove. The child kept crying around her knees and fretted her so that at last, springing up, she seized the child by the heels and broke its skull against a corner of the stove. She then took it and hid its lifeless body under an old out-house. She was seen in the act by a little boy afar off and he ran and spread the news. The woman was at once arrested and the dead child recovered, and mats of blood and hair were discovered sticking to the stove. This is another reminder that this is the Centennial year of American independence and civilization (?)

WHERE There is a Weakness of the Throat or Lungs, a neglected Cold may be all that is required to establish a lingering and general fatal disease. Even where there is no special tendency to Bronchial or Pulmonary trouble, a severe Cold, left to take care of itself, often plants the seeds of a serious complaint, sure to be developed by slight subsequent indiscretions. Take especial care of your health, therefore, from the very earliest symptoms of a Cough or Cold, by prudently resorting to Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, which will soothe and strengthen the bronchial tubes, allay inflammation, and cleanse them and the lungs of all irritating substances. In Fulton, April 2nd, of congestive chill Miss Mollie D. Brugger, aged twenty-seven years. The deceased was a native of Rutherford Co., N. C. and a graduate of Concord Female College in 1867. At the instance of a College mate she came among us near three years ago, as a teacher; in which capacity she proved to be efficient and valuable. Her genial, lady like department, pious and Christian life won upon all good people who made her acquaintance. The patrons and scholars were especially devoted to her. Though she was taken away from the family circle, there were those to stand around her dying bed who wept freely, and many came around her after to shed tears of regret. At the age of seventeen she joined the Missionary Baptist church of which she lived an exemplary member in her death. Her hopes and prospects in life were brightening, when she was suddenly and almost without warning, either to her or her friends, snatched from them. Like the dew-spirit bloometh neath the dews of the morning, but ere the sun hath reached its zenith, he hath withered and fallen. he go also ready.

ADELIA J. SHARPE.

Died on Saturday morning the 8th day of April 1876, at the residence of his son-in-law, W. S. Grandy Esq. in the town of Oxford, N. C., Dr. Enoch D. Ferebee, aged 78 years and seven months.

Dr. Ferebee was a native of Currituck county, and had a large family connection in Eastern Carolina. His father, Samuel Ferebee represented Currituck county in the State in the years 1803—4—5 and 6, and is mentioned by Wheeler in his history as the last survivor of the members of the Convention which assembled in Fayetteville in November 1789, which body accepted and ratified the constitution of the United States for our State. He had a large family of children, ten of whom five sons and five daughters, lived to become heads of families, and we recall personally to show their father's remains to the grave in October 1845. He had lived to the ripe old age of nearly seventy years a faithful and earnest member of the Baptist Church, living a life of much usefulness and died greatly respected and beloved in the 84th year of his age.

Dr. Enoch D. Ferebee was born September 8th 1797. He received such education as the times afforded and at the age of 18 began the study of medicine with Dr. David Jones who is his early manhood had come from Cumberland county, Nova Scotia. In this he succeeded to the practice of his profession. Two years were given to the study of his profession two by the usual course of lectures in Philadelphia and about two years later, on January 2d 1824, he was married to Mary Cains Jones the daughter of Dr. Jones his instructor and firm friend. Previous to his marriage Mary had been converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Firm and decided in her views of christian duty, her husband especially a Presbyterian, [illegible] influence. He determined to be a Christian, and joined the church saying he had not obtained the peace he sought but that he was none the less resolved upon the service of God. He at once established a family altar and about six months after was converted. Their marriage [illegible] was especially happy. They loved the Lord and loved to work for Him. In the 18th of October 1836, his beloved wife was taken away leaving him with five little children the youngest an infant of two weeks. The spring following he gave up his profession and travelled through some of the Western States and resuming decided to take his family to Ohio. His father however objecting to his breaking the home circle, he reluctantly gave up the idea of removing.

On the 24th of December 1837, he was again married to Mrs. Courtney Mepherson of Camden county. She was a woman of rare virtues social and christian, governed her household well, received the love of servants and children and the admiration and respect of all who knew her.

In the year 1856, while in full health and vigor, Dr. Ferebee resolved to contract his extensive business operations and to give himself up more fully to a spiritual life. In furtherance of this purpose he discontinued his large farming interests on the Dismal Swamp Canal and moved to a quiet neighborhood in Princess Ann county, Va. Here in the 19th of August 1857, he again lost the companion who so blessed his life. Of this union there was one son James W. Ferebee who died in Petersburg in the second year of the war. In January 1860 he married Mrs. Chester Bell of Oxford N. C., a child in worman who loved him well, nursed him faithfully and mourns him as a true wife.

Three years ago he began to make Summer visits to his own and his wife's relations in Oxford, and in the fall of last year returned for the last time to his home down the country, secured his household goods by gift and sale, well satisfied to give himself and wife up to the kindly care of their children and grand children. Two brothers survive him, Col. Dennis D. Ferebee of Camden, a gentleman well known to fame, and the Rev. Samuel Ferebee, of Currituck, now about 82 years of age, the last fifty years of whose life have been usefully spent in the ranks of the local ministry of the church.

Dr. Ferebee was a man of large benevolence and of extraordinary piety.

Twice during his life he offered freedom to all his slaves, in the first instance promising to help them obtain passage to Liberia, through means of the Emigration Society.

Religion with him was an active principle, a well of living water springing up into everlasting life, an unfailing source of the highest spiritual happiness. Whilst he held to the tenets of his own church, with an intelligent devotion, he was absolutely free from religious bigotry. He was drawn into close sympathy, with all who loved the Lord Jesus. His feeling was naturally deep and tender and was warmed and animated by the broadest christian charity.

He was ever seeking opportunities for doing good to others and for elevating his own and benevolent. His spirits were uniformly cheerful and never failed to carry sunshine into every circle. He was a minister of consolation to the afflicted, of encouragement to the weak and of admonition to the careless, and was a shining example to all who aspired to higher attainments in the christian life. In the Sabbath school, in the Prayer Meeting, at Divine Service, he never failed to be present when opportunity afforded, and always brought with him on such occasions the unction and power that gave assurance of the presence of the Holy Spirit.

When the Centennial Methodist Church in the city of Raleigh, he could not be restrained from attending so delightful an event in the history of his Church. He was at the house of his grand daughter during the Centennial week, and it was [illegible] that affectionate tenderness [illegible] to his comfort or add to the pleasure of his visit was done. He enjoyed the services greatly, and like good old Simeon was ready to depart in peace. He preached his last public religious service on earth. The occasion proved to be the beginning of his spirit's journey into the courts of the New Jerusalem. On his return to the home of his son-in-law in Oxford, he took his bed, from which he was never to rise.

In a few days he calmly and peacefully passed away from earth to the bosom of his God.

We cannot but mourn his departure, full of gentleness, kindness and love. But we would not dim the memory of his example in us with unavailing tears. It is a rich legacy to his children and friends.

May the grace and the consolations which he enjoyed in his life and death be the portion of our end be like his.

A Scene in a Church.

There was a fine-looking soldier descending from the sublime to the ridiculous in a country church not a thousand miles off, when a certain preacher on the interior rose in his wrath, and with energy exclaimed, "I thank God I can not tell one my sins, as I have no need to tell and what will he? He can forgive sins at a word or he dies from a drowsy mood and spirit going to sin here and cried out, "Great Liver Pads" and was right in the estimation of a well-read medicine. Easy will certainly cure your "miseries" if they is nervous Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver Bowels Headache, Loss of Appetite, Nervousness Despondency or General Debility. Take the physician's advice and try them.

Webster's Unabridged.

"THE BEST PRACTICAL ENGLISH DICTIONARY EXTANT." London Quarterly Review, October, 1873.

FROM REV. W. H. MURRAY, Boston, Jan. 12, 1876.—"Since Webster's Unabridged has reached my people during the last three months, little—both the out-growth of Bible meditation alone—I have not made a library purchase in constructing one of them. The two volumes which I have by my side or on my knees when dictating, both, are the New Testament and Webster's Dictionary. The former could be worth more to any clergyman's people than all the books on theology in the world. And the latter contains not only the germs, but the expressed wealth, of all English literature. From the one, I get my facts and my inspiration; from the other, I am taught exactness in definition and precision of statement. Never until I shut myself off from all other books and confine myself exclusively to these two, did I know how perfectly equipped for the mind is that has on either side of it these two magnet powers."

Friday, Isa. xxxv. 1-10.
Saturday, Mark xvi. 12-20.
Sunday, Ps. cvii. 31-43.

ANALYSIS.—I. The Lame Man s Condition.—He was born with the infirmity, and had never walked. II. He is Healed.—He asked an alms, but received a much greater blessing. III. The Praise and the Wonder.—The lame man greatly rejoices, and the multitude wonder.

QUESTIONS.

1. Who went up to the temple together?—Ver. 1.
2. At what hour? What time of day is that?
3. Who was brought there at the same time?
4. How old was this cripple?—See Acts iv. 22.
5. Why was he laid at the gate?—Verse 2.
6. What did he ask of Peter and John?—Verse 3.
7. What did Peter and John do?—Verse 4.
8. What did the lame man expect?—Verse 5.
9. What did Peter say to him?—Verse 6.
10. What did Peter do to him?—Verses 6, 7.
11. Where did the lame man go? What did he do?—Verse 8.
12. What did the people see and know?—Verses 9, 10.
13. How did this miracle affect the people?—Verse 10.
14. What did the lame man do to the apostles?—Verse 11.
15. Where was he when he received the blessing?
16. Where should we go to be cured of sin.

BIBLE-CLASS.

1. At what gate of the temple was the lame man?
2. Why was he placed there?
3. Which fact shows his lameness was complete?
4. How frequently was he laid at this gate?
5. Was that man's infirmity curable?
6. By what power was he healed?
7. What proves that the cure was complete?
8. Name other cases of healing by the disciples.
9. What did this miracle prove?
10. What effect did it have upon the people?
11. Why do people wonder at God's works?
12. Read 1 Cor. ii. 14. Do you believe?

LESSON-HYMN, 511.

Rural and Domestic.

Feed for Hogs.

Wheat, bran and skim milk supply the phosphates which build up a hog's frame, while a very little corn meal will supply the fat forming material which is taken from milk in cream, and at a greatly reduced cost. At no time should pigs be starved or stinted, but it is important to remember that they may be dwarfed by feeding too much and too rich food, and with as bad results as from feeding too little. Great care is needed to avoid feeding too much and too rich food. This would be attended by as bad results as feeding too little Great care is needed in feeding any kind of very young animals, and the pig being especially piggish in his greed, is particularly liable to injury from eating too heartily. With all young animals growth rather than fat should be aimed at, and phosphatic foods should be given as far as possible. Corn in every stage belongs to the last or fattening stage of feeding of any kind of stock, instead of being used indiscriminately for stock of all ages. Seven bushels of corn, properly fed, will give on an average one hundred pounds in increase of live weight. The manure from this corn is worth twenty cents for each of the seven bushels. When, therefore, ordinary pigs are worth seven cents a pound or more, it is clearly better, even at this price for the pork, to feed corn to pigs than to sell it for seventy cents per bushel. There are cases when we can feed grain to cattle and sheep with more profit than to swine when the price of pork is low. And yet it is true that neither cattle nor sheep will gain as fast in proportion to the food consumed as a wellbred pig. Now corn meal is altogether too difficult of digestion for weaning pigs, and at most should only be given in small proportions. With an exclusive corn meal diet the young pigs will stop growing longer or larger framed, and begin to pile on the fat on carcasses too small for profitable feeding. A much better plan is to continue feeding milk, and this sparingly, adding a little bran a very small quantity of corn meal. The last can be increased as the pigs become accustomed to the change of diet and their stomach capable of bearing a stronger food.

A TERRIFIC Cough is difficult to Master, but like all other complaints of the respiratory organs it gives way before the anti-inflammatory and soothing operation of Baker's Pure Cod Liver Oil and Phosphate of Lime. Pleasant in taste, it can be readily taken by the most delicate. Ask your druggist for it. John. C. Baker & Co., Philadelphia.

The Fence Question.

He spoke decidedly against the old custom of fencing off many little patches about the building, and would have as few fences as possible, and those few substantially built. Locust, red cedar and chestnut make good fence posts, but tar and the usual preparations do not pay for the cost of applying. Board fences are better for gardens, but evergreen trees should be set in addition. Stone walls are good under some circumstances, and if to be a permanent structure the foundations should be laid at least three feet deep; but the best thing to do with most stone walls is to bury them where they are. In Vermont alone the cost of constructing farm fences has been $4,700,000, and the annual cost of keeping them in repair is $855,000; in New York the fences have cost $144,000,000, and the annual outlay for repairs is $16,000,000; while the entire cost of fences in the United States must reach $1,700,000,000, necessitating, an annual expenditure of $198,000,000 for repairs. Fences are seldom seen in many parts of Germany and other European countries, and are beginning to be dispensed with in some of the Western States. Village residents should consider whether they cannot get along without those picket fences between their lots, especially when there is nothing to be fenced out except scandal, and that is rather encouraged by fences. He would have the woodland further off than the cleared land, and so situated, if possible, as to protect the open fields from the cold winds and storms.—The farm paths should be as direct as possible, so that teams and cattle may not be obliged to make any useless travel. Steep declivities, river banks, and land too poor for cultivation, should be covered by wood. Trees should be planted on the northern side of the farm buildings to break the force of the winds, and the orchard should be sheltered by a wooded hill, if practicable, and by belts of trees. "A Drop of Joy in Every Word."

PHILLIPSBURG, Hunterdon Co., N. J., June 26, 1874.
DR R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—It is with a happy heart that I put these lines to acknowledge that I owe all your Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets are bleedings to the World. These medicines cannot be too highly praised, for they have almost brought me out of the grave. Three months ago I was laid up with large ulcers and sores on my body, limbs and face. I procured your Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets and have taken six bottles and today I am in good health, all those ugly ulcers having healed and left my skin in a natural, healthy condition. I thought at one time I could not be cured. Although I can but poorly express my gratitude to you, yet there is a drop of joy in every word I write. God's blessing rest on you and your wonderful medicines is the humble prayer of

Yours truly,
JAMES O. BELLIS.

When a Medicine will promptly cure such terrible eating ulcers and free the blood of the virulent poison causing them, who can longer doubt its wonderful virtues? Dr. Pierce, however, does not wish to place his Golden Medical Discovery in the catalogue of quack patent nostrums by recommending it to cure every disease, for does he so recommend it; but what he does claim is this: that there is but one form of blood disease that it will not cure, and that disease is cancer. He does not recommend his Discovery for that disease, yet he knows it to be the most searching blood cleanser yet discovered, and that it will free the blood and system of all other known blood poisons, be they animal, vegetable or mineral. The Golden Discovery is compounded by him from the worst forms of Skin Diseases, as all forms of Blotches, Pimples and Eruptions, also all Glandular swellings, and the worst cases of Scrofulous and Ulcerated Sores on Neck, legs or other parts, and all Scrofulous Diseases of the Bones, as White Swellings, Fever Sores, Hip Joint and Spinal Diseases, all of which belong to Scrofulous diseases.

Song—Gospel Train.

[The following song was composed by a colored preacher in the State of Virginia, who is said to be a good man and a successful laborer among his people.]

The gospel train is coming; I hear it just at hand;
I hear her car-wheels rolling and rumbling through the land;
I hear the bell and whistle a-coming round the curve
Flying, all in steam and power, and straining every nerve.

CHORUS.

Got on board, got on board! there's room enough for many more;
Get on board, get on board! there's room enough for all.

O see the gospel engine! she's heaving now in sight;
Her steam valves all are groaning, the pressure is so great;
She's coming round the mountain by the rivers and the lakes.
The Saviour's on board this train, controlling steam and brakes.

O see the engine's banner! 'tis floating in the breeze,
'Tis sprinkled with the Saviour's blood, but she floats with ease.
'Tis the Christian's banner; her motto's new and old—
Salvation through repentance is lettered there in gold.

This train has never run off the track—she's passed through every land;
Millions have landed safely over, and dwell at God's right hand.
Moses, Noah, Abraham and all the prophets too—
O my friends in Christ, are on this train, O what a glorious crew!

I think she'll make a little halt to wood upon the line;
And then she'll call a chaice to get, but still shall make her time.
No signal for a second train to follow upon this line;
O sinner, you'll be sure to lost, if you are left behind!

She's nearing now the station, O sinner, don't be vain,
But come and get your ticket, and be ready for the train!
The way is free, and all may go, the rich and poor as there;
No second class on board this train; no difference in the fare.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. HUDSON.

NUMBER 5.

JOHN KING—DICKENS—GLENDENNING—GEOGRAPHICAL COURSE OF NORTH CAROLINA METHODISM.

In 1777, the fifth Conference was held in Maryland. The preachers sent to Carolina circuits were John King, John Dickens, LeRoy Cole, Edward Pride. "The war raged and spread much in the course of this year." The 25th of July was appointed as a day of fasting and prayer among the Methodists. The preachers resolved to keep steadily at their work though the storm of war beat upon them ever so fiercely They went forward, preached, prayed exhorted, "and there was a very gracious work in North Carolina" during this year. Let us now turn our attention to the second appointment of North Carolina pioneers.

JOHN KING

was a hero in these trying times. He was numbered among "Asbury's Iron sides." His name and successful labors are immortalized in the church records of early Methodism. "He came from London to America in the latter part of 1769"—just three years after Embury had founded the first band of Methodists in New York.—He was a convert under the preaching of Mr. Wesley—"was educated in London as a physician." He first appeared in Philadelphia where he offered himself to the church for license to preach but failed in his application. "However," says Jesse Lee, "this young man determined to preach, and made an appointment in the Potter's field." This sermon over the graves of the poor was the beginning of eminent usefulness, as its success on that occasion induced the brethren to grant him license. Next, we find him in Maryland, laboring with Strawbridge.

Henry Bowman was converted under one of his sermons preached in Harford county, and James J. Baker, "a historic name in the Church" in Baltimore county, "was awakened under his wonderful word, and three days afterward was converted." "It was the indomitable and enterprising King who first threw the banners of Methodism to the people of Baltimore." He preached in the streets of Baltimore from a "blacksmith's block,' and at another time from a table set at the junction of two streets when a drunken mob charged upon him and upset the table and laid him prostrate upon the pavement. He rallied however, and proceeded with such power as to subdue the mob and make a lasting impression upon their minds. In five years after King turned the blacksmith's block into a throne of power, and sent his barbed arrows whizzing into that turbulent crowd.—Methodism had grown strong enough to entertain an Annual Conference there. The spark of Gospel light stricken out on the anvil block by his herculean blows, has kindled into a pillar of fire, that still sheds radiance and beauty over that city.

John King afterwards joined the regular itinerancy—was a member of the first Conference in 1773, and was appointed that year with Walters to the New Jersey circuit. Jesse Lee refers to King traveling in 1774 on Robert Williams's new circuit extending into North Carolina, and says:—"They were blessed among the people, and a most remarkable revival of religion prevailed in most of the circuit." This is the first mention of his entrance into North Carolina. I have already mentioned the fact of his being appointed to Roanoke circuit in 1777. He located during the Revolution, but his name appears again in the Minutes, as the preacher sent to Salisbury in 1796, to Goshen in 1797 and to Pamlico in 1798. After this, he located and died in Franklin county. "He was a truly pious, zealous, and useful man, and so continued till his death." His two sons, Benjamin King, of Raleigh, and Joel King, of Louisburg, filled in their day useful and honorable positions in the church of their sainted father; and to day, he has two grand sons members of the M. E. Church South, living in Louisburg.

JOHN DICKENS

traveled with King, as stated before, on the Carolina circuit, and in 1779 and 1780, he was appointed to this work again, the name Carolina having been changed to Roanoke. He was born in London—educated at Eaton College—came to America before the Revolution—joined the Methodists in 1774. He was one of the most successful Methodist pioneers in North Carolina and Virginia during the stormy period of the war from 1777 till 1782. While in North Carolina, he framed a subscription paper for a school, which resulted in Cokesbury College—the first literary institution projected by American Methodism.—After the war he labored principally in New York and Philadelphia, and here he began that colossal enterprise known as the "Book Concern" of Northern Methodism. Dickens saved the Itinerancy from a premature death when O'Kelly attempted its destruction. He was a man of scholastic attainments, being learned in English, Latin, Greek and Hebrew literature. Mighty in the pulpit—"one of the greatest and best men of that age: as it was said of Whitefield, he preached like a lion." Asbury said of him: "For piety, probity, profitable preaching, holy living, christian education of his children, secret closet prayer, I doubt whether his superior is to be found either in Europe or America." "John Dickens was in literature, logic, zeal, and devotion, a Paul among the preachers."—STEVENS. He died at his post as Book Agent and preacher at Philadelphia in 1798. His last words were—"Glory be to Jesus! O glory be to my God! I have not felt so much for seven years. Love him, trust him, praise him."

Of LeRoy Cole and Edward Pride, the other two preachers, I have not time now to speak except this, they preached much, labored hard, and did much good.

In 1778, the name of Carolina disappears from the Minutes, and that of Roanoke takes its place with William Glendenning as the preacher. Glendenning was an eccentric Scotchman, —came to America in 1774 as a volunteer missionary, and joined the Conference in 1775. He traveled about ten years mostly in Virginia and North Carolina, when his mind, always infirm, sunk into a species of mania characterized by religious melancholy. He located in 1786, but afterwards made application to reenter Conference. His application failed upon the ground of his insanity. He left the Methodist Church and labored erratically in the city of Raleigh in trying to build and establish a church there. He wandered about among Methodist families in Virginia and North Carolina till he died at an advanced age.

The honored name of Roanoke remains to this day as one of our best circuits, distinguished for the piety and social position of its members. Methodism is entrenched here in the confidence of the people, and is still wielding a commanding influence over that community. Many of the most reputable families are numbered among her communicants in this section. In the bounds of this circuit is the birthspot of "that grand old man,' Lovick Pierce, D. D. Here was the home too of the eloquent T. G. Lowe. It was here that the apostolic Jesse Lee preached his first sermon at a place called "the old Barn." Roanoke became a central point from which Methodism radiated. Its geographical course was mainly westward spreading along that fertile belt of country lying between the Tar and Roanoke rivers. It soon reached and occupied the territory embraced in Warren and Franklin counties. The Roanoke growing too large for one, was divided into three circuits, the Roanoke, Tar River and New Hope, which was done according to Jesse Lee in 1778, but according to the Minutes not till 1779. The date of division is immaterial, but the name, "Tar River," which is still retained in our Minutes, indicates the course along which Methodism was being sown as a seed pregnant with fruitful harvests.

The quick growth and rapid spread of Methodism in Franklin and Warren are indicated in the fact, that but six years after the Tar River circuit was formed, the first Conference in North Carolina was held in 1785, at the residence of Rev. Green Hill, near Louisburg. Twenty preachers were there and reported Methodism "prosperous in all their borders." The ordination of Beverly Allen took place at this Conference, and was probably the first one in North Carolina. Green Hill it seems, was a statesman as well as a preacher; for in the year 1775 he was selected as a delegate from Warren and Franklin to attend the first Provincial Congress of N. C., held at Hillsboro. He was a delegate also to the one held in Halifax in 1776; and doubtless met Dromgoole and Poythress then on that circuit. But I have not time to dwell on this locality longer now, as I expect to refer to it again. Suffice it to say, that Methodism in these two counties has always occupied a high and commanding position, and has been the source of innumerable benefits to the people.

CHILDHOOD.

NUMBER 5.

The health and welfare of children are more or less influenced by their diet due of course to the kind and quantity and manner of its preparation—a large proportion of the food that comes upon our tables is prepared for the adult and in thousands of instances is prepared after an old sterotyped system, that comes down from our great grand mothers without any material change and which even its age and antiquity cannot commend as either palatable or wholesome.

Perhaps in the article of bread, which is largely the food of children, there is as much that demands improvement as in almost anything else. Hot biscuit highly enriched with animal fats—the almost indiscriminate use of soda with no neutralizing acid—rancid or musty yeast etc., makes a bread not only wholly unfit for children, but must be severely let alone by the dyspeptic.

It certainly is a matter of regret and mortification that the preparation of an article of diet, so important as to be called the "staff of life," is so imperfectly understood.

The chemistry of cooking, and the physiology of digestion seem to be a sealed book to, by far, too many of our house wives, and it will be real progress and advancement when an acquaintance with these sciences comes to be recognized as an essential, indispensable part of female education. It is only by a study of these laws that we are prepared to appreciate the important bearing which the quantity, quality, and time and manner of partaking of food has upon the health and happiness of children.

The same is true as regards sleeping—involving, as it does, attention to the bed room covering, the number crowded together rendering ventilation imperative and the associating together in bed, the very young with the very old. In attention to this latter point has repeatedly brought under my notice the necessity for interference and change. Many a sweet child has been—and probably will continue to be—thus inadvertently and ignorantly sacrificed.

Then there is exercise in doors and out requiring over sight and restriction as regards the season of the year—the state of the weather and the age—condition of health—physical resistance etc., of the child. These preventative and hygyenic measures should be so adapted to each other, that undue restriction or unchecked indulgence shall not retard the development or endanger the health and life of children. While etiolation or effeminacy is to be avoided, what is called the "hardening process" is more earnestly to be deprecated. This mistaken, cruel, inhuman policy towards children not only stunts their development, but destroys their lives; and considered in the light of physiology or humanity, is a relict of ignorance and barbarism against which every philanthropist—not to say parent—ought to remonstrate, and as far as possible, arrest. I once knew an old lady that made the raising of turkeys a speciality; one of her plans was to seize the poor little fragile young as soon as they came off the nest and plunge them to the bottom of a large tub filled with very cold water. Though aware that this cruel process killed a large portion of her brood, she consoled herself that the experiment only determined at last the natural endurance and powers of resistance of such as survived—the others would have died anyhow.

I never see a mother subjecting her child to this "hardening process" but it brings to my mind the conduct of this misguided, ignorant old woman and her turkeys.

The attractions and endearments of home—a home wherein comfort, taste and affection reign—contributes largely to the happiness of children. These home influences and home memories, when of the right kind, in their physical, social and moral advantages, cannot be well over estimated; and, astonishing as it may seem, their importance is almost ignored by our people. Perhaps a large proportion of our homes are erected without any reference, or at least very little reference, to taste, convenience or real adaptation to the present or prospective wants of our families.

They are a shelter it is true, but so far as their arrangements and surroundings are concerned, they are by no means calculated to create pleasant memories or enduring attachments.

There are in, by far too many instances, no green spot or wide spreading elm or oaks, whose umbrageous shelter formed a cool retreat for our childhood gambols; no trellised arbor or creeping vine; no gravelly walks with their rose fringed edgings, no speading landscapes or distant mountains and all the thousand and one beauties, glories and adornments, of nature, so pleasing to the eye and around which memory loves to linger so fondly; none of these perchance stand connected with our home. How unfortunate? What a mighty vantage ground is lost to our children? But and if these home attractions are found and with them there are found the restraining, sanctifying influences of religion—intensified by the memories of the family altar and all its sacred associations. Who can tell how an earthly home with such surroundings, without such earnest pointings above—how much it may do—and how far it may go towards the earthly comfort and happiness of our children, and what influence it may have in winning them to virtue and to Christ, and thus preparing them for a future eternal state of blessedness.

O that christian parents—yea, that all parents, would awake to the full importance of this matter, and strive earnestly to gather around their homes every taste, comfort, convenience and influence that will tend to the social, intellectual and moral elevation of their dear children.

WATCHMAN.

Cedar Grove, April 1876.

England's Rulers.

[Commit the following to memory, and you will have at your "tongue's end" the names of the monarchs of England, from the time of the conquest down to the present date:]

First, William the Norman, then Henry, his son,
Henry, Stephen and Henry, then Richard and John.
Next, Henry the Third; Edwards, one, two and three;
And again, after Richard, three Henrys we see.
Two Edwards, third Richard, if rightly I guess,
Two Henrys, sixth Edward, Queen Mary and Bess;
Then Jamie, the Scot; then Charles whom they slew;
The followed Cromwell, another Charles, too.
Next, James, called the second, ascended the throne;
Then William and Mary, together came on,
Till Anne, Georges four and fourth William all past,
God sent them Victoria, the youngest and last.

THE BIBLE.—Why put windows in their houses to let in the sunlight? Why don't they have gaslight? The sun has been shining so many years. Why don't they say: "It is so old we don't want it? Why don't they say "Let us have a new light. Let us shut out the light of heaven by boarding up our windows?" There would be just as much reason in that as in their talk about the good old Bible. We have not outgrown it. It is what we need. Take all the books in the world, and that Bible will outweigh the whole of them. Let these men who talk about the Bible travel into some country where they have no Bible, and they would not stay in such a place. Take a town with five or ten thousand inhabitants and no Bible and no ministers, and see if these infidels in New York that are talking about the Bible will live there. They would get out of it as fast got out of Sodom. It is better to take the old way of Knox, Bunyan, Wesley and Newton than to be led off into darkness and fog. Christ is the Way. I am told that away in the frontier men cut off the bark of the trees to show the way to the cabin, and they call it blazing the way. So the Son of God has been in the wilderness and blazed the way and gone up on high, and now He says, "Follow Me."—Moody.

You cannot build a house on the tops of trees, and you cannot build up a church that symbolizes the real church idea that rests on the upper level of fashionable society. If the church intends to represent God, then she must it fill its bosom with affection for the lowly, and with anxiety for those morally lost.

BE what you are; this is the step toward becoming better than you are.

"A Stranger and ye took me in"

Looking at my watch and finding it was after midnight, I arose to retire. My host was a lawyer of eminence and of long and varied experience, and his conversation had been so full of interest that the hours had slipped unheeded by. The home which had received me as a guest was in a beautiful city of a Western State. It was one of those homes which abound in Methodism, where hospitality is dispensed as though in fulfilment of a Divine command, and where you feel the welcome in the very atmosphere, which the coming of a guest makes no trouble whatever, and household affairs move calmly on—and every body, even down to the dog who lays his chin on your knee, with a welcoming wag of his tail and a friendly glance of his eye—seems disposed to contribute to your entertainment and make you forget, as soon as possible, that you came a stranger.

Taking the lawyer by the hand I said, "My brother, you are a happy man. You have been successful in your profession; wealth has flowed in upon you—your family have good health—your children have all been converted to God—your sons in law are honorable young men—nothing is lacking to make you grateful and happy." Well, said the lawyer, "all my good fortune began by inviting a Methodist preacher home to dinner with me. Sit down and I will tell you about it. Many years ago—when this was a new country and very sparsely populated, there came to the little settlement where I lived information that upon the following Sabbath the Methodist circuit rider would preach in our place. It was a rare event to have a sermon, and the congregation was very good. I was an unconverted man, but, wicked as I was, I could not help feeling a great regard for those heroic itinerants who, on poor pay, and poor fare, planted the Church in this wilderness. There were but few Methodists in the settlement; and after the sermon I watched them to see if any one would invite the preacher home to dinner. Some in the congregation shook hands with him; but after awhile I was left alone with him. He stood leaning against the rude pulpit with a tired look upon his face, and I thought I detected, also, a shade of disappointment.

There was a hotel in the place, but, in those days Methodist preachers had very little money to pay their way at the hotel. Without an abounding hospitality the Church never could have been planted as it was in this great West. I approached him, shook his hand, and said, 'I am a sinner, sir, but if you will go home with me, my wife and I will be glad to take care of you.'

He gladly accepted my invitation. His horse was soon comfortable in my little barn, and the preacher was sitting at my table, and seemed from the first perfectly at home. As long as he was on the circuit he was a welcome guest at our hearthstone. Others invited him, but he always seemed glad to get back to our house. A great revival followed his labors; and among the first fruits were my wife and myself. We were both converted and joined the Church, and from that time to this all has gone well with me. That preacher was God's messenger to us all. My children were converted early in life. We made other acquaintances among the ministry, but there was one whose memory we always cherished with peculiar respect and love, and whose name was a household word.

One evening I brought a letter from the post office addressed to my wife. I threw it into her lap. She was sitting just where she is now. Unfolding my evening paper, I began to read, when I was startled by a sob. I looked up, and saw that my wife was weeping bitterly, and she was still holding that letter in her hand. In great alarm I inquired what had happened. "John," she said, 'George Bicknell has been superannuated at Conference. His health has utterly broken down, he never can take an other appointment. He has no home, no money, nothing but the scanty allowance from the Conference fund.' And then she came over and sat down by my side, "John," she said, "you know what a blessing he was to us. I have one request to make. You have a house in this town for rent. Let it be vacated. Let me furnish it comfortably and thoroughly. I will write to him this very day and tell him all about it."

In thirty days the superannuated came with his family and took possession of their home. He rallied some, but after a few months consumption did its work, and we all gathered about him to see him die. As he was going down into the valley I sat by his side, holding his hand, fearing he might have some little, lingering anxiety about his family. As I saw him looking from one to another of the little group, I whispered, 'George, don't be troubled about them, I'll take care of them all.' The look he gave me paid me over and over again for all I had ever done for him, and left the original debt still uncancelled.

And so it came that all my earthly prosperity, as well as spiritual, seemed to begin with that invitation to a weary itinerant to come home to dinner with me."—Rev. C. C. McCabe.

Indian Jugglers

Everywhere in India one meets with the jugglers and serpent-charmers whose feats are famous the world over. Matheran, a locality in the table land of the Ghants, 1,500 feet above the sea level, where the English have established a sanator both for the soldiers and the residents, is naturally one of the leading rendezvous for these jugglers. They assemble during the season on this table land and perform their tricks from one bungaiow to another. Some of them are very skilful. Almost entirely naked, and in the middle of your room, they will make a serpent disappear, a tree grow and bring forth fruit, or water flow from an apparently empty vase. Others will swallow a sabre or play tricks with knives. Each has his special accomplishments. One of their most curious tricks is that of the basket and child. A child, seven or eight years old, standing upright in the basket, writhes in convulsions under the influence of music, and disappears slowly into the interior, which is barely large enough to contain it. Scarcely is it inside when the musicians throw themselves upon it, close the lid, and pierce the basket in every direction with their long knives. They strike with all their might until, the bamboo giving way, the basket is almost completely flattened and seems no longer capable of containing anything. They then reform the circle and resume their chant, to which a voice now responds from the forest. The sound gradually approaches, and at last seems to come from the basket, which becomes more and more distended; the lid is removed, and the child springs out. This trick is very adroitly performed, and, though capable of being explained to Europeans, excites lively astonishment in the Indian spectators.

The top trick is likewise very curious. The juggler gives a vigorous impulse to the top, which he places on the top of a small stick balanced on his nose; then, according to the request of the spectator, the top suddenly stops, or again goes on spinning. This last part of the operation M. Rousselet thought by far the most extraordinary. That the top should stop is intelligible; but that it should afterward continue to revolve, without any new impetus, and perform these alternate manœuvres for several seconds, is the inexplicable point.—Our traveller attentively examined both the stick and the top, but could discover no trace of mechanical contrivance.

First Use of the Handkerchief.

Until the reign of the Empress Josephine, a handkerchief was thought in France so shocking an object that a lady would never have dared to use it before any one. The word even was carefully avoided in refined conversation. An actor who would have used a handkerchief on the stage, even in the most tearful moments of the play, would have been unmercifully hissed; and it was only in the beginning of the present century that a celebrated Mlle. Duchesnoise dared to appear with a handkerchief in her hand. Having to speak of this handkerchief in the course of the piece, she never could summon courage enough to call it by its true name, but referred to it as a slight tissue. A few years later, a translation of one of Shakspere's plays, by Alfred de Vigny, having been acted, the word handkerchief was used for the first time on the stage amid cries of indignation from a great part of the house. I doubt not that even to day French elegantes would carry handkerchiefs if the wife of Napoleon I. had not given the signal for adopting them. The Empress Josephine, although really lovely, had ugly teeth. To conceal them, she was in the habit of carrying small handkerchiefs, adorned with costly laces, which she continually raised gracefully to her lips. Of course all the ladies of the court followed her example, and handkerchiefs have rapidly become an important and costly part of the feminine toilet; so much so that the price of a single handkerchief of the trousseau of the Duchess of Edinburg would make the fortune of a necessitous family.

Dr. Macleod announced at a meeting of the Lancashire Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church, held at Liverpool recently, that arrangements had been completed for the projected union of the United Presbyterian Church with the English Presbyterian Church. A gentleman it was further stated, was prepared to give on the day of the union £25,000 to start a thanksgiving fund, which would probably be increased to £100,000 or £150,000.

Volcanoes Under the Sea.

It seems that in several places in the world there are volcanoes under the sea. Such volcanoes, of course, do not send up volumes of flame and smoke. Instead, they pour forth streams of sulphurous acid vapor that mingle with the seawater. Some of these volcanoes are situated in bays where ships can safely ride at anchor.

As is well known, the bottoms of many ships are protected by a covering of copper. This copper after a time, becomes corroded by the action of the sea water; a sort of green mold forms, sea mosses begin to grow, and even small sea-animals, like the barnacles, build their shell-houses upon it. Of course, all these things roughen the ship's bottom, and as the vessel gathers more and more, it sails very much slower by reason of the great accumulation. Then, if she happen to be anywhere in the neighborhood of one of these submerged volcanoes, the captain sails her thither to be scoured.

This scouring process does not require hands or machinery of any sort. All that is necessary is that the ship should lie quietly at anchor where the sulphurous acid vapor, mingling with the sea water, can gently wash her sides and bottom. In a few days, or weeks, as the case may be, not a weed, not a barnacle, not a bit of the dark green mold remains, and the ship can sail off again, her copper bottom as clean and bright as when it was first put on.

The Gentlemen.

EVERY man may be a gentleman if he will—not by getting rich, or by gaining access to that self appointed social grade that claims the exclusive right to give the badge of gentility, but by the cultivation of those unselfish, kind, and noble impulses that make the gentleman. It is too rarely we find among those who vote themselves the gentlemen and ladies of the day anything to warrant their assumption. There is but little of the true metal about them. Personal contact reveals arrogance and pride, and too often a meanness of spirit and a littleness that disgrace human nature.

So far as our observation goes—and it covers many years of contact with high and low, rich and poor—we are constrained to say that, while among the poorer classes there is, as a general thing, a sad lack of external culture—of attention to little personal habits that are not agreeable to others, and which ought to be corrected—there is really, in the lower and middle ranks of society, so called, quite as many true gentlemen and ladies as among those who claim the exclusive right to these honorable designations.

The apprentice and the errand-boy, the man who digs a ditch or carries a hod, the mechanic and artisan, the shop girl, the seamstress, the cook, and the waiter, may be as truly gentlemen and ladies as the richest and most cultivated in the land. The qualities that make the lady and gentleman are qualities of the soul, and there is no monopoly or exclusive right to these.

"There can be no true bond among the wicked." This is illustrated by the story of the three German robbers. Having acquired by various atrocities a valuable booty, they agreed to divide their spoil and retire from so dangerous a vocation. When the day arrived which they appointed for this purpose, one of them was despatched to a neighboring town to purchase provisions for their carousal; the other two, in his absence, agreed to murder him on his return, that they might come in for a half of the plunder instead of a third. They did so, but it did not benefit them, for after partaking of the feast which he had procured, they found that their comrade had previously poisoned the provisions in order that he might take all of the spoil, and the three were afterwards found dead together.—Lacon.

A KIND WORD FOR MOTHER.—Despise not thy mother when she is old. Age may wear and waste a mother's beauty, strength, limbs, sense, and estate, but her relation as a mother is as the sun when it goes forth in its might, for it is always in the meridian and knoweth no evening. She may be gray-haired, but her motherly relations never die. It may be autumn, yea, winter with a woman, but with the mother it is always spring. Alas! how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! But when she is dead and gone, when the cares and coldness of the world come withering to our hearts, we experience how hard it is to find true sympathy—how few will befriend us in misfortune. Then it is that we think of the mother that we have lost.

Cometh sunshine after rain
After mourning joy again;
After heavy bitter grief
Dawneth surely sweet relief;
And my soul, who from her height
Sank to realms of woe and night,
Wingeth now to heaven her flight.

ARM HIGH.—It is aim that makes the man; without an aim man is nothing, as far as the utter destitution of force, might, and even individuality among men can reduce him to nonentity. The strong gusts and current of the world sweep him this way and that without steam, or sails to impel or helm to guide him: if he is not speedily wrecked or run aground, it is more "luck than good management." We have never heard a more touching confession of utter weakness and misery than these words from one singularly blessed with the endowments of nature or of providence,—"My life is aimless." Take heed young man, of an aimless life, take heed also of a low and sordid aim. A well ascertained and generous purpose gives vigor, distinctness, and perservance to all man's efforts. A well disciplined intellect, character, influence, tranquility, and cheerfulness within; success and honor without, are its concomitants. Whatever a man's talent may be, with no aim, or a low one, he is weak and despicable; and he cannot be otherwise than respectable and influential with a high one.

A brother, who had fallen into darkness and discouragement was staying at the same house with Dr. Finney over night. He was lamenting his condition, and Dr. Finney, after listening to his narrative, turning to him with his peculiar, earnest look, and with a voice that sent a thrill through his soul, said, "You don't pray! that is what's the matter with you. Pray—pray four times as much as you ever did in your life, and you will come out." He immediately went down to the parlor, and taking the Bible, he made a serious business of it, stirring up his soul to seek God as did Daniel and thus he spent the night. It was not in vain. As the morning dawned, he felt the light of the Sun of Rightcousness shine upon his soul. His captivity was broken; and ever since he has felt that the greatest difficulty in the way of men being emancipated from their bondage is, that they "don't pray."

If the State Government of California keeps on, it will soon be secular enough to suit the most advanced. The governor in his Thanksgiving proclamation skillfully steered clear of the name of God—possibly to save the feelings of the heathen Chinee; and now the State senate not only refuses to elect a chaplain, but has sent a committee of senators to San Francisco to spend the Sabbath in investigating the grants of tide and salt-marsh lands. An open session was held at the City Hall, and the day was spent in hearing claims, etc.—Independent.

Just for Fun.

A hint to mothers.—In getting up a suit of clothes for a boy, if you wish to make his trowsers last, finish the coat first.

A New York temperance lecturer says one of the chief causes of the present financial depression is alcoholic indulgence. The Boston Post asks: "Does he mean to say that money is 'tight?'"

Spurgeon told his students the other day to avoid the use of the nose as an organ of speech, for the best authorities are agreed that it is intended to smell with.

It was a Cheyenne small boy who, being talked to by his Sunday-school teacher on sins and frailties of the body, was asked: "Well, my son, what have you, besides this sinful body?" Quick as thought the urchin responded: "A clean shirt and a nice pair of breeches."

AT Salt Lake the other day a young lady from the interior entered a store and called for a pair of stockings.—The clerk politely asked her what number she wore. "Why, two; do you suppose I am a centipede?"

AN old farmer said to his sons: "Boys, don't you ever speckerlate or wait for somethin' to turn up. You might just as well go an sit down on a stone in the middle of a medder, with a pail 'twixt your legs, and wait for a cow to back up to you to be milked."

A movement is on foot for the establishment of a Conference in Eastern Kentucky. Correspondents of the Central Methodist are advocating it as a necessity to Methodism.

The Charlotte Observer observes wisely, as follows: "One might say a thousand good things in a newspaper, and no attention would be paid to them; but let a blunder creep in, and it brings to his feet every critic in the neighborhood."

Bro. Meek of the Central Methodist has resolved his paper into an illustrated journal, as appears from recent numbers of his paper. The issue of the 11th April contained a photograph of George W. Bain, Grand Worthy Chief Templar of Kentucky, the superior of Hickman and the equal of Gough as a lecturer (it is claimed.)

Shall we again repeat our oft-repented decision that obitnary and marriage notices, unaccompanied by the name of the writers, will not be published in the Advocate? By force of that decision the obitnary notice from "a friend" does not appear. We do not want the names of writers for publication but for other obvious reasons.

Bro J. M. Rhodes; writing from Wilmington April 27th, says: 'For fifteen days and nights, a series of prayer meetings has been in progress at Fifth Street. More than fifty persons have united with the Church. The work is still progressing. "Our help cometh from the Lord. "Give him the glory!"

In speaking of church matters, the New York Methodist, among other suggestions, makes the following:

"Collections ought to be counted and recorded by at least two men.—We have known churches wherein there was a profound suspicion that collections were falsely reported; the whole case would have been put beyond controversy by adopting our suggestion. That we should trust Christian men is true in all needful cases. It is also true that we should not tempt even Christian men."

THANKS.—To Mr. D. Luther Crouse for an invitation to the Twelfth Annual Commencement of North Carolina College, at Mt. Pleasant, Cabarrus Co., on May 24th. Rev. F. W. Conrad, D. D., of Philadelphia, Pa., will preach the Baccalaureate Sermon Sunday May 21st. On Wednesday May 24th, Senior addresses will be delivered.

We return our acknowledgments also to the Marshals and Managers for a card of invitation to the Annual Commencement at Yadkin College on May 25th. The Chief Marshals are A. C. Hopkins and R. R. Satterwhite.—Marshals, J. M. Jones, J. W. Williams and E. L. Owen. Managers: A. Baker, S G. Williams and Levi Truitt.

THE REVIVAL AT FIFTH STREET.—We gather the following from the columns of the Wilmington, N. C. Evening Review of Monday the 24th of April:

We understand that there was great interest manifested at the revival at the Fifth Street Methodist E. Church last night; the building was packed to the doors, many having to return home for want of seats and room.—Forty two persons were received into the church. The Reverend James E. Mann officiated and baptized twenty persons and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to a very large number. It will thus be seen that the earnest labors of the new pastor, Rev. J. M. Rhodes, are already bearing noble fruit. The meetings are still held nightly. Rev. J. T. Gibbs, recent pastor of the Fifth St. M. E. Church, preached in that Church Sabbath morning and at the Front Street M. E. Church Sabbath evening.

The fifth annual convention of the Woman's Presbyterian Missionary Society of the Northwest, held last week at Indianapolis, was very interesting. During the past year the association has formed one hundred and twenty four new societies and bands These have assisted in assuming the support of seven new mission aries, twenty-one new schools, and twenty-seven new pupils, and seven Bible readers. The receipts for the year were $27,623.

Some of the Jews in London are inquiring as to the teaching of the Scriptures respecting Christ, and some have embraced the truth.

Expository Preaching.

In our last, we submitted some reflections on pulpit preparation. The following, by Dr. Taylor, in his seventh lecture at Yale Divinity School, sets forth some of the advantages of expository preaching. This style of preaching is becoming very popular. God's word is the sword of the Spirit, and is the great weapon in preaching the word of life:

As to the advantages of this Method: 1. It brings both preacher and hearer into direct contact with the mind of the Spirit and of God. This should be the minister s great aim, and, thus speaking, he will speak as one having authority. Whatever his other powers, he must clothe himself with his peculiar power—the word of God behind him. Thus only can he make man feel that it is God with whom they have to do. 2 It secures variety in the ministrations of the preacher. It will prevent the setting forth of favorite themes only. It will secure that variety in unity which is the charm of the Bible. Thus Romans, Galatians and James present us each a different feature of justification.

The neglect of expository preaching may explain in part short pastorates. The merely topical preacher wears himself out in drawing too exclusively from his own resources. Let him take a look at the Bible, or the discourses of Jesus, or the meditations of David. 3. The preacher will thus be compelled to treat subjects from which he would otherwise have shrunk, but which need setting forth if he would declare the whole counsel of God. By the expository method he can touch every class of men, and every man, too, without seeming to have gone purposely out of his way to do so. He will be led to preach on every great theme—not his favorite ones only—and to give each truth its own proportion. Thus, too, such valuable books as Deuteronomy and Nehemiah would no longer be neglected. 4. The promotion of biblical intelligence among our people will be another advantage. Right here the knowledge of many church goers is seriously limited; and in these days of the rapid increase of new books we need more and more to exalt the Bible, the fountain of all truth, whose instructions give strength and stability to character. 5. A final advantage is that in the process of preparing his expository discourses the preacher will acquire a great store of materials which he can use on other purposes, and will have constantly suggested to him fresh subjects for topical sermons. This I have found true in an eminent degree in my own experience.

Malfeasance in Office.

Turn where we will we see evidences of corruption in public office, the betrayal of public trusts and the sale of influence and character for filthy lucre. The confusion and passion of war usually result in the demoralization of a people for a time, but it would seem that the eleven years that have elapsed since the close of our civil war, would have sufficed to cure the evils that followed. But, on the contrary, the past few months have been notable for the revelation of fraud and peculation, bribery and corruption in office. Men in the highest places of government have been proven, or confessed themselves guilty of using their official positions for the pecuniary advancement of themselves and friends. Representatives of government abroad, upon whom lay the duty of upholding and illustrating national honor and dignity, lend the influence of their names and positions to the schemes of those who would speculate upon the ignorance and credulity of foreigners. Having the disposal of profitable offices or privileges in his hands, the late Secretary of War is under impeachment for having sold them for a price; and in order to rid himself of the ignominy and pains of the law's sentence, he relies upon the plea, not that he is not guilty, but that he is not now, and was not an officer when the articles of impeachment were preferred against him A member of the household of the highest officer of the government, believed to be guilty of complicity in glaring frauds upon the government, is charged with an equally black crime in having conspired to ruin the reputation and peace of an old man who had prevented the perpetration of robbery and fraud. And even that highest officer, himself, is charged with having diverted public moneys from the purposes to which they were to be applied, and put them in a channel whose legality was so questionable that he directed no record or trace of the transaction to be left in the office of the custodian of the funds. With such illustrious precedents or examples before them, it is not to be wondered at, however much it is to be deplored, that minor officials in the national and State governments should betray the confidence and trust of the public whom they serve.

It is necessary that not only the party opponents of those who are guilty of crimes and fraud should become indignant and expose and denounce the offenders, but that all citizens, of whatever party affiliations they may happen to be, shall withdraw their countenance and support from them. If the people are intelligent, law abiding and virtuous, their rulers and public officials will be honest and faithful. No government can long be tyrannical except where the people are willing to be slaves; and no officials can or will dare to be corrupt and dishonest, except where the people, whom they serve, condone their faults and, through partisan feeling, defend or attempt to conceal their wrong doing. As long as a bribe taker or malfeasant finds his party willing to hide or defend his offences, he will not care much for the attacks and denunciations of the opposite party. Let the people be virtuous and demand, as they have the right to demand, honest and christian men to fill their offices, and disgraceful conduct will soon be at a discount.

NEWBERN DISTRICT.

DEAR BRETHREN: The church is having a gracious time in Beaufort Bro Raven is laboring with great success. Many have been converted. Last night the altar and front pews were crowded with those enquiring the road to the better land. Dr. L W. Martin came forward and publicly surrendered himself again and forever to God and the church. We had a glorious time.

Bro. Dodson, in Kinston, has had a deep work, and week before last I left Bro Brooks in Goldsboro with prospect of a good work,—and so all about Zion. The world seems to be turning to God. May the Holy Spirit speed the blessed day!

Your fastily.

SHELBY DISTRICT.

MESSRS EDITORS: This District embraces nine counties, namely, Polk, Rutherford, McDowell, Burke, Caldwell, Catawba Lincoln, Gaston and Cleaveland There are eight rivers of considerable size, flowing through it, besides innumerable creeks. As for mountains, figures are hardly sufficient to count them. Switzerland, aye, the world, cannot surpass them in magnificence There are eighteen pastoral charges in it, and nearly eight thousand members. Hence, some one, (Dr. Burkhead perhaps,) has called it the "Empire District" of the N. C Conference. Dr. Craven is responsible for putting it at 3880 square miles, making it 4th in size, as to area, compared with the other Districts. Well, he'd think one mile here would count two most any where else. So, all things considered, we still claim the distinction of being the "empire District." But we are not yet what we hope to be. There is room for improvement. There are grown men in these mountains, men with families, who, I understand, have never heard a sermon in their lives. They must be reached. They can be. Methodism has never found the mountain she could not climb, nor the river she could not swim. Bless God, she has not lost her ancient fire, her "enthusiasm," as Bro West calls it. Already there is a stir in the District. Preachers, delegates, members, all, are manifesting unusual activity and zeal, getting ready for District Conference. The coming of Bishop McTyeire and secretary McFerrin has excited the fire. May it burn and blaze all through the District, and accumulate into a glorious flame of divine light and power at Hickory.

The centennial idea is doing good It is new. The people like it. It begets within them veneration and respect for their Methodistic ancestry. It enlarges their liberality, increases their attachment to the cause They do not know as much of Methodism as they thought they did. They want to know more. They come in vast crowds to our centennial meetings. They want more light. Let it radiate from every district, circuit, and pulpit, until its beams of splendor shall gild our distant borders.

This year we are all engaged in constructing the first centennial diadem for our Methodist Queen. She is to be crowned next fall, at Greensboro. May the jewels we bring be worthy of a place on her noble brow!

MAKING PREACHERS.

Some person, itinerant preacher, I suppose, adopts with entire agreement the language of some one writing in the Southern Advocate and published in Raleigh ADVOCATE of the 12th April, seeming to have a great desire to throw all the impediments possible in the way of developing men for the ministry. The word "Local Preacher" has considerable stress thrown upon it. Now I do not suppose that another local preacher would soon be made if the course he suggests should be adopted by the Church.

Already too many bars are in their way to prevent them from entering upon the great work of saving souls. Hardly any man has ever come up and pressed himself upon the Quarterly Conference and asked to be licensed.

His friends who have been doing what Christ commanded them to do, have been praying the Lord of the Harvest to send laborers into his vineyard and have seen his developing fitness and urged him to take up the cross and make the usual application. And it is a fact that none can deny that some of the most useful men now in the ministry are those who would never have entered it if the impediments were put in their way as suggested in the article referred to 'Making preachers' well expresses what is attempting to be done now. Men and colleges are trying to do it in this age, and a fine education is thought of much more importance than the imbuing influence of the Holy Spirit upon a somewhat rough exterior.

Peter and John were not authorized by Christ to go and preach until the Holy Ghost was poured out upon them.

Before God had educated them in his own way they were unlearned and illiterate men, and after that the world was astonished at their mighty works in the name of their nation.

The greatest impediment now in the way of the local ministry is the little respect with which they are frequently treated by the itinerants. Their feelings are very frequently very much wounded by the slights which they receive from the itinerant. And if a stranger should be present very frequently when these men attend upon the ministry of their pastors, he would not for a moment imagine that they were any more than laymen.

This body of men are very numerous and preach with but little earthly remuneration to the poor and destitute, filling many appointments in the absence of the pastor, and frequently laying a foundation for the itinerant to build up a church, when after awhile the poor Local Preacher will be shoved aside to make room for some other.

And it does look as if there was some truth in the sentiment that, in many instances and places, a Local Preacher is about of as much use as the 5th wheel to a carriage would be.

A LOCAL PREACHER.

DR. CLOSS

MESSRS EDITORS: I have been receiving letters from various parts of the Conference anxious to know Dr. Closs' "present condition." I have written from two to four letters each day during the past two weeks. And I now take this method to answer all who may be desirous to know, that day before yesterday there was a decided change for the better, though he has not been able to sit up, even in his bed, for 15 days. He has passed the crisis, and there is every hope that he will soon be well.

I have also received letters asking me if I knew, to state where the District Conference would be held. I am not a Presiding Elder yet, but I have the authority to answer that the Washington District Conference will be held in Warrenton, commencing on Thursday before the 2nd Sabbath in July.

Respectfully,

N. M. JULINEY.

COMMENCEMENT AT DAVENPORT.—The Commencement of Davenport F. College embraces Wednesday and Thursday 7th and 8th of June

Bishop McTyeire will preach Commencement sermon on Wednesday.

Address before the Literary Society by R T. Gray Esq. on Thursday

Meeting of the Board of Trustees on Wednesday at 3 o'clock P. M. A full attendance is requested.

W. M ROBEY

THE NEWBERNE DISTRICT CONFERENCE will convene in Kinston on Wednesday the 14th of June—including the 3d Sabbath in the month. Brethren outside the District are cordially invited to be present and assist us. Will not some of the brethren in the West visit the East "just once," and let the people see and hear them?

The committee on Centennial programme will make its publication in due time

E. A. YATES, P. E.

The preachers in the Shelby District will please send me the names of Delegates to the District Conference at their earliest convenience and oblige Those who do not expect to attend will notify me of the fact. Ministers of other Districts, who expect to attend, will please send me their notice of the fact that homes may be provided for them also.

ROCK SPRING SEMINARY

The annual close of Rock Spring Seminary, at Denver, N. C., will take place on the 24th and 25th of May. Rev. D. R. Bruton, Presiding Elder of the Salisbury District, N. C. Conference, will preach the annual sermon on Wednesday the 25th. On afternoon of same day. Rev. Dr. Craven, President of Trinity College, will deliver the address before the Franklin Literary Society. Wednesday night, declamations by part of the school; Thursday the 25th closing exercises.

Chief Marshal: Willie M. Houston of Mecklenburg Co.

SOUTH FORK CIRCUIT.

More particularly for the information of my Circuit, I wish, if you please, to say, through the Advocate, that for the past ten or twelve days I have been confined at home by an attack of billious fever. I am now able to be up, and expect to resume my work in a few days.

Our third Quarterly Meeting will embrace the first Sunday in June, at Kadesh.

Our District Conference will embrace the Sunday after, at Hickory, and I am very anxious that the brethren be ready with their Missionary money as I go round this time: for I want to make settlement in full with the Bishop, and the Missionary Secretaries at the District Conference, if possible.

"It Haunted Her."

MESS. EDITORS: I hope none of your many readers will become alarmed for fear I am going to tell them a ghost story, or that I am going to tell about an old haunted house, or old field filled with hobgoblins. Such a statement might please the curious.—But I wish to state that some one has been successfully haunted, and strange to tell, it was a lady. I imagine that it is not so pleasant to be haunted, and then to think it was a lady, for whom all sensible men have the highest regards! But it is even so.

Rev J. F. H. writes me: "Sister —— says your appeal has haunted her ever since she first read it, and she knows of no way to get relief than by sending you ONE DOLLAR"

I hope and pray that others are thus haunted, and that they will immediately seek relief in the same sensible way. I have secured several hundred dollars here in the last few weeks; but that will not finish our church. I am pleading for our Heavenly Father. Shall I plead in vain?

No, I believe that God will touch the hearts and purse strings of his people, and the money will come—Let it come!

EDWIN W. FULLER

We are called upon to record one of the saddest events that ever occurred in the history of our community—the death of Edwin W. Fuller, which occurred at his mother's residence last Saturday about 9 o clock P. M He was born in Louisburg N C., Nov 30th 1847. When about 11 years of age he joined the Methodist Church and remained a consistent member of the same until the day of his death. Until he was sixteen years of age he attended preparatory schools in Louisburg—he then went to the University of N. C., and remained there two years; after which he remained at home with his father between twelve and eighteen months, and when about nineteen years of age he went to the University of Va., where he graduated in 1870, not very long after his return from College, his father died suddenly and left the care of a family on his hands. This necessitated his going into business which he did in the store house formerly occupied by his father. He did this, however, with the hope and intention that it would be temporary, as he intended to devote himself entirely to literary pursuits, having a remarkable literary taste and talent

He was married to Miss Mary Malone—daughter of Dr. Ellis Malone, of Louisburg N. C., Sept. 26th 1871. In 1874 they sustained a severe loss in the death of their only daughter—a sweet little child of 16 months Sometime during last year, it was ascertained that he had lung disease which terminated his life in a peaceful, triumphant, happy death.

As a business man he had the entire confidence of all who knew him. In his business he so frequently befriended the poor and unfortunate that many, very many of them, now rise up and call him blessed. As an author, he has given to the world unmistakable evidence of his literary genius in his published volumes, "Angel in the Cloud' and 'Sea Gift.' Soon after the death of his little daughter, he penned one of the most beautifully touching little poems, entitled "The Last Look," which, on account of its wonderful beauty, was published extensively throughout the United States.

As a citizen he occupied the very highest position in the confidence and esteem and affections of the community in which he lived, and the large concourse of people that attended his funeral, and a large audience bathed in tears as his pastor spoke of his character and his peaceful death, told much plainer than words could tell, what an exalted position he occupied in the esteem and affections of the community. He was a most devoted son—a model husband and an affectionate brother He leaves an infant daughter, a bereaved wife, a fond mother and sister, with many family connections and friends to weep over his seemingly untimely death.

His christian character was beautifully sublime. He was a devoted Methodist—for a long time a Steward in the Church and Superintendant of the Sabbath School.—About two years ago he organized a Mission Sabbath School several miles in the country, which he attended regularly every Sabbath as long as his health would permit, and even while he was dying he requested his brother in-law to attend to this school. His place in the Church can not be filled.

On last Friday night he was taken suddenly worse and grew worse until it was ascertained about 12 o'clock on Saturday that he could live but a short while. About sun down on Saturday his physician, accompained by his pastor, informed him that he was dying. He said he thought not. His physician assured him that such was the case—he then said,—"It is all right." His pastor then asked him how he felt in view of his approaching death. He replied "I did want to live to fix up some little business matters, but God knows best." The family then came around and he expressed himself fully and freely to them.—He said he had sometimes wished for death, and when asked by his wife how he could wish to leave them, he replied. "So much rest." When asked by his wife and mother what they would do without him.—he said "God will take care of you. When asked by his pastor if he was resigned, he said, "Perfectly,"—If he was ready, he replied. "Ready, ready, ready," and thus he went on giving, some of the sublimest expressions we ever heard. Never have we seen such a peaceful, tranquil, triumphant death, as we witnessed when he died. Whilst we are mourning his early departure, we feel perfectly sure that he is, "Mid the sainted spirits safe on Jesus' breast."

It is impossible to estimate his worth;—his whole character was perfectly beautiful—his life was a scattering of beautiful flowers—they are strewn all along his pathway flowers, whose beauty the accumulated dust of years cannot soil, and whose fragrance will linger in sweetness upon our souls till they are chilled by the atmosphere of death. No changes of season can affect them. Each returning spring will refresh and brighten them by its zephyrs—each summer will increase their fragrance and fullness of beauty—each autumn will but add more gorgeous tints; and the snows and winds of winter will make them, by contrast, all the more beautiful. What though our tears of grief are scattered over them; the sun shine of hope beams upon them and, reflecting its rays through our tear drops, spans the soul with a bow of love and promise

Sometime last fall he had a hemorrhage, after which he sat down and wrote for a short while,—placed what he had written in an envelope and gave it to his wife, extracting from her a promise that she would not read it until he either died, or fully recovered. The morning after his death she opened the envelope, and found the following beautiful poem.

LINES WRITTEN AFTER HAVING A HEMORRHAGE FROM THE LUNGS.

Life bleeding for me as it my path thro' Eden
Led life flowery way. Success had crowned
In many ways my efforts. No dark strife
With a fierce Fate its portent shadow cast
Across the calm blue scope of heaven. And though
Pride often chafed at plain commercial life
It was but transient, for ambitious Hope
Kept ever in my view Fame's gilded dome,
Upon whose highest pinnacle I chose my niche.
For vain conceit had whispered in my ear
That I had Genius to enchant the world.
And I looked forward to the loud applause
Of Nations as a simple thing of time.
Of death I thought but as a fright for those Who have no destiny but dying. Mine
Would come in age, but as a pallid seal
To Honor gained, and Life's long labors done.
Yet I had felt the breath of Azrael's wing.
When from my youthful head he took my father's hand
And from my manhood's arms my only child.
And down the past a little mound of earth,
Troubled with the darkest sorrow of our hearts,
Still stands though veiling in the folds of time.
Of heaven I thought but as distant home.
A place of sweetest rest that I would gain,
When weary of the burdens of the world.
Torn out of thought and bright of hope I moved
Amid the flowers of my way.

At once,
With scarce a rustle in the rose leaves came
A shadowy form, and standing silently
Beside my path way breathed a whispered sigh
As if it loathed its office to perform;
Then laid consumption's ghastly banner on my breast,
Its pallid hide crossed with fatal red.

The sky
Grew dark, the rose leaves withered, as the form
With brow still silently; while I alone
Upon the roadside kneeled to pray for light.
The stunned surprise of sudden shattered hopes,
The faith of self appointed destiny
Still turned my eyes toward the Temple Fame.
Across its all to-dome a spotless cloud
Had drifted, hiding it from view, but lo!
The cloud, unfolding snowy depths, disclosed
The glories of that "House not made with hands,"
And, bending its form so full of tenderness,
I could discern the loved ones "gone before."
And over all I recognized the Form
Whose brow endured Gabbatha's shameful crown,
Whose woe distilled itself in trickling blood
By Cedron's murmuring wave.

As tenderly
As ever mother touched her babe, He bore
Within His arms a little angel form,
With golden hair and blue expressive eyes.
One dimpled hand lay on His willing cheek,
While He bent down to meet the sweet caress,
The other, with that well remembered look,
She kissed and threw the kiss to me.

Then down
I bowed my face and longed to know mine end.
There were sweet to learn all toil and care,
And join the blessed ones beyond the tide;
And still there were sweet beyond compare to wait
Till eventide with loved ones here, and share
Their weal or woe.
Then came a flute like voice,
That thrilled the solemn air—

"Pursue thy way,
Yet humbly walk and watch, and if I come
At midnight, or at noon, be ready."

Thus
I wish to live, life's aims subserved to God;
And each continued day and hour regard
As special gifts to be improved for Him;
To wear the girdle of the world about my loins
So loosely, that a moment will suffice
To break the clasp and lay it down.

This poem so rich, so touching, so sweet, is in beautiful harmony with his daily life. May God bless and comfort, and take care of his heart-broken family, and may God help us all to live as he lived, and die as he died, is the prayer of his pastor.

Personal

BISHOP PIERCE makes this strong point for the Church to consider: "the question is not whether the heathen can be saved without the gospel, but whether we can be saved if we do not give it to them"

The Richmond Advocate says: BISHOP DOGGETT delivered last week his address on the "Progress of Methodism in the 19th Century" at Washington St. church in Petersburg. There was an overflowing house and great interest. Would that every Methodist could hear it!

Rev. J. T. Gibbs was in our office last week in good health and spirits. He was on his return from Wilmington where he had been spending a few days. He represents the revival in the churches in Wilmington to be interesting and extensive. Some needed repairs are being made on the Fifth Street Church building.

Dr. Burkhead, a member of the Board of Missions, had made his arrangements to attend the Annual Meeting in Nashville this week, but he is prevented from doing so on account of the illness of Sister Burkhead. We regret his inability to attend, as his presence would add interest to the occasion, as well as contribute to his pleasure in meeting with the board, and mingling with the officers of the Church in their deliberations upon the great subject of the missionary cause.

The Christian World (German Reformed) suggests a good thing—it is seconded by the Western Methodist: "The first way to commemorate the Centennial, we may suggest, is to secure to the Church a proper circulation of her Church papers. This is by no means a unimportant object. We mean more than an indefinite purpose to secure all the subscribers possible. Let the pastor, the conistory with him, and all the membership aim to put such papers into the hands of every member and family If it cannot be done in the ordinary way, let some systematized and well matured plan of work, and pecuniary aid to such as need it, be inaugurated for this special purpose It would be a step for the Church in activity and efficiency which would mark her history for the century to come."

Religious Intelligence.

The New York East Conference at its recent session declined to admit any members on trial.

The independence of native churches in India is being steadily urged by missionaries and their Societies.

The Grand total of the Sabbath School army of this continent is 6,850,869.

Rev. Alphonse Dupont, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, has taken orders at Syracuse in the Episcopal Church.

The Easter offering at Christ Church, Reformed Episcopal, at Chicago, was twenty-four thousand dollars.

In the Western Christian Advocate of the 16th ult. two thousand accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church are recorded.

Australian Methodism, although but a quarter of a century old, numbers 30,000 members, and 328,000 attendants upon its public services.

England spends £215,000 upon Missions, America £365,000, Germany and Switzerland and Holland, £125,750.

A revival in Amherst College has resulted in the conversion of sixty-three out of three hundered and twenty studeuts, of whom only fifty are unconverted.

The Northern New York Conference, by a unanimous vote, expressed a desire for the continuance of Rev. O. H Warren as editor of the Northern Advocate.

Mr. Moody is expected in Augusta, Ga., the first week in May to labor under the auspices of the Young Men s Christian Association, for ten days in that city.

Lord Garvah was recently baptized into the fellowship of Rev. Mr. Charrington's church, in East London. He is twenty six years old, and gives evidence of genuine conversion.

The president of the Catholic Association of Great Britain, the Duke of Norfolk, calls for subsciptions to aid the persecuted German priests, and heads the paper with $5,000.

A great work of grace is progressing in Louisville, Ky., under the labors of Rev. A B. Simpson. It is proposed to erect a building which will accommodate 15,000 people.

The Church of Mr Spurgeon has 4,878 members, and yet it is not unwieldy, for all the members are Christian workers.

The Presbyterian Synod of Texas has increased, in the last five years, from 41 to 66 ministers, from 79 to 112 churches, and from 1,994 to 4,298 members

At Istanos, an out-station of Broosa, there is such an awakening among the Greeks as has never been known before in the Turkish empire. During the week of prayer there was an attendance of about four hundred at each service.

When last heard from, the members of the Livingstonia mission (Free Church of Scotland) had entered upon the Zambesi river and were preparing to go into the interior

The California Advocate says: Bro. Gibson held his first Chinese love feast on Sunday. Thirty-five persons gave a relation of Christian experience, and thirty persons partook of the communion

It is said that Dr Morgan Dix gets $15,000 a year, the largest salary paid to a Protestant clergyman in New York city Drs. Chapin and John Hall get $10,000 each. Dr. Storrs and Dr. Budington receive the same amount from their Brooklyn congregations.

The Waldensians have now nearly as many communicants outside of the "valleys" as in them. It is, therefore, probable that a general assembly will be formed for all the Presbyterians in Italy, with two inferior synodical church courts—one for the mountains and one for the plains. Thus the Waldenses, divested of all remaining exclusiveness, will be a national church for all Italy.

Among the Educational gifts made at the session of the New York Conference was one of eight thousand dollars by A V. Stout, Esq., one of the lay officers of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, the President of the National Shoe and leather Bank Of this gift $40,000 is to be applied in the endowment of a professorship at the Wesleyan University at Middletown, and $40,000 in the endowment of a professorship in Drew Theological Seminary, New York.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Congress has appropriated $4,000 to the U. S. Branch Mint in Charlotte.

Bald Mountain is growing nervous again—grumbling about hard times, we reckon.

Mr. J. L Webb has sold the Shelby Banner to W. C. Durham, and will resume the practice of law.

An effort is being made to build a parsonage for the Presbyterian pastor in Charlotte. The ladies have it in hand and over $2,000 has been subscribed.

An intoxicated young man in Orange county was left alone in a house, and while the occupants were absent the house caught fire and was burned, the young man dying in the flames.

On Tuesday night of Court week, the Hillsboro ladies will give an entertainment for the benefit of the University at Chapel Hill.

The ticket office at the Hillaboro depot was entered and robbed. A negro who presented one of the stolen tickets at Mebanesville the next day, was arrested, but escaped after reaching the Shops.

It is the purpose of the Roman Catholics, says the Charlotte Observer, to erect a very elegant college building at Woodlawn, Gaston county. The college will be under the control of priests of the Benedictine Order.

Two men while blasting in a mica mine in Buncombe, were killed by an explosion. They were thrown about thirty feet into the air.

The editor of the Morganton Blade says it was a funny sight to see the Hillsboro Academy boys waving their handerchiefs from window and balcony, at supposed pretty girls on the passing train, when in reality there was but one female on board—an aged and very black negress.

The 2d Presbyterian Church in Charlotte has a $1000 organ.

The burnt district in Beaufort has been rebuilt or nearly so.

The law firm of Brem & Osborne Charlotte has been dissolved by mutual consent.

Mr. S. H. Webb is erecting a law office in Durham and will practice there some time in that town.

Capt. Oaksmith, of Beaufort, is building a fast sailing yacht to carry passengers to the Centennial.

In Newbern the Clyde and Old Dominion Lines are having a lively and spirited competition for freight. Their rates are very low.

At the next session of the Legislature there will be a petition for the restoration of the town charter of Beaufort which was repealed by the last General Assembly.

It is said that the Masonic Lodge room being fitted up in the second story of Blackwell & Co's. hotel in Durham, will be the finest in the State.

The Beaufort Eagle is the name of a paper just started in Beaufort, B. L. Berry, Esq., editor. We cheerfully place it on our exchange list and wish it success.

This Centennial year appears to be a good time for newspapers. They are springing up all over the country.—DURHAM PLANT. And "going up," too. Bro. Green.

The SOUTHERN HOME says Charlotte has never had a more efficient government than at present. The city debt has been reduced by the present administration $15,000.

Rev. S. Taylor Martin who was a captain of a Battery during the war, will deliver the memorial address at Charlotte on the 10th inst.

In 1835, says Jas. Stewart who was born near Davidson College, there was not enough rain in that section between 4th March and 15th October to wet the ground.

The Alnen Cruse property in Charlotte, desirable and valuable, was sold last week under execution on a security debt.

The Fire Department of Charlotte will parade on the 20th May: the students of C. & I. are invited to join in the procession and Col. Thomas to do the mounting.

A millionaire Jones has died in England, leaving his property to American Joneses. We know a Jones: haven't heard whether he will get anything or not.

The cherry blossoms on Cherry Mountain, in Cleaveland county, have all been killed by the frost. Those living thereabouts will not be cheerynuff this summer.

The tax of $1500 levied upon the A. & N. C. R. R. by the Commissioners of Carteret, collection of which was restrained for a time by injunction, will be collected.

The press of the State pays tribute to the talents and character of Edwin W. Fuller. The Wilmington Review says that had he lived and followed the bent of his poetical genius, he might have become the Milton of America.

The Oxford Torch-Light calls the captain of the Oxford Hook and Ladder Company, "a born salamander." Now call him a lizzard and see what he will do. By the way, Bro. Davis, the reptile known as a salamander, a species of lizzard, is not proof against fire.

Concord is ecstatic over her new Court House, and the SUN makes it pleasant for those who are in trouble, as follows: "So one and all who have business next July, with His Honor, will have the honor of being tried and found wanting in one of the nicest Court Houses in the State."

The Beaufort Eagle says: "A large whale was captured near the Light House six miles east of Beaufort, a few days ago which will yield over two thousand gallons of oil. This sea monster was so large that in getting it ashore to the beach, it grounded on the outer reef in ten feet water. The bone is seven feet long, and the entire length of the whale seventy feet."

A contented editor is Bro. Yates, of the Charlotte Democrat, who says; We certainly appreciate the good opinion and good feeling of the author of a communication in yesterday's Observer suggesting our name for Congress in this district, but we beg permission to say that we would not exchange the Democrat Printing office for any office within the gift of the people or Government.

The announcement of the death of Mrs. Yates, mother of Rev. E A. Yates and the Editor of the Charlotte Democrat was incorrect. The announcement was made by the foreman of the Democrat, in the absence of its editor. She was very ill, but is convalescent.

The Concord Register says: Mr John W. Bostain brought to our office the other day some very fine specimens of gold, from the Indy mine in Stanly county. One specimen, a nugget which weighed 150 dwts., was as fine as we ever saw. This was the product of six day's work of two men, Messrs Ritchie and Almond, who now have control of the mine.

The Wilmington Journal in speaking of the death of Edwin W. Fuller, says: "It is an affecting incident of his death bed that, recollecting but a few minutes before his end that he had neglected to write out an anthem composed by request for Memorial Day, he proceeded to dictate three verses, when supervening weakness rendered him unable to go on.

Wilmington STAR: Alexander Sprunt, Esq., the British Vice Consul at this port, having received six months' leave of absence from his post, for a visit to Europe, by direction of the Earl of Derby, Her Britannic Majesty's secretary of State for Foreign affairs, Mr. James Sprunt has assumed charge of the office, as acting British Vice Consul, during his absence.

Asheville Pioneer: About twelve months ago Thos Sumner and a man named Alley attempted to arrest a man named Lewis in Henderson county, whom they charged with robbing a safe in South Carolina. Lewis resisted and was shot, it is alleged by Sumner. The wounded man died of his injury in less than twelve months from the day of the assault. Sumner was arrested and gave bond for his appearance at the present term of Hendersou Court; but upon his petition the case was removed to McDowell for trial.

A correspondent writes the Concord REGISTER that Mr. Nelson Hagler, a worthy citizen of Cabarrus county, who lives about seven miles south of Concord was badly burned on the 15th inst., about 3 o'clock, A M, by the explosion of a lamp which had been burning all night. A little son had cut off two fingers the day before, and this rendered much attention to him necessary that night. The boy aroused his father about 3 o'clock, and the blaze was found coming from the top of the chimney As Mr. Hagler was about taking hold of it, it exploded, causing fearful burns upon his neak, breast, face, side and arms.—He is not yet out of danger.

Just after Christmas of 1870, I was laid up with a obstinate Cough, together with Spitting of Blood, accompanied with some fever—from the joint effects of which I was greatly weakened, and became rapidly reduced. Following the best advice I could get, I tried various medicines, but none apparently done much good, leaving me low spirited enough. I made up my mind at last to try Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, and procured some. I used it carefully as directed, and gradually got rid of my complaint.—Wm. A. C. Pyle, Tamaron, Perry County, Wis.

Absalom Matthews, was born December the 27th 1795 was married to Amittia Poindexter September the 30th 1839 and departed this life near Red Bend, Yadkin county N C August the 19th 1875

He professed the religion of Jesus Christ and connected himself with the Methodist E. Church South in May 1861 and was baptized by Rev. Jones Reid was appointed a class leader to that year and was a consistent, faithful and consistent member of the church and was at the time of his death a member of the Quarterly Conference from which he departed to be with Christ.

For quite a number of years he served the circuit faithfully as exhorter and Steward, and his warm, earnest faithful exhortations will never be forgotten by those who heard them. He was a man of unblemished character—of unsuspected piety—a true christian God, and his neighbors and friends knew it well, hence his influence and effective exhortations.

Mr Matthews was a great friend to the Temperance cause, was always strongly opposed to the use of spirituous liquors as a beverage, and many were the rebukes he made against the great sin of intemperance—His wholesome advice will be much missed.

As a citizen of the county, Absalom Matthews was highly respected by all for his innate qualities of both head and heart. He was in the opinion of all who knew him a just and honest man.

He was for many years a member of the Warden Court for his county and was also an acting Justice of the Peace for about twenty years, and during that time there was only one appeal from his judgment and that judgment was confirmed by a higher court.

He was a man of great hospitality, and his home was embellished by the Preacher's home—and was understood by preachers and people of all denominations as many ministers in the N. C. Conference who will, when they see this short notice say: "God bless the memory of Absalom Matthews. For being at his house I knew him well, and all that appears in this notice is true and much more might to be said."

He died a triumphant death.

When on his death bed he was asked if he had any doubt that he was going to rest, he said he had no doubt at all and when he could scarcely speak he was heard to say "Glory, glory, holy holy." During his illness he possessed a sweet disposition.

Mr. Matthews leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their loss but their loss is beyond doubt his gain

THE STAR AMMONIATED SOLUBLE PHOSPHATE.

THE BEST FERTILIZER IN THE WORLD.

We have concluded, after mature deliberation, to sell

THE STAR PHOSPHATE

again this season for 40 pounds of middling Cotton delivered at our depot before November 1st, 1876, or for $60.-50, payable on or before May 1st, 1876. We now assure our friends that on account of the low price of Guano at this time, we do not expect to make much money on the Guano, but in consideration of past favors, we are willing to run the risk of making a small profit this season. Besides it seems to be the universal opinion among Farmers that the price of Guano ought to be governed by the price of cotton.

THE STAR

still retains its high and unadulterated standard. We sell nothing but

FIRST-CLASS FERTILIZERS.

We are also agents for

MAPES' NITROGENIZED

SUPERPHOSPHATE OF LIME.

This is comparatively a new Fertiliser to our Farmers, but by calling at our Store for a pamphlet with testimonials, Farmers will soon know what we are selling.

We refer to such men, who have used our Fertilizers, as

B J Ivey, Wake county,	T C Robinson, Wake county,
O R Rand, "	John Avera, Johnston county
G R Alford, "	David Adams, "
E Stewart, Harnett county,	Dr J T Leach, "
J A Johnson, "	John L Morgan, "
O S Poe, Chatham county,	C C Manu, Orange county,
Elias Herriss, "	R H Atwater, " and to many others whose experience is very flattering.

McCallum, Wyckoff & Hope,

RALEIGH, N. C.

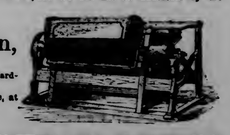
At the N. C. State Fair, 1874, the "Hope Engine" received the GOLD MEDAL, as the best Steam Engine for general use, and the SILVER MEDAL as the best Vertical Engine.

We refer to the following parties, who have our HOPE ENGINE in use: Wm. G. Upchurch, of Williamson, Upchurch & Thomas, Raleigh, N. C., Col. A. W. Stanford, Raleigh, N. C., Messrs. Farmer & Co., Goldsboro, N. C., W. S. Bogg, Granville county, N. C., Messrs. D. H. Riggan & Co., Plow Manufacturers, Forestville, N. C., Messrs. Hassell & Wall, Brick Manufacturers, Raleigh, N. C.

We guarantee our HOPE ENGINE equal to the best made North, and we will not be undersold by the manufacturers of any FIRST CLASS ENGINE.

We manufacture

The Carolina Cotton Gin,



which we guarantee equal to the best Gin made. It was awarded the Silver Medal, as the best Gin made in the State, at the N. C. State Fair, 1874.

OUR POWER COTTON PRESS

has no superior. We refer to A. F. Page, Cary, N. C., and J. T. Mial, Master of Raleigh Grange, No. 17 who have our POWER PRESS in use.

We manufacture the celebrated "SUNNY SOUTH" PLOW, and several others, which we will sell at very low figures.

We manufacture SAW MILLS, MILL GEARING, SHAFTING PULLEYS and MILL MACHINERY of every kind.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS FOR SALE.

The claim is made with entire confidence for these waters that as a curative agent of many forms of CHRONIC DISEASE they have no superior among the medicinal waters of the WORLD. Especially and emphatically is this claim made for them in the peculiar DISEASES OF WOMEN, in AFFECTIONS of the KIDNEYS and BLADDER, and in derangements of the DIGESTIVE and BILIARY ORGANS. In GOUT and RHEUMATISM, dependent on URIC ACID in the blood, they have given the most marked and decided relief. In CHRONIC, INTERMITTENT, and REMMITTENT FEVER, and all diseases attributable to miasmatic influence they act often like a charm. In SCROFULA they have given a degree of relief which might well induce sufferers from that disease to give it a trial. They are used with advantage as in warm weather.

The claim thus made for these waters is vouched for by some of the MOST DISTINGUISHED MEDICAL MEN OF THE COUNTRY, both North and South, as well as by numerous reported case from the most unquestionable sources.

Testimonials sent to any address on application. These waters are put up in case of one dozen half-gallon bottles, at $6 per case.

Busy Little Fingers.

Most lovers of the beautiful have read the following lines on busy little fingers, but none will object to reading them again:

Busy little fingers,
Everywhere they go;
Busy little fingers,
The sweetest that I know.

Now into my work-box,
All the buttons finding,
Tangling up the knitting,
Every spool unwinding.

Now into the basket,
Where the keys are hidden,
So mischievous looking,
Knowing it forbidden.

Then in mother's tresses,
Now her neck enfolding,
With such sweet caresses,
Keeping off the scolding.

Darling little fingers,
Never, never still;
Make them, Heavenly Father
One day to Thy will.

LESSON VI.—MAY 7, 1876.

SUBJECT: "The Power of Jesus' Name." Acts iii. 12-26.

Commit to Memory Verses 9, 10.

GOLDEN TEXT—"There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts iv. 12.

CENTRAL TRUTH—Christ's is the only saving name.

READING LESSON—Acts iii. 12-26.

HOME READINGS—Monday, Acts iii. 12-26
Tuesday, Luke xxiii. 1-24
Wednesday, Luke xxiii 25-38
Thursday, Luke xxiii 39-56
Friday, 1 Cor. xv. 1-20.
Saturday, Luke xiii. 1-9.
Sunday, John iii. 9-17

ANALYSIS.

1. PETER'S EXPLANATION.—He declares (1) that the lame man was healed not by the power of the apostles (verse 12), but (2) that God had glorified Jesus, whom the Jews had rejected and killed (verses 13-15); (3) that faith in Jesus had cured the lame man (verse 16.) II. PETER'S EXHORTATION.—He admits the ignorance of those who crucified Jesus, and exhorts them to "repent and be converted" (verses 17-19.) He shows that Moses and all the prophets spoke of Jesus and his work.

QUESTIONS.

1. What led Peter to address the multitude?
2. What is meant by glorifying Jesus?—Verse 13.
3. Whom had they chosen in his place?—V. 14.
4. Who is the Prince of Life? who killed him?—Verse 15.
5. How was the lame man healed?—Verse 16.
6. How far did Peter excuse the people?—V. 17.
7. What had God done for Jesus?—Verse 18.
8. What were the people exhorted to do?—V. 19.
9. For what purpose? what times were coming?—Verse 19.
10. Where had Jesus gone?—Verses 20, 21.
11. To whom did Moses refer?—Verse 22.
12. What will become of those who refuse to hear?—Verse 23.
13. What encouragement did Peter offer the people?—Verse 25.
14. Who were first called to believe on Jesus?—Verse 26.
15. What does Jesus now call us to put away?
16. What is the Golden Text?—Read Deut. xviii. 15, 18, 19; Gen. xviii. 2; xxii 18; Matt. x. 5, 6.

BIBLE-CLASS.

1. What is the connecting link between this and the last Lesson?
2. What does "name," in this Lesson, mean?
3. What evidences are here given of Christ's glory?—Verses 13, 16
4. What had the prophets foretold concerning Christ?—Verse 18.
5. What is the difference between a prediction and a decree?
6. What did Peter promise to those who would repent?—Verse 19.
7. What is meant by "times of refreshing?"
8. What does the promise in verses 20, 21 mean?
9. What did Moses promise?—Verse 22.
10. Of what did all the prophets speak?—Verse 24.
11. What did God promise Abraham?
12. What three precious facts are stated in verse 26?
13. God "raised up Jesus;" what does this mean?
14. What is meant by "power of Jesus' name?"
15. Have you felt its power?

LESSON HYMN, 155.

GOD COUNTS.—A brother and sister were playing in the dinner-room when their mother set a basket of cakes on the tea-table and went out

"How nice they look," said the boy, reaching to take one.

His sister earnestly objected, and even drew back his hand repeating that it was against their mother's direction.

"She did not count them,' said he.

"But perhaps God did," answered the sister.

So he withdrew from the temptation, and sitting down, seemed to meditate.

"You are right," said he, looking at her with a cheerful yet serious air 'God does count, for the Bible says, The hairs of our heads are all numbered."

Rural and Domestic.

Household Hints.

We give some excellent recipes in the following order:

Immersing a growing plant in water of 120 degrees will clean it of lice and other insects, and hurt not the plant.

If you buy carpets for durability, choose small figures.

Naturalists say that a single swallow will devour six thousand flies in one day.

Butter will remove tar spots. Soap and water will afterward take out the grease stain.

To remove paint splashed upon window panes, use hot solution of soda and a soft flannel.

To clean a browned porcelain kettle boil peeled potatoes in it. The porcelain will be rendered nearly as white as when new.

A strong solution of carbolic acid and water, poured into holes, kills all the ants it touches and the survivors immediately take themselves off.

Wet the spots of iron rust on muslin or white dress goods thoroughly with lemon juice, then lay in the hot sun to dry. Repeat the same if the color is not removed by one application. When dry, rinse in clear, cold water. Lemon juice cannot be used on colored goods, as it will take out printed colors as well as stains. It will remove all kinds of stains from white goods.

Dusting articles of steel, after they have been throughly cleaned, with unslacked lime, will preserve them from rust. The coils of piano wires thus sprinkled will keep from rust many years. Table knives which are not in constant use ought to be put in a case in which sifted quicklime is placed, about eight inches deep. They should be plunged to the top of the blades, but the lime should not touch the handles.

The white of an egg has proved, of late, the most efficacious remedy for burns. Seven or eight successive applications of this substance soothe pain and effectually exclude the burn from the air. This simple remedy seems preferable to collodion, or even cotton. Extraordinary stories are told of the healing properties of new oil, which is easily made from the yolks of hens' eggs. The eggs are first boiled hard, and the yolks are then removed, crushed, and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred until the whole substance is just on the point of catching fire, when the yolk will yield nearly two teaspoonfuls of oil. It is in general use among the colonists of South Russia as a means of curing cuts, bruises, and scratches

GROUND that has been thoroughly subsoiled to the depth of twelve inches, will absorb four inches of water. This is more than usually falls at one time, and thus the hill-sides seldom wash away which have been deeply plowed, and the level land shows no surface water.

PEANUT oil, first made in the South during the war, is not in large demand. It supplies the place of almond and olive oils for various uses, and is lower in price, retains its purity and flavor for a long time, and is less susceptible to the effect of light than olive oil. The oil is extracted entirely from the meat of the nut by pressure, the refuse being used as cattle-feed or a fertilizer.

I HAVE seen farmers plowing or cultivating corn at the end of a half or whole day's heavy rain. The land will not recover from one such working in five years, if indeed in ten. I would not have my land served so, if a man would work for nothing, and pay me largely besides. And yet I hit upon another evil. The sassafras, sedge, briars, persimmon, and all filth, could have easily been kept out when the land was first cleared. Now, one generation can not eradicate them. Those grubs have been tormented by the sprouting hoe so many years, that many of their roots are as large as some heads, called "big heads," and have most as many brains in them. Many people take the hardest way in the world to live. My old grandmother used to say that "lazy folks take the most pains." A tenth part of the labor bestowed in fighting these noxious things would have exterminated them fifty years ago. Now, coming generations have got to fight or die.—and I am inclined to think they will have to do both.—D. B. Lawton, in Knoxville Chronicle.

A Widely Applicable Remedy.

Few remedies are applicable to such a wide range of disorders as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and this not because it has special properties adapted to the cure of each—such a pretense would be manifestly absurd—but on account of its wonderfully balancing effect upon the general tone of the system, and its alterative action upon the organs of nutrition, secretion and discharge. Besides its well known properties as a remedy for intermittent and remittent fevers, dyspepsia, constipation torpidity of the liver, general debility, urinary and uterine ailments, it invariably proves to be highly serviceable in overcoming anemia, hypochondria, rheumatism, dysentery, and many other disorders and diseases originating in poverty or impurity of the blood, nervous weakness or overexcitement, or an imperfect performance of the physical functions.

Symptoms of Catarrh.

Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling into the throat, sometimes purulent, watery, acrid, thick and tenacious mucous, purulent, mucus purulent, nasally, pulsating, offensive breath. In others, a dryness, dry, watery, weak, or inflamed eyes, ringing in ears, deafness, hawking and coughing to clear the throat, of scabs from ulcerative affected nasal lining, offensive breath, impaired smell and taste, dizziness, mental depression, hacking cough, etc. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time.

When applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, and accompanied with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, as constitutional treatment, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy presents perfect cures of the worst cases of Catarrh no matter of how many years' standing. This thorough course of double action exhibits the only scientific, rational, safe, and successful manner of treating this odious disease that has ever been offered to the afflicted.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. ATKINSON.

NUMBER 6.

NEW HOPE CIRCUIT—JAMES O'KELLY—EDMUND HENLY—T. L. DOUGLASS.

In 1780 the eighth Conference was held in Baltimore, also one in Virginia. Several things of importance were resolved upon at these Conferences; such as changing the preachers at the end of six months,—the appointment of trustees to hold church property—licensing exhorters—that the preachers should rise at four o'clock in the morning—that preachers' wives be allowed a salary equal to their husbands ($80)—that quarterly meetings be held on Saturdays and Sundays—that the distilling of liquor be discontinued. Some of these regulations have passed away, others remain in force yet. I simply mention them that the reader may note when they came into existence.

The New Hope Circuit

was formed in 1778. Its formation indicates the advancement of Methodism up into the middle part of the State. The exact boundaries of this circuit are not clearly defined either in the Minutes or history of Methodism. From all the fragmentary hints I have been able to gather, I suppose its scope took in Granville, the Northern part of Wake and Chatham, parts of Orange and Person. I find the traces of Methodism in these counties at an early date. Such as a Conference being held at the residence of Edmund Faber in Granville—the visit of Bishop Asbury in 1870 through Wake, Chatham and Orange, when on a mission to quiet the excitement among the preachers because they were not then allowed to administer the sacraments. Jesse Lee states that Asbury, while on this mission, went the nigh Roanoke, Tar River and New Hope circuits to see and reconcile the preachers. Another author states, "he passed through Cumberland (Northern part), Chatham, Orange and Wake counties." One gives the circuit (New Hope), the other the counties included in the circuit, all of which indicates the geographical scope of New Hope. This circuit, however, may have taken in a part of Person. This is probable from the fact that the Minutes state that Edmund Henly was a native of Person county, N. C., who joined the Conference in 1808, which fact implies the existence of Methodist Societies in the county many years prior to that date. New Hope disappears from the Minutes in 1797, and Haw River appears on the list, and I suppose, therefore, that New Hope was absorbed into the Haw River circuit. I have now traced the course of Methodism from Halifax into Franklin and Warren, thence into Granville, Wake, Chatham, Orange and Person. Let us now notice some of the pioneer preachers, who laid the foundation of Methodism in this increasing scope of country. One of the first pioneers in this section was O'Kelly.

James O'Kelly

began first to preach in Virginia as a local preacher. His name appears on the Minutes as early as 1778. Asbury met him for the first time in North Carolina, and describes him as "a warm hearted, good man," and "very affecting" in his preaching. O'Kelly was an impulsive Irishman, and one of the most popular evangelists of his day. He preached and labored a great deal in North Carolina, and did much to plant and establish Methodism on New Hope, Tar River, Roanoke, Bertie, Banks, Anson, Bladen and Mattamuskeet circuits. During his fifteen years service among the Methodists, he was most of this time an effective Presiding Elder. He was a prominent member of the first General Conference held in 1792. At this Conference he offered this resolution: "After the Bishop appoints the preachers at Conference to their several circuits, if any one thinks himself injured by the appointment, he shall have the liberty to appeal to Conference and state his objections, and if the Conference approve his objections the Bishop shall appoint him to another circuit." After hearty debating of nearly a week, John Dickens moved to divide the question thus:

"1. Shall the Bishop appoint the preachers to the circuits?

2. Shall the preachers be allowed an appeal?"

Thus Dickens shrewdly cut the question knot by dividing the question and thereby exposing its absurdity—The first carried unanimously, the second soon followed. Next morning [illegible] Conference with a few other [illegible] and "set off," says Jesse Lee, "for Virginia, taking their saddle bags, great coats and other bundles on their arms, walking on foot to the place where they left their horses which was about 12 miles from town, (Baltimore.) I stood and looked after them as they went off, and observed to one of the preachers that I was sorry to see the old man go off in that way, for I was persuaded that he would not be upon long, but would try to be head of some party." So it came to pass. O'Kelly, soon after this, organized his new church, which he first called "Republican Methodists," to make it chime in with the political popular sentiment of that day. After a few years he changed the name of his party to "The Christian Church," by which name they call themselves to this day. This is the origin of the O'Kelyite church—the first schism in American Methodism—which has proved to be a stupendous failure. The history and eventful life of O'Kelly closed on the 16th of Oct. 1826, aged 92 years.

Edmund Henly,

as I have already stated, was a native of Person county, N. C. "He was admitted," says the Minutes, on trial in 1803, at the Conference held at the Olive Branch, and received his station for Bottetourt; 1804 he traveled in Greenbrier; 1805 in Orange; 1806 in Yadkin circuit; in 1807 in Trent and Goshen, and in 1808 he was stationed in Guilford circuit, where he ended his labors and sorrows together on the 26th of August, at the house of Robert Gilbraith, after an illness of about two weeks, said to be nervous fever.—For some time before his death he appeared to have some intimations on his mind that the time of his departure was not far distant. A few weeks prior to his sickness he went home to his father's, erected a stand at the graveyard, and to his old friends and acquaintances preached his own funeral sermon and after his death he was carried home and buried there.—He was an elder in the Church of God; was about thirty years old, and had professed sanctification and the full assurance of hope. In deportment and conversation, he was very serious, circumspect in his walk, inclined to dejection—manifested great patience in his sickness, and although at times by reason of his fever, he was delirious, yet he would shout and pray, exhort and praise God to the last. Thus triumphantly did our beloved brother Henly leave the church militant to join the glorified saints above."

Thomas L. Douglass

was a native also of Person county, born in the year 1781—a year made memorable by the capture of Cornwallis and the British army at York Town, Va. Mr. Douglass was eminently useful in his day and took rank with such men as Jesse Lee, Philip Bruce, John Early and other Methodist Itinerants of marked distinction. "He was from his youth a member of the M. E. Church, and for more than forty years a minister of the Gospel. He joined the Virginia Conference in 1801, and in his second year he traveled the mountainous country of our State included in what was then called the Swauino circuit, which commenced at the Swannanoa Gap in the Blue Ridge and extended out Westward into Buncombe county. This circuit was then embraced in the Salisbury District. His third appointment was on the Guilford circuit, and his fifth on the Bertie circuit. He traveled as Presiding Elder on the Salisbury District in 1807, and the next year he traveled nearly the same ground, the name of the District being changed to Yadkin. In 1809, he was appointed to the James River District, Va., and the year following he was the station ed preacher in the city of Richmond. During this year he was transferred to the Tennessee Conference and appointed to the city of Nashville. In this Western field he spent the larger part of his whole life in building up Methodism. He was a member of the first delegated General Conference held in America.

He was a successful preacher, his sermons being "eloquent and powerful." Dr. M'Ferrin in his sketch of Mr. Douglass says: "His form was erect, his carriage grave and dignified. His features were symmetrical, and his countenance benevolent. Indeed, he was very prepossessing in his personal appearance, and could not fail to attract the attention and command the respect of his audience as soon as he ascended the pulpit. His voice was clear, full and melodious, and modulated to the highest perfection. His articulation was distinct, and his tone and emphasis natural, rising above art. He was, in a word, a fine specimen as a pulpit orator." "His death bed scene," says the same author, "was one of triumph—of complete victory. He died on Sunday morning, the 9th of April 1843, at his own residence in Tenn." North [illegible] Methodism claims Thomas Logan Douglass as one of her honored native children. He was born on her soil, nourished at her breast, and built up his fruitful manhood while itinerating over her fields of spiritual culture. He labored in the difficult and hard work of laying the foundation of N. C. Methodism which has grown up since into a spiritual temple; one of whose corner stones now rests upon the shores of the sea in the East, while the other is firmly planted on the rock built mountains of the West, embracing in its ample walls a hundred thousand worshippers.

Thus we have seen, that two of our pioneer preachers were born in Person county, and I may state here for the information of those not very familiar with our history, that Rev. Robert Paine, D. D., now the senior Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, was also born in that county.

Joking at Relics.

The Pope, says the Christian Intelligencer, will not permit any irreverent jesting about relics; and in this he is wise after the wisdom of the world, since it were an easy transition from joking at their expense to joking at the expense of the papacy itself, together with its briefs and bulls and syllabuses. In illustration of the Pope's intolerance of this sort of thing, Evangelical Christendom gives an account of a curious case which recently came before the Inquisition at Rome. It seems that the Bishop of Cracow, Monsignor Galeski (who, by the way, strenuously opposed the bull of papal infallibility,) while showing the Archduke Charles Louis, when on a visit to Cracow, the relics contained in the cathedral of that city, laughingly remarked, as he exhibited the relics of the cross: "To believe its authenticity we would need to presuppose another miracle like that of the loaves, as all the bits of wood said to be taken from the original one would make a cross as high as the cathedral of Cracow." The archduke, shocked at such sacrilegious levity in the mouth of a bishop, replied: "But have you no papal brief accrediting its authenticity?" "Briefs and bulls in abundance," answered the Bishop, "but your grace must remember that in those days the Popes were not infallible." The Pope is reputed to be fond of jokes, but this one was not at all to his taste, and when Monsignor Galeski came to Rome recently, seeking advancement to another bishopric, he met with a cold reception, and was plainly told that he must first make good his cause before the Holy Office. He accordingly thought it most expedient to take his departure, leaving his vicar behind to answer for him. The probability is that he will wait some time before he gets the bishopric that he solicited.

He that loseth wealth, loseth much; he that loseth friends, loseth more; but he who loseth his soul loseth all.

Results of the Church Debt System.

The first result, perhaps, is the extinguishment of all beneficence. The Church debt is the apology for denying all appeals for aid from all the greater or smaller charities. A Church sitting in the shadow of a great debt is "not at home" to callers. They do not pay the debt, but they owe the money, and they are afraid that they shall be obliged to pay it. The heathen must take care of themselves, the starving must go without bread, the widow and the fatherless must look to the God of the widow and fatherless, the sick must pine, and the poor children grow up in vagabondage, because of this awful Church debt.

Again, a Church debt is a scarecrow to all new comers. A stranger taking up his residence in any town looks naturally for a Church without a debt. He has a horror of debt of any sort, perhaps, and, as he had no responsibility for the Church debts he finds, he does not propose to assume any. So he stays away from the debt-ridden Church, and the very means that were adopted to make the edifice attractive, become, naturally and inevitably, the agents of repulsion.

Still again, Church debts are intolerable burdens to their ministers. They must "draw," in order that the debt may be paid. If they do not "draw," they must leave, to make place for a man who will. The yearly deficit is an awful thing for a sensitive minister to contemplate, and puts him under a constant and cruel spur, which, sometimes swiftly and some times slowly, wears out his life.—Dr. Holland, in Scribner.

A Perfect Day.

The earth is wrapped in a dream of bliss,
In a rest complete;
And the touch of the air is like a kiss,
Comforting and sweet.

And the tiny creatures are singing low
As a lullaby;
And the watching silence doth stir and glow
As the wind creeps by.

And there is the sun's own mantle flung
On the chestnut-tops,
And yonder are tangled rainbows hung—

And over the things so soon to die
Is a gentler law,
A hush of peace, and a tenderer sky
Than the summer saw.

Open the windows wide to-day
Where a soul may dwell,
In the heart of a palace grand and gay,
Or a prison cell.

O look! ye happy, till pleasure grows
To a noble thing;
Till ye bring your joy, as the amber flows,
For an offering.

And look, ye weary, till grief and pain
Transfigured shine:
Rejoice for the crimson glory's gain,
The holiest sign.

O mourn ye never, that hope is lost,
That rest delays;
They are after summer and after frost,
These sweetest days.

Often and often will skies be gray
And hearts be sad;
But the Lord hath made us a perfect day—
Let us be glad!

—Carl Spencer, in Christian Union.

Injuries of the Brain

Delicate as the organization of the brain must be, it is surprizing to read of the hard knocks it can bear, not only without injury, but even to its advantage. One man who lost half his brain through suppuration of the skull preserved his intellectual faculties to the day of his death; and the brains of soldiers have been known to carry bullets without apparent inconvenience, and to undergo operation for the extraction of the foreign bodies without loss of power. A physican who was afflicted with an abnormal cerebral growth which pressed upon the cavities of the brain, so as to paralyze one side of his body and render him speechless, retained possession of his reasoning and calculating powers until he died. One of three brothers, all idiots, after receiving a severe injury on the head, gained his senses, and lives to be a clever barrister. A stable boy of dull capacity, and subject to fits, had his wits sharpened by the kick of a horse, which necessitated the abstraction of a portion of his brain; and no less a personage than Pope Clement VI. owed the improvement of his memory to a slight concussion of the brain. On the other hand, it is a fact that the brains of persons with thoroughly disordered minds, as a rule present no abnormal appearance after death, which is not to be wondered at, Dr. Wynter declares, when it is found that symptoms of a disordered brain are often produced by a very slight alteration in the constitution of the blood.—Chamber's Journal.

Dr. Wentworth, editor of the Ladies Repository, estimates that there have been admitted into the traveling connection of the Methodist Episcopal Church in ninety years 18,000 preachers, of whom 4,000 permanently located, 2,800 died, 1,000 withdrew or were expelled, 1,000 went with the Church, South, and that 9,500 are still living.

Anecdote of Dr. Fisk

Forty years ago the Calvinistic divines of New England were shy about asking Arminian preachers into their pulpits. They used, however, to invite Dr. Fisk to lecture on temperance. On one occasion the doctor went to fulfill an appointment of this kind in a rural town of staid old Connecticut, in the vicinity of Hartford, where the congregation had been accustomed to the ministrations of one man for the best part of half a century, and who thought their minister the chief light of the century. The doctor, just then inaugurated as president of the new University of Middletown, was the guest of the good person on Saturday night, and the arrangement was for him to lecture on the absobing topic of those days—temperance—in the afternoon, at the Baptist church, and in the evening at the Congregational. Meanwhile nothing was said as to how he should occupy the usual hour of service on Sunday morning. The settled preacher was charmed with his Methodist guest, his polished manners, his intelligence, and ready power of conversation on all possible topics. They conversed together on Saturday evening, and Sunday morning till the bells rung at the old orthodox hour, half past ten, for church. Still nothing had been said to Dr. Fisk about preaching. At bell-toll they started together for the "meeting house." As they entered the portal the preacher was called aside by one of his deacons, and, after a hurried consultation with a few of the chief men, returned to Dr. Fisk and said:

"I am sorry, sir, I did not last evening ask you to preach to-day. My deacons say the people are anxious to hear you."

"I can preach if you desire it," said the doctor in reply.

"But you have no sermon with you."

"We Methodist preachers usually carry our sermons in our heads."

"Well, sir, if you could preach on such short notice, and would not deem [illegible] us very much[illegible]"

"I can try," said Fisk.

And try he did, and preach he did, one of his most eloquent discourses, and wound up with a peroration that dissolved the whole audience in tears. Turning suddenly round as he ended, he asked the preacher to close the services. Tears were running down the good man's cheeks, and with convulsive voice and sobs and gestures he burst out:

"O no, sir I no, sir, I can't. Please, sir, please excuse me. You close."

After prayer he announced that Dr. Fisk would lecture on temperance in the Baptist church in the afternoon, and deliver the same lectnre in his church in evening, still wedded to the idea that the doctor had a manuscript prepared for the occasion; whereas the fertile, full charged orator spoke for an hour and a half in the afternoon, and as long in the evening, without repeating himself, or tiring the hundreds that hung breathlessly upon his strong thoughts and mellifluous periods.—Dr. Wentworth, in Ladies Repository.

Spurgeon says: "If you wish to ruin your throats, you can speedily do so; but if you wish to preserve them, note what is now laid before you. I have often compared the voice to a drum. If the drummer should always strike in one place on the head of his drum, the skin would soon wear into a hole; but how much longer it would have lasted him if he had varied his thumping, and had used the entire surface of the drum head! So it is with a man's voice. If he uses always the same tone, he will wear a hole in that part of the throat which is most exercised in pronouncing that monotone, and very soon he will suffer from bronchitis. I have heard surgeons affirm that Dissenting bronchitis differs from the Church of England article. There is an ecclesiastical twang which is much admired in the Establishment—a sort of steeple-in the throat grandeur—an aristocratic, theological, parsonic, supernatural, infra human mouthing of language and rolling over of words."

The Southern Home says about Theological Seminaries: "The last Presbyterian General Assembly appointed a Committee consisting of Rev. Drs. B. M. Smith, Gen. Howe, C. A. Stillman, Stuart Robinson, B. M. Palmer and J. L. Kirkpatrick, to meet at Charlotte, N. C., on the 19th of April, 1876, to report upon what changes may be necessary in the Seminary Curriculum to make the training more thorough and efficient.—Rev Dr. Smith is Chairman of the Committee. Only he and Dr. Howe met at the appointed time. The Chairman favors non limitation as to time in the Seminary, and a high standard for ministerial qualification. The earnest, diligent student, apt to learn, may complete his course in two years; while one less bright or less studious, may not be able to pass the rigid examination required, with less than a four years' preparation. Dr. Smith favors thoroughness of scholarship and not length of time in the Seminary. His report will elicit much discussion in the General Assembly at Savannah."

Queen Elizabeth.

In Elizabeth the responsibility of a great ruler predominated over her weaker inclinations. To use her own language on another occasion, she could in her own nature dispense with severity as well "as any power that liveth," where error had been committed, "not out of lack of duty but of circumspection;" but she could not allow "her kingdom and the lives of her subjects to be dallied with for God had given her these upon other conditions; and whilst He vouchsafeth to continue us over them, we will not be accusable for anything within our power to perform." Passer solitarius, as Cecil calls her, and as all great rulers and great thinkers must be, the melancholy observable at the close of her life had more or less taken possession of her long before the fall of Essex. How could it be otherwise? She had a great task before her: formidable enemies on every side; a kingdom of small dimensions, assailed by the Scotch and the Irish nearer home; by the Spaniard, the Pope, and the Jesuit abroad. In her fearlessness, in her confidence in God and her people, she never fenced herself round with guards or ramparts. The most accessible persons in her kingdom, her ears, like her palace, were open to all comers; she trusted her safety and her life to her subjects, reposing implicit confidence in their loyalty.

If she reaped ingratitude, where she had shown the greatest indulgence—if in the man the most boasted of devotion to herself and her service she had found treason and disloyalty—is it so surprising that the retrospect should sometimes have filled her with melancholy? But that to the very last she maintained her composure, her dignity, her strength of mind and sense of duty unimpaired is clear from her interview with Sir W. Browne, and Scaramelli, the Venetian envoy, only one short month before she died; and no impure gossip of Spanish malignants or of other traducers of her memory can impair this evidence. If she exacted from those their obligations, if she was less tolerant to those who failed to make good what they had undertaken to perform, she set them an example in her own person of rigorous attention to the duties of her station. No melancholy, no plea of indisposition, no infirmities of advancing age, were sufficient to withdraw her from the burdens of royalty, or could tempt her to sacrifice them to personal ease and convenience. To the last she sat at the Council table; to the last she was ready to receive every foreign ambassador who visited these shores. To the last she maintained the dignity, the splendor, and the majesty of royalty; strong in the loftiness of her resolution, victorious over weakness and infirmity; a Queen to the end, associating monarchy in the minds of her subjects with national greatness, magnanimity, and vigor, which no faults of her own, no failings of succeeding ages could diminish or extinguish. London Quarterly Review.

How to be Miserable.

Think about yourself; about what you want, you like, what respect people ought to pay you, what people think of you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you. You will be as wretched as you choose on earth or in heaven either.

In heaven either, I say. For that proud, greedy, selfish, self seeking spirit would turn heaven into hell. It did turn heaven into hell, for the great devil himself. It was by pride, by seeking his own glory—(so, at least, wise men say)—that he fell from heaven to hell. He was not content to give up his own will and do God's will like the other angels. He was not content to serve God, and rejoice in God's glory. He would be a master, and set up for himself and rejoice in his own glory; so, when he wanted to make a private heaven of his own, he found that he had made a hell. When he wanted a little god for himself, he lost the love of the true God, to lose which is eternal death. And why? Because his heart was not pure, clean, honest, simple, unselfish. Therefore he saw God no more, and learned to hate Him whose name is love.—Kingsley's Sermons.

To educate the mind when the body is in a nervous, feeble condition is a fruitless and useless task. The first thing to be sought is a sound body with physical vigor. This should take precedence of everything else; without this, any acquisition can be of but little avail.

The daughters of Sir Edward Thornton, the English Minister at Washington, wear thick soled shoes, plain unpinned back dresses and heavy oldfashioned cloaks. They are pictures of health.

The Czar.—It has been announced by telegraph that the Czar of Russia, Alexander II, is intending to retire, perhaps temporarily, perhaps permanently, from the burdens of Government. His health is failing, and the cares of Government are heavy and wearing. A sketch of him and his rule says, "He is now 58 years old, and has held the sceptre for 21 years, and has held himself wisely and bravely through a number of the most serious crises that modern Europe has witnessed." The Empire of Russia has been greatly enlarged in Asiatic territory during his reign; but his noblest acts have been the emancipation and endowment of his serfs, and his efforts in the direction of public education and reform. His internal government has been greatly strengthened, the administration of law and of the prisons improved, the railroad system of the country enlarged, and its material wealth largely increased. It is said that he proposes to establish a regency during his retirement, at the head of which will be his son, through the death of his lamented brother, ten years since, now the eldest. He is 31 years of age. His title is the Czarvitch. His wife is the Princess Dagmar, Denmark. The Prince will have an opportunity to try his hand, with a strong arm still behind ready to take up the sceptre if it should tremble at all in the unwonted grasp of the young Czar.

Germany.—The Old Catholics.—The Dusseldorf correspondent of the London Guardian writes under date of the twelfth of January:

"Very slowly, and only by virtue of its spiritual character, and its work of amendment and concord, has Old Catholicism made its way into Prussia; doubtless its roots are securely planted in consequence. In Baden, on the other hand, where the influence of Wessenberg and Hirscher is still felt, and where the State has consistently protected the reformers, Old Catholicism has made great progress in the past year. Whole parishes have embraced it, and churches and [illegible] the movement continues to spread on a similar scale, we may yet see a National Catholic Church in Baden, and an Old Catholic Archbishop of Freiburg. In Bavaria we can only say that the movement maintains itself—it does not lose ground, but does not gain. Even in the Palatinate, the most successful mission in the early days of the reform, it seems to be at a standstill. It is left to fight its own battles with the Ultramontane power, and this is too deeply rooted in Bavaria to be overcome in a day. The State looks on, content to curb or resist, where it can, the open attacks of the curialistic bishops, but lending no hand to Old Catholicism."

The fashion which forbids the widow on marrying again to appear at the altar in a bridal vail is derived, like many of our customs, from mediæval superstitions. The church regarded the second marriage of a woman as inflicting a stain upon her womanhood. For this reason, while the virgin bride stood at the altar, decked in all the insigia of virginity—white veil, flowing hair, crown (wreath), ungloved hand—the widow who married again was allowed none of these, and was especially required to appear at the altar, gloved, in order that her hand, which a second marriage was supposed to pollute, would not touch the pure, sanctified hand of the representative of the church, or his sacred robes of office. This is a curious superstition, and, like others of its sort, produces an effect upon our habits and manners long after the cause is forgotten.

We clip from an exchange the following: A Wesleyan missionary in the Island of Ceylon has bought an idol temple and the grove in which it stood, as well as the idol itself. Having completed the purchase from the Brahmin owner, the missionary put the idol into his coat pocket and walked away, instead of dropping dead as the horrified worshipers expected to see him do. It happened to be the god Vyravan, who is the guardian of the other gods, and the seizure of his image, removal of his temple and grove, and the erection of a school on the sacred spot, has created an unusual stir among the people of Calaly.

A Good Rule.—The best rule for Christian people to observe is to tell folks of only what will give them pleasure. Whoever speaks a word that causes a heartache, sins. Whoever disturbs the peace and tranquility of a mind, even by rehearsing any perambulating gossip, lessens the joy a life to whose joy it is his duty, in Christ, to minister. Life is too short, and joys too few, for us to mar the peace of the one, or lessen the number of the other. If any reader of these lines has been in the habit of telling people unpleasant things, we sincerely hope the perusal of this article will cause him to stop doing so. —Golden Rule.

There is no probably no city in the world that turns out such a variety in manufactures in a week as Birmingham, England. In a week she makes, among other things, 14,000,000 pens; 6,000 bedsteads, 7,000 guns, 300,000,000 cut nails, 100,000,000 buttons 1,000 saddles, 5,000,000 copper and bronze coins, 20,000 pairs of spectacles, 6 tons of papier mache wares, more than $30,000 worth of jewelry 4,000 miles of iron, and steel wire, 10 tons of pins, 5 tons of hairpins and hooks and eyes, 130,000 gross of wood screws, 500 tons of nuts and screw bolts and spikes, 50 tons of wrought iron hinges, 350 miles length of wax for matches, 40 tons of German silver, 100 dozen of fenders' 3,500 bellows, 800 tons of brass and copper wares.

The Churchman recently advocated a clerical celibacy, on the ground of greater efficiency, cheapness, &c. A correspondent vents indignation in the following terms: "It is disgusting to hear in Episcopal addresses from married bishops calls for single men to work cheap. Why are there not calls for single bishops to work cheap? As a result of this low policy, thus put forth, parishes have got the itch for cheapness; and, in place of calling worthy married priests, who deserve maintenance, they want young men. Why? Because they are single for Christ's sake? Because they can do the work better? No, but because they are cheap; they can get them for less money. Because they think they do not need a home, but can board with some widow, or stay at a tavern, or hang round no one cares where."

Sorrows and Comforts.

Sorrowing hearts are everywhere to be found. They are all around us.—Scarcely a heart that has not been shrouded in gloom—scarcely a heart whose light has not at some time almost gone out.

There are two extremes into which it is easy for the unbalanced or unguarded mind to fall. In one, the world is a vale of tears, full of sorrow and woe, of darkness and mystery, and life is a burden of anxiety, care and suffering, which at times it would be a relief to lay down. In the other, the world is the home of mirth and pleasure, and life one perpetual stream of happiness and enjoyment. While the first fails to see the comforts and blessings that a wise and gracious heavenly Father has ordained for his children, the other equally fails to grasp the real character and purpose of our earthly existence; thus both are deficient in comprehending the constitution under which the world is governed. The first tends to misanthropy and distrust of God; the second to Epicurianism and sensuality. Either of those extremes is unsatisfactory.

To demand the reason of God's ways, as some indicate by their conduct they would wish to do, in reference to any event of his providence, is absurd as well as unwise. Could we stand by his side and see all things as he sees them; were we permitted to take into our minds the vast past and the unlimited future; could we enter into and sympathize with all the plans and thoughts of the Divine mind, and perfectly understand the system of his government, then there would be some semblance to the demand. But God in his divine arrangements has ordered otherwise. Our hearts are called to trust him who is our Father. We walk by faith. We can see that he means our perfect discipline; we can believe in his infinite love, and therefore in his wisdom and justice. Thus we may lean our weary heads and burdened souls upon his breast.

Surely there is no time when one so needs his God and Saviour as when the hour of trouble and suffering comes, and there is no time when God is more ready to bear the call made upon him, or when men ought more earnestly to cry to him. If he wounds, he longs to heal. If the blow of chastisement falls, his arms are open wide to enfold him who is smitten and afflicted All his promises bid troubled souls come to him and cast their barden upon him. The experiences of his faithful servants all tell us the blessedness and security of those who are "hid in the secret of his tabernacle," and who have made the shadow of the Almighty their dwelling place. How precious he is to his children! How full of comfort and joy!

Chinese Troubles

The immigration of Chinese into California continues, and seems to give great annoyance to the settlers on the Pacific coast. Anti-Chinese clubs have been formed whose purpose is to prevent the further immigration of the inhabitants of the celestial empire by inflicting personal abuse and destroying the houses and homes of the Chinese. The Chinese quarters in the town of Antioch were recently destroyed and a meeting of the Anti Coolie club of San Francisco last week endorsed the brutal action and resolved to adopt a similar course in that city unless the Federal government shall take immediate steps to prevent immigration. Incendiary speeches were made and letters read from similar and sympathising associations in the interior of the State A telegram from New York informed them that 2600 stand of arms could be had from that city on ten days notice. Serious disturbances are apprehended unless the government interferes.

The secret of the opposition to the Chinese is that they are fitted for all kinds of labor, and work on cheaper terms than the laboring classes in California. Competition in trade and labor usually excites sharp feeling and prejudice, but where it reaches so far as to have the effect of almost to tally supplanting one class and depriving them of employment, profit and bread, the successful competitors readily become the object of the conspiracy and virulent attacks of the supplanted who make common cause against their enemies. The laboring classes of the Pacific slope are unthinking and unreasonable, and when they become hungry turn to savages. We may expect, therefore, to hear of fresh and continued outrages upon the submissive and inoffensive Chinamen, whose plain and cheap living enables them to work for trifling wages, while American, Irish and German laborers eat the hard crust of idleness.

The government should take strict measures to prevent abuse of the Chinese immigrants. Our continent is a broad one, fertile, inviting, with room enough for millions more from foreign lands. It has been the boasted and honored policy of our Republic to invite and welcome immigration from overcrowded and despotic lands. We offer to all comers liberty of body and conscience, the influences of an advanced civilization and the free gospel of christianity. Chinamen have as much right to accept the invitation as Irishmen, Italians and Germans, and are as likely to become, in time, as good citizens as other immigrants. They are heathens, it is true, but we should strive and hope to make them christians. If they are tied to their religion we can untie them as readily here as by sending missionaries to their country:and as far as their affecting our civilization and religion is concerned, that is entirely out of the question. It would have a bad, mean and inhospitable look, if our government should push the Chinese back into the Pacific and shut the ports and doors of our great asylum for the hungry and oppressed against our antipodes who traverse one half of the globe to reach us. And if the prejudiced Irish, Germans, Spaniards and Italians should attempt to maltreat and destroy the almond-eyed sons of the East, they should be taught by the courts and officers of the law that when they come to enjoy the freedom of our country, they must leave behind them the oppression which they flee, and grant to others what they themselves are seeking—the right to live without molestation and to labor and receive their wages.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church met at Baltimore on the 1st inst. The session will be one of great importance to the Church North and to American Methodism. The question of "fraternity" between the churches, North and South, will be discussed and we shall watch with interest the spirit which characterizes our Northern brethren in their relations to us of the South. The reception of the Fraternal Messengers will be had to day (the 10th) and addresses upon the subject of fraternal relations be made. The Daily Advocate, published by Nelson & Phillips, and edited by Rev. Dr. DePuy, assisted by Rev. Mr. Kincaid, is a neat and sprightly journal of eight pages whose receipt we gratefully acknowledge.

To day, the 10th, the Exposition celebrating the one hundreth year of our Republic, opens in Philadelphia. It will continue until October and will be visited by millions of people from this country and foreign nations. Thirty four nations, it is said, will be represented and the exhibition will be inferior to none which the world has seen before. The World's Fair at London, the Paris and Vienna Expositions will be surpassed by the variety and elegance of the preparations, arrangements and exhibitions.

The Richmond Christian Advocate says of the evils of our time: "the only remedy is the exclusive recognition of the word of God as the law for the entire life of the believer. That word must have sole sway in the conscience and heart and intellect, in the family, in the counting house, the office, the work-shop, the legislative chamber, the social sphere, the church, —everywhere and always it must be supreme. There must be nothing hid from the heat thereof."

Look the Preacher in the Face.

Mr. Talmage, an original thinker and a forcible writer, recently published an article in the Christian at Work upon this subject. It is a sure indication of bad manners or bad morals for an individual or a congregation to sit with their heads down and apparently indifferent to what the preacher is talking about. Unless we can look at the preacher and pay attention to what he is saying, better far remain at home. One listless auditor—head resting on the seat in front of him—in his hand or upon his walking cane has often been the cause of much embarassment on the part of the preacher.

Here is what Mr. Talmage has to say:

We know not why a religious audience should not look as bright as any other audience, but how often is it that people who at a concert or a lecture look animated, seem to feel it their duty as soon as they come into a devotional assembly to look stupid. Some hearers shut their eyes, and so extinguish, as far as the preacher is concerned, the chief light of their face. What is the matter with your eyes! Is it emotion? O no! it is easily seen when that is the reason. You are probably trying to review your accounts at the store, or calculating the prospects for the Spring. Open your eyes and look the preacher in the face. Your manner is a wet blanket on the preacher's enthusiasm. Others listen with an inanimate look. You are a soporific in the house of God. Have you ever seen a preacher in the midst of his sermon get bothered and subside from eloquence into insanity? He saw two or three intelligent men look, ing as indifferent as dolts. The sun rose clear, but a fog went up from your countenance and beclouded it. It is astonishing how much the manner of listening has to do with the force of the preaching. We will take the contract of rousing the dullest minister that ever addressed an audience if you wil give us twenty alert and wide awake hearers placed at proper distances from the pulpit, so that in whichever direction the preacher looks he shall, by clash of eyes, strike fire.

The Randolph Camp-Meeting.

Five years ago I first heard of a Camp meeting held in Randolph county, N. C., many years since, which was attended by a number of people from Iredell Co. Since first hearing of that meeting, I have taken some pains to ascertain its precise date and locality. I will give the result of my inquiries, and leave it without comment, at least for the present.

Peter Claywell of Jonesville, who is about 90 years old, and who lived in Iredell Co., at the time, says in a letter to me, "This year, 1801, the news came to Iredell that the Methodists were going to hold a Camp-meeting in Randolph county, which was a novel idea to Presbyterians. However, James Sharpe fixed up a four-horse wagon and took his own family, and part of John King's family, and went to the Camp meeting in Randolph Co. And when they came back, they came with a new religion; and from that the fire began to spread. There was preaching or prayer meeting nearly every night in the week in some of the neighboring houses, the Kings and Sharpes officiating. The revival continued several years, from 1801 to 1806 or 1807." I have been told that in their meetings, "they would pray to the God of Randolph." In 1801 Daniel Asbury and Wiley Jones were on the Yadkin Circuit, and commenced preaching that year at Mr. Claywell's father's, Peter Claywell, Sen., who became a Methodist in Campbell Co., Va; and that was the beginning of Snow Creek Church, which appears on the records of the Yadkin Circuit in 1802, as Claywell's, for the first time.

Rev. James Needham, Tom's Creek, Surry Co., N. C., was born in Randolph Co., in 1799. He says that he was told by persons who attended the meeting, that a Camp-meeting was held at Old Union, in Randolph Co., on the waters of Deep River, "beginning on Christmas day in 1801 and ran into 1802, according to the best of "his" recollection.' He told me two or three years ago that he was informed that was the first Camp-meeting ever held in the State—that there were a great many conversions at it —and that the meeting was held by John and William McGee.

Old Union was left off the Randolph Circuit at one time. In 1854, during our vacation, Rev. I. F Keerans and I held a protracted meeting there which was greatly blessed of God, and before the meeting closed a subscription was taken up to build a new Church, which was done in due time: and it has continued ever since one of the regular appointments of the Circuit.

The Canada Christian Advocate writes: "Children have often to go away from home to find a genuine religion. Where vital godliness has its seat in the heart, it will be known by its fruits. It is easy for the living Christian to have family prayer, to say grace at table; and perform all the duties of domestic religion. And it is religion at home that commands the attention and respect, and rivets the affections of the children.

The Presbyterian "Sustentation Board" reports a balance in its treasury at the close of its financial year.

Notes and Statistics.

Hear the Christian at Work:—"Just now, fashionable, genteel, formalistic, ritualistic, kid-gloved and perfumed religion is at a discount. The want of the times is felt to be an earnest, direct, simple, gospel style of preaching and praying that means work. The Rev. Cream Cheese finds his occupation gone. We are glad of it, and hope he will take fresh orders, and mend his ways."

The statistics of the Protestant Episcopal Church for 1875 show: Bishops, 57—an increase of 5: priests and deacons, 3,122—increase, 41; baptisms, 38,053—decrease, 3,793; confirmations, 22,095—decrease, 4, 460: communicants, 261,003—decrease, 3,503; Sunday school teachers, 23,448—increase, 313; pupils, 235,-943—decrease, 3,940: and contributions, $6,899,305—decrease, $667,-268.

A remarkable meeting of foreign missionaries employed in city mission work was recently held in London. Grace was said in fourteen languages. The London City Mission Society employs four missionaries among the Germans, one among the Dutch, two among the Italians, one among the French, and one among the Orientals, who are always to be found in the great metropolis.

A call has been issued by the Maryland Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church for a Convention to assemble in Baltimore on the second Friday of May, 1877, for the purpose of making such changes in the Constitution and Discipline of the Church as may be necessary in order to consummate the proposed union with the "Methodist" Church. It will be necessary for two thirds of the Methodist Protestant Conference to unite in this call in order to make it valid. The basis of union has already been agreed upon by a joint commission of the two Churches.

The following will be found interesting to all who are the friends of Foreign Mission work, as it gives the names of the different Mission Societies and the time when they were organized: The Baptist Missionary Society in 1792; the London Missionary Society in 1795; the Scottish Missionary Society in 1796; the Glasgow Missionary Society in 1796; the Church Missionary Society in 1800; the General Baptist Society 1816; the Wesleyan Missionary Society 1817. The Foreign Missionary Societies in the United States were organized as follows: The American Mission Board in 1810; the Baptist Missionary Union in 1814; the Methodist Missonary Society in 1819; the Freewill Baptist Foreign Missionary Society in 1833; the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1835; the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church in 1837.

Billiards.—"Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?" There is a man within the circle of my acquaintance who subscribed fully to Mr. Beecher's views regarding home amusements some years ago. He believed if his boy had a billiard table at home he would never be seen in a billiard hall. He made the experiment. His boy became very apt in the use of the stick and the ball. But before he reached his majority, the father, upon missing his boy one evening, and instituting a diligent search, found him not only in a billiard hall, but under the stupor of a "dead drunk" as well. He had noticed for some time previous that his boy seemed indifferent to the amusement of his billiard table at home, but did not dream of such results.—Evangelical Messenger.

Christ beautifully identifies himself with his children and provides an easy service for his followers in the words: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." A generous hearted gentleman, after hearing a sermon from that text once, was heard to say: "A few days since I carried to a poor Christian woman a comforter, warm but well worn, and two loaves of bread—good bread, but a little stale. The weather was very cold, and the comforter was gratefully received. The poor woman was hungry, and the bread was better than she usually obtained. But while listening to the sermon to-day I thought that had I reflected that it was Jesus I was visiting, in the person of one of his disciples, I would have taken a new comforter and fresh bread."

The Beaufort Eagle says:

The revival of which we made mentioned last weeek, still continues at the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Rev. Mr. Raven has been indefatigable in his labors during the progress of the meeting, and it is remarkable with what vital energy one seemingly so frail, appears to be endowed.

The congregations have been large at all the services, and great seriousness has been manifested by nearly all present. In fact, there has not been such a general concern on the subject of religion exhibited in our town for many years.

Up to the present time about sixty have made a profession of saving faith in Christ, the greater portion of whom have united with the church, and others will do so at the first opportunity. The work still goes on, and from present appearances the harvest bids fair to be great ere the meeting shall come to a final close.

Religious Intelligence.

The last General Conference of the Northern Church designated Wednesday, May 10, 1876, as the day for a reception of Fraternal Delegates from other Churches, and the evening of that day, and such other evenings as the conference may order, shall be appropriated to the hearing of addresses from Fraternal Delegates.

Pennsylvania Quaker writes to the New York Herald, recommending the nomination of some one for the Presidency of the United States "who fears the Lord and keeps his commandments?" Exactly! Will some one please furnish us a ticket! We join the Presbyterian in thinking this is the best nomination yet made.—N. Y. Advocate.

The Church Journal (Episcopal) says, "As a means of training her children, the Sunday-School is in direct antagonism with the whole principles of the Church;" whereat the Baptist Examiner and Chronicle is moved to say, "So much the worse for the Church."

Rev. I Vaughan, a well known laborer of twenty years' standing in the Church Missionary Society, illustrated the change which has come over the Hindoos, with regard to their religion, by drawing a contrast between the manner in which Calcutta street preachers were received twenty years ago and are received now. Then it was neccessary to direct heavy blows against Hindoo idolatry, and the missionary was often obliged to endure the roughest treatment Now, if he seriously attacks the Hindoo gods and the popular creed, the likelihood is that some one in the crowd will say: "We don't want to hear any more about that. We know it as well as you can tell us. That sort of thing has passed away Tell us something new."

The foreign missions of the Free Church of Scotland are carried on in India and South Africa. There are 89 stations, with 28 European and 7 native missionaries, 20 European and 135 native teachers, and 88 catechists and colporteurs, making a total of 178 laborers. The native churches have 2,387 communicants and 1,936 baptized adherents. During the past year 236 communicants were received The schools for which the Scotch missions are, since Dr. Duff's day, famous, number 159, with 11,303 scholars (3,290 girls.) The station most favored during the year with spiritual blessing was Lovedale, in Caffraria, where a remarkable revival has taken place, especially among the scholars of the Lovedale Institution. The receipts of the Mission Board were larger than in any previous year, the total amount being $294,420. This, however, includes $73,955 received from the English government for the support of schools.

By the liberality of the founder, Hon. Asa Packer, tuition at Lehigh University, South Bethlehem, Pa., is free. It is said to have admirable facilities for giving a thorough education in Civil, Mechanical and Mining Engineering, and Chemistry and Metallurgy. It has also a Classical Course; and excellent instruction in French and German. The location in the midst of the great coal, iron and zinc mines of that State, and in a place famous for its manufacturing and railway interests, and its access to the vast workshops of New York and Philadelphia, give the Institution unusual and unsurpassed facilities.

In compliance with the resolution adjourning the Convention of the Associations, held in Richmond, Va., May 26, 1875, the Executive Committee announce that the Twenty-First Annual Convention of these Societies will be held in Toronto, Canada, July 12-16, 1876.

All Young Men's Christian Associations, entitled under the Rules of the General Convention to representation, are earnestly requested to send delegates.

A New Book.—A. S. Barnes & Co, of New York will shortly issue the History of the City of New York, by Mrs Martha J. Lamb the preparation of which is said to have occupied a period of more than ten years and whose scope is such that it is destined to fill an important place in the literature of this century.

Mrs. Lamb is the only lady member of the New York Historical Society, to whose archives and treasures she had unrestrained access. This privilege, and the assistance rendered by many old families of the City, who have freely opened to her the means of gaining information particulary interesting to the present generation, throw around the New History the charm of revelation.

The work will appear in about twenty four parts, of sixty-four pages each. It will contain about 250 illustrations, and for each part a full-page tinted engraving, drawn expressly for the work by the best New York Artists.

It will be sold only by subscription, and will appeal to all classes of readers, having a certain, sure and inestimable value to every private and public library, and to anyone who cares to know about this Great Metropolis of the New World.

N. H. D. Wilson, President of the Board.

Girls talk and laugh about marriage as though it was a jubilee, a gladsome thing, a rose without a thorn. And so it is, if it is all right—if they go about it as rational beings instead of merry-making children. It is a serious thing to marry; it is a life business. Therefore, never do it in haste; never run away to get married; never marry for wealth or standing, or fine person, or manners, but for character, for worth, for the qualities of mind and heart which make an honorable man. Take time; think long and well before you accept any proposal: consult your parents, then some judicious friend, then your own judgment. Learn all that is possible for you to learn of your proposed husband. When all doubts have been removed, and not till then, accept him.—Ex.

Tell Your Wife.—If you are in trouble or a quandary, tell your wife—that is if you have one—all about it at once. Ten to one her invention will solve your difficulty sooner than all your logic. The wit of women has been praised; but her instincts are quicker and keener than her reason. Counsel with your wife, or your mother, or sister, and be assured light will flash upon your darkness.

The clergy cost the United States $12 000,000 annually; the criminals $40,000,000; the lawyers, $70,000,000: whiskey, $200,000,000.

NORTH CAROLINA

Pamlico River gets an appropriation of $25,000 from Congress.

Charlotte gets only $2,700 for her Branch Mint, instead of $4000.

Col. Wm. Johnston was reelected Mayor of Charlotte by a majority of 196.

Col. D. C. Parish was elected Mayor of Durham.

A post office is to be established at the Phœnix Mine in Cabarrus county.

L. Ives took the lives of 10,000 trout in Beaufort one day last week and shipped them.

Thomas Strange, of Wilmington, was tried last week for the murder of young Murray last summer and was acquitted, the State failing by its testimony to make out a case.

Mrs. McLean, formerly Miss Nannie Davis, of Newbern, has been selected as one of the choir for the Centennial in Philadelphia.

A new paper, the Daily Local, is to be published in Fayetteville. The courage of some people is wonderful: we admire the Local's pluck but pity its judgment.

Prof. W. C. Kerr, the State Geologist, has been appointed orator on the part of North Carolina at the Centennial.

Mr. J. W. King, of Wilmington, drove a burglar out of his residence on Saturday morning last, before he could steal anything. He left his knife in his haste.

The engineer corps making the survey of the Marietta & Murphy Railroad, has reached Murphy, Cherokee county. The Herald says the survey has been an easy one, since nature had marked out the way.

The Rockingham Courier says: We heard while in Wadesboro, that the decendants of one of the first settlers, Mr. Huntly, of that county, now number 800. This was considered a very remarkable fact.

The U. S. Circuit Court adjourned at Statesville on the 25th. The Rev. Henry Turner, who was tried for robbing the mail, was found guilty, and sentenced to three years, hard labor in the Albany Penitentiary.

An interregnum occurred in Goldsboro last week. The old Board of Commissioners resigned their places and the new Board refused to qualify until last monday.

The Post Master at Grassy Creek Mitchell county, took drafts from letters, amounting to $2,400 and has fled the country. Thus, for a few paltry dollars, a man will lose home, friends and a good conscience.

Bentonsville township, Johnston county wants liquor to be sold in it, as determined by a vote of 75 against 22.

The Republicans were successful in electing their ticket at the late municipal election in Goldsboro and the Messenger attributes the defeat of the Democrats to the "farcical laws regulating town election."

The Magnolia Record says: Mr. Geo. M. Tatum, of Sampson county, recently killed five pigs, five months old, weighing respectively 140, 131, 117, 116, and 115 pounds, making an aggregate weight of 619 pounds.

How happy ought North Carolina to be in contemplating the innumerable men she contains, who are thought to be suitable candidates for Governor! We are a race of kings.

Cadet-Midshipman for the 5th Congressional District.—Gen. Scales will give the nomination of a candidate for admission into the Naval Academy, as Cadet-Midshipman, to that young man who, upon examination, shall be found most worthy of it. Those who desire the place, therefore, will prepare themselves to come before an impartial Board which will be announced in due time and which will convene in Greensboro on the 8th or 10th of June.—Greensboro Patriot.

Gen. John S Preston, of South Carolina, will deliver an address before the Carolina Military Institute in June.

The ladies of Beaufort sent $20 to the Raleigh ladies for the Centennial flag.—Fayetteville is ahead, her ladies having sent through Mrs. McKay, the handsome sum of $35.

A telegraph line will be established along the Western North Carolina Railroad and if the citizens will furnish the poles, will be continued to Asheville.

S. D. Whitley, not being registered in a certain Ward in Charlotte, was not allowed to vote. He made affidavit that he was entitled to vote, and has announced his intention to bring suit against the inspectors for wilfully depriving him from the privilege of voting.

Milton Graham, of Iredell county, recently brought from South Carolina a deer horn with 36 points. Eight points are considered a large number. A Sumter man bought it in Salem, N. C., many years ago, and it is said to be 100 years old.

We learn from the New York Herald that at Ocracokie Inlet, N. C., both the buoys were displaced during the late winter. The sea buoy is altogether gone, and the buoy at the entrance has been removed from the channel.

The Star says that the colored regiment in Wilmington, known as the "Brogden Guards," of which Geo. D. Mabson is Colonel, received on Monday, from Raleigh, one hundred Springfield breech-loading rifles, of superior finish, together with accoutrements, &c.

The W. & W. R. R. Co., have declared a reduction of rates of freight, and the people along the line are satisfied. The tariff on cotton from Wilson to Goldsboro is now $1.12 per bale instead of $1.75 as heretofore. This will probably cause the overland wagon train to draw off.

The China Grove correspondent of the Concord Register says: "China Grove claims to have the oldest station hand on the line. He has been here for twenty-four years, and says he has never lost one day by sickness. He often pumps all night, and we have often seen him pumping while sound asleep. He is a faithful and trusty darkey.

The Beaufort Eagle likes fish news and makes a swoop upon all it can get. It comes now with the following:

"Three huge black fish, measuring fourteen, fifteen and eighteen feet, were caught three miles from Beaufort last week, and it is said they will yield nearly five barrels or two hundred gallons of oil. The Eagle is making a pretty good start in writing up fish news. A seventy foot whale last week and now three black fish measuring in all forty-seven feet.

Mike Myers of Yadkin, was in the still-house of Isaac Atwood, in an intoxicated conditiou, and was burnt up with the building.

Forty eight bales of compresed cotton were shipped in one car on the C. C. R. W., at Charlotte last Saturday. Reckoning 450 pounds to the bale, this would be just 21,600 pounds.

The Fayetteville Wide Awake says: Since May 1st, 1875, there have been interred in Cross Creek Cemetery, 51 persons, 17 of whom died without the corporate limits of the town. Twenty four of the total number were children, and 10 over 50 years of age.

Rev. W. W. Alben, of Winston, while distributing Bibles, Tracts and other religious matter among the colored people, found an old negress 113 years old who knows many of the incidents of Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown, is brisk and active and travels alone.

R. L. Patterson, Esq., was reelected Mayor of Salem, despite his published card asking to be let alone. The re election is a compliment even to a man who, in the opinion of his personal friends and political opponents, would govern the State wisely and well. We don't make democratic or republican nominations, but if Mr. Patterson should be nominated for the office of Governor, by his party, we should publish the fact with great pleasure, and with confidence that if he were elected, North Carolina would not be ashamed of her Executive.

From the Statesville Landmark: The mill belonging to Messrs. Cicero Foard and Lindsay, situated on the Yadkin river about half way between Salisbury and Mocksville, was entirely destroyed by fire last Monday. Loss estimated at $7,000, with no insurance. Several parties, all negroes, have been charged with having set fire to the building, as it was evident that it could not have caught by accident. Strong suspicion rests upon the miller, who had previously been accused of irregularity in connection with the toll, and who it is supposed committed the deed with a view of destroying all evidence of his guilt.

Terrible Shooting Affair.—On last Monday, one of the bloodiest tradegies ever recorded in this section was acted in Stokes county, near Martin's lime kiln. Mr. Dick Martin and his two sons, Enel and Tom, in company with a Mr. Ben Smith, were returning from a house raising. Enel Martin had his hand resting confidingly on Smith's shoulder, not an angry word had been spoken, when Smith secretly drew his pistol and placed it near Martin's temple and deliberately fired. Without a groan, Martin fell to the ground and died in a few hours afterwards, only speaking two words. Smith then turned and fired at Tom Martin, who was eight or ten feet off, the ball passing diagonally through his bowels, inflicting a painful and it is feared a fatal wound. As Tom fell he cried to his father to run for life and as the old man made off Smith followed him for at least a quarter of a mile and shot at him two or three times, but fortunately neither shot took effect. Smith deliberately returned to where his first victim was lying and remarked that if his first shot had not killed him he had three more balls to dispose of When asked by his brother what he had against the Martins, he replied that he had killed two of them and if he could kill four more men he would be satisfied. An old family feud, which was thought to have been amicably settled, is the only reason that can be assigned for this wretched affair. Smith has not yet been arrested. At least fifty men are scouring the woods in every direction for him. We fear he will be lynched if he is captured. It is always best to let the law take its course.—Reidsville News.

It is the business of every one having a Cold, to treat it promptly and properly until it is gotten rid of—intelligent experience fortunately presenting a curative in Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, thoroughly adapted to remove speedily all Coughs and Colds—allay any exciting inflammation of the Throat or Lungs, and remove the distressing symptoms of Asthma or Pleurisy.

A rather novel enterprise is just announced on the Centennial Exposition which will be of interest to many readers. Under the executive management of Prof. Geo. P. Beard, a National Centennial Lecture for teachers will be held at the Ailes Hotel, near the Exposition grounds, during July and August.

Liberia has been obliged to withdraw from the Centennial Exposition, the $10 000 she appropriated for the purpose having been used up in carrying on the war with the savage tribes. Mr. Edward S. Morris, resident Liberian commissioner in Philadelphia, has proposed to the President of Liberia to appropriate $300 000 to the purchase of articles for the exhibition offering to sell the articles at the close of that exposition and return the proceeds, which may be expected in more than cover expenses, to the Liberian Government.

At the recent Electoral Convention of the Northern New York Conference (Methodist Episcopal) a lady appeared as a delegate, duly elected. Bishop Andrews being consulted upon the question of her eligibility, decided that she was "a layman in the meaning of the provision of the Discipline directing the appointment of delegates."

In the Centennial Sunday-school convention to be held at Ocean Grove, N. J., July 22-30, all evangelical denominations are to be represented, the object of the meeting being to cement fraternal union among the workers of such bodies, the discussion of the needs, interests and methods of Sunday-school work, and a brief but comprehensive course of normal instruction.

The New York Methodist says: "Methodist families are going into the principles, lodges and stalls of the Academy of Music as 'reserved seats' for the session of the General Conference. By this novel plan it is supposed that a hand can be secured sufficiently large to pay for the rental of the building. The edifice is one of the most expensive, costly and sumptuous of its class on the continent."

The New York Herald thinks that President Grant favors Senator Conkling of New York, as his successor in office.

The Admiration of the Ladies.

Both the old any young beaux desire the admiration of ladies, and they resort to many devices to secure it. The tailor, the shoemaker and the hatter may, by his arts adorn their persons with the choicest production, but all their efforts will prove inadequate if the hair, the greatest ornament of all, is grizzled and grey. The ladies exclaim—what! love that old grey-headed man! No! never! But there is a remedy for this difficulty The Dr. Jayne's Celebrated Hair Dye and your grey hairs will be changed to a beautiful glossy black and though you may be sixty years old, you will look as if you were but thirty.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it hath pleased Almighty God to remove by death on the 7th of April 1876 our esteemed brother M. L. Wilson who has long been a useful member of this Quarterly Conference.

Resolved, That we are deeply sensible of our loss in the death of our lamented brother, but submit patiently to the will of God believing our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That we will cherish the memory of our brother and pray that the grace of God may sustain his bereaved and sorrowing family

Resolved, That the Recording Steward be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased and a copy to the Raleigh Christian advocate for publication, and to spread the same upon the journal of this body.

THE ONLY PERFECTLY SAFE Kerosene Lamp IN THE WORLD.

THE RHIND PATENT

Safety Lamp,

Has been placed upon the Market, and the Public is invited to test the simple but wonderful Lamp. Its qualities are it extinguishes itself when overturned, it extinguishes itself when dropped from the hand, it extinguishes itself if broken; it cannot be filled while lighted, but can be carried about at pleasure. Blowing down the chimney or turning down the wick to extinguish the light is entirely unnecessary; the lamp gives more light with the same wick than any lamp in the world.

Call and examine its merits at the Tinware Manufactory, Hardware and House Furnishing Store of

PUBLIC AUCTION.

The largest amount of valuable land ever offered in North western North Carolina! To all wishing Homes now is your time.

On Monday, the 21st day of August, 1876,

I will offer for sale at public auction, the valuable tract of land situated on Little Fish River, and containing 3 600 acres. This tract of land will be divided into lots to suit purchasers. It is one of the best farms in North-western N. C., under a high state of cultivation; fine bottom lands, with uplands, lying well; fruits, grain, tobacco and the grasses grow luxuriantly on these lands. Splendid grist, flour and circular saw mills are situated on this farm; the best of water-power, lying ready to be improved.—The land is well timbered, watered, and an abundance of good cool springs. In fact it is the best section in the country.

Also another tract, known as the "Saw-Mill" tract, containing 1,500 acres, 400 acres of which has just been cleared and cultivated in tobacco. Wheat, corn, oats, rye, tobacco, fruits, and the grasses grow luxuriantly upon this plantation; it is well watered, lies well, and is well adapted for dairy stock raising, fruit growing and farming generally; also good water-power and has a circular saw mill.

Also another tract of land lying in the suburbs of Mount Airy, containing 450 acres lying on Lovel's Creek, 100 acres of which is on fine bottom land as there is in the State.

Also another tract of land lying on the Ararat River, known as the Buck Shoals tract, on which there are good grist, flouring and saw-mills; good residence and one large brick building 36 by 50 feet, and four stories in height, erected for a cotton factory. All the buildings and the dam are new, and the water is sufficient for 200 horse power, or even more.

Also another tract containing 353 acres, lying on Rutledge and Reed Cane Creeks, on which are fine bottoms, plenty of timber, and an abundance of good water.

Also several other tracts of fine farming and mineral lands, all of which are well watered and timbered, and on which are good buildings, and the lands are in high state of cultivation, a rare chance seldom offered in a small colony. This is the best body of lands to be found in the County, being situated near Mount Airy, the terminus of the proposed Mount Airy Narrow Gauge Railroad, and in one of the healthiest and most thriving sections of the State, ten miles from the Blue Ridge, and is one of the most prosperous inland towns in the State

I will also sell

Children's Column.

Home.

The following beautiful lines were written by James Montgomery, the well known Ayrshire poet. The poet, whose smaller pieces are considered nearly equal to those of Moore, was born at Irvine in 1771.

There is a land, of every land the pride,
Beloved by Heaven o'er all the world beside,
Where brighter suns dispense serener light,
And milder moons emparadise the night;
A land of beauty, virtue valor, truth,
Time-tutored age, and love exalted youth.

The wandering mariner, whose eye explores
The wealthiest isles, the most enchanting shores,
Views not a realm so bountiful and fair,
Nor breathes the spirit of a purer air;
In every clime the magnet of his soul,
Touched by remembrance, trembles to that pole:
For in this land of Heaven's peculiar grace,
The heritage of nature's noblest race,
There is a spot of earth supremely blest,
A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest,
Where man, creation's tyrant, casts aside
His sword and sceptre, pageantry and pride,
While in his softened looks benignly blend
The sire, the son, the husband, brother, friend.

Here woman reigns: the mother, daughter, wife,
Strew with fresh flowers the narrow way of life!
In the clear heaven of her delightful eye
An angel guard of love and graces lie;
Around her knees domestic duties meet,
And fireside pleasures gambol at her feet.

Where shall that land, that spot of earth be found?
Art thou a man?—a patriot!—look around;
Oh, thou shalt find, howe'er thy footsteps roam,
That land thy country, and that spot thy home!

ANALYSIS.

I. PETER'S ANSWER BEFORE THE COUNCIL.—He asserts that it was "by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth" that the lame man was healed. II. THE ACTION OF THE COUNCIL.—The council, greatly perplexed, decides to forbid the apostles to speak or teach any more in the name of Jesus. III. THE APOSTLES' REPLY.—The answer was a noble one: "Whether it be right," etc. (verse 19). IV. THE RESULT.—The council was compelled to release the apostles.

QUESTIONS.

1. Who arrested the apostles?—Verses 1, 2.
2. Before whom were they brought in the morning?—Verse 5.
3. What question did the council ask?—Verse 7.
4. Who spoke for the apostles?—Verse 8.
5. By whose guidance?—Verse 8.
6. By what power was the man healed?—Verse 10.
7. What did he say of the way to be saved?—Verses 11, 12.
8. What effect had Peter's speech upon the council?—Verse 13.
9. Why did they marvel?
10. What was the council compelled to admit?—Verse 16.
11. What was the sentence of the council?—Verse 19.
12. Why did the apostles refuse to obey the council?—Verse 19.
13. Why would they continue to speak in the name of Jesus?—Verse 20,
14. How did the council farther try to silence them?—Verse 21.
15. Why did the council not try to punish them?—Verse 21.
16. How was the healed man?—Verse 23.
17. Dare we ever disobey God in order to obey man?
18. Read Acts ix. 29; Eph. vi 19, 20; Phil. i. 20.

BIBLE CLASS.

1. What connecting-link joins this Lesson to the last?
2. Before whom were the apostles brought?—Verses 5. 6.
3. What question were they required to answer?—Verse 7.
4. What authority had the elders to examine them.
5. What help had Peter and John?—Verse 8. See Luke xii. 11, 12.
6. What does the figure in verse 11 mean?
7. What is said of salvation, verse 12?
8. Which of Peter's words answer directly the question asked?
9. What explanation did they find?—Verse 13.
10. Why could they say nothing against the miracle.—Verse 14.
11. How did the apostles receive the decision?—Verse 18-20.
12. What spirit does this show in the apostles?
13. How did this trial conclude?
14. Why should healing a lame man give offence?
15. May we expect bodily diseases to be healed now by Christ?
16. Read Mark, ix. 38, 40; Acts iii. 12, 16; Matt. ix. 20, 21, 22; Mark vi 5.

LESSON HYMN, 413.

Rural and Domestic.

Bad Cooking a Social Curse.

"The day perhaps will come when even the daughters of the rich will not think it beneath their dignity to learn how to make bread and pastry, how to roast a joint or cook a potato." Now, it would seem that this was not a very extended nor difficult amount of culinary knowledge to be required of a young woman who is ready to venture upon the sea of matrimony, but it will be considered quite large enough to begin with if we compare the houses in which we get a potato or a light piece of bread with the number of households in the community. It may be set down at once that you cannot get a well-cooked potato in any hotel. The servants in the houses where people would like to live well, and know good cooking when they see it, are, in, nine cases out of ten, under no genuine discipline. The woman of the house does not care. A well cooked potato put on the table and eaten just at the proper time—and it does not exceed three minutes—is something which many men, whose butcher bill amounts to hundreds a year, know nothing of.

It is something which is quite important to understand, and yet which many people never learn, that a good meal depends upon good cooking, and not upon cost. The joint or the steak which it is impossible to cook so as to be tender to day, will, in a few days, be in perfection; a broiled steak or chicken is as rare as cucumbers in Pawtucket. Ninety nine one-hundredths of the cooks, hired or wed, fry everything—which is simply to say that they spoil it. One would think it impossible to injure sweet corn, and yet it is quite easy to allow it to remain in the water long enough to lose a great share of its sweetness. There is not only economy but ease in good cooking. For the ordinary male person, a few things made palatable suffice. The wife who knows how to cater to one or two whims in eating, and how to roast and boil, and devil a bit of cold meat and make good bread, may defy all rivals, whether of animated or inanimated attractiveness. It might be worth while perhaps to inquire how it happens that the girls can master music and languages, and all sorts of accomplishments, but are unable to bake or brew, or boil an Irish potato.—New York Evening Post.

COST OF FENCES.—A Mr. Biddle in an address before the Philadelphia Agricultural Society recently, stated that the fences in Pennsylvania alone amounted to $100,000,000, and their annual expense be estimated at $10,000,000. A distinguished writer on national wealth says: "Strange as it may seem, the greatest investment in this country, the most costly production of human industry, is the common fences which enclose and divide the fields. No man dreams that when compared to the outlay on these unpretending monuments of human art, our cities and our towns, with all their wealth, are far behind. In many places the fences and farms are both worth. It is this enormous burden which keeps down the agricultural interests of the country, causing an untold expenditure, besides the loss of the land that the fences occupy.

LEAKS IN THE FARM.—Unfinished fences, which allow cattle to go where they please, are very common. A little timely labor would stop this leak would save the crops and teach the cattle good manners. Ditches which have caved in and the earth washed away are considered leaks upon a farm, and cost much more time and labor to clean them out than to dig new ones.—Doors and gates without hangings are very inconvenient, much more liable to accidents, needing to be renewed in less than half the time they would have lasted if properly cared for. Those are few of the leaks which meet the eye while journeying through the rural districts. If one pursues farming as a business it will pay to follow it in the best manner, and the good judgment of the intelligent farmer will lead him to stop all the leaks, great and small.—Vindicator.

No more difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil. This truly valuable medicine is now prepared by us with PHOSPHATE OF LIME, rendering it positively inviting. Of the thousands of victims of Consumption in this vicinity many would be saved by the prompt use of BAKER'S COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATE OF LIME. Sold by druggists.

Watch Your Setting Hens.

If eggs are broken in the nests take the hen carefully off, and wash the eggs in tepid water; then take the straw out, and put in fresh, and place the eggs under her again.

Should the hen leave the nest from any cause, and the eggs become cold, do not throw them away, even if the hen has been off twenty-four, or more hours. Get a pan or pail of water heated to 105° Fahrenheit, and immense the eggs in it. Leave them in until they are warmed through, perhaps half an hour, adding more warm water if neccessary, then place them under a fresh hen. In the latter stages of incubation, after the eggs have passed the fourteenth day they have been saved and hatched, after having been deserted for over forty-eight hours.—Exchange.

MILK.—Microscopic examination of milk from cows kept in badly ventilated stables, or fed on unwholesome food, shows that such milk contains living germs, a species of fungus, which are liable to cause such changes in cream that it cannot be churned and made into good, sweet butter.

A Widely Applicable Remedy.

Few remedies are applicable to such a wide range of disorders as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and this not because it has special properties adapted to the cure of each—such a pretense would be manifestly absurd—but on account of its wonderfully improving effect upon the general tone of the system, and its alterative action upon the organs of nutrition, secretion and discharge. Besides its well known properties as a remedy for intermittent and remittent fevers, dyspepsia, constipation torpidity of the liver, general debility, urinary and uterine difficulties, it invariably proves to be highly serviceable in overcoming anæmia, hypochondria, rheumatism, insomnia, and many other disorders and disabilities originating in poverty or impurity of the blood, nervous weakness or over-excitement, or an imperfect performance of the physical functions.

Liver and Blood Diseases.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Author of "The People's Common sense Medical Adviser."

A healthy liver secretes each day about two and a half pounds of bile, which contains a great amount of waste material taken from the blood. When the liver becomes torpid or congested, it fails to eliminate this vast amount of noxious substance which, therefore, remains to poison the blood, and be conveyed to every part of the system. What must be the condition of the blood when it is receiving and retaining each day two and a half pounds of poison? Nature tries to work off this poison through other, channels and organs—the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc. but these organs become overtaxed in performing this labor in addition to their natural functions, and cannot long withstand the pressure, but become variously diseased.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, is unduly stimulated by the unhealthy blood which passes to it from the heart, and it fails to perform its office healthily. Hence the symptoms of bile poisoning, which are dullness, headache, inaccurately to keep the mind on any subject, impairment of memory, dizzy, sleepy or nervous feeling, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper. The blood itself being diseased, as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin, it is so irritating and poisonous that it produces discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches, and other eruptions, sores, boils, carbuncles, and scrofulous tumors. The stomach, bowels and other organs, cannot escape becoming affected, sooner or later, and we have as the result, costiveness, piles, dicpsy, dyspepsia, diarrhœa. Other symptoms are coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in mouth, internal heat, palpitation, teasing cough, unsteady appetite, choking sensation in throat, headache, pain in sides or about shoulders or back, clammy sweats, etc., etc. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time. The liver being the great depurating, or blood-cleansing organ, when it fails to perform its office, the blood, which should receive from it only pure elements, becomes loaded with the impurities it should carry off. For this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with proper small doses daily of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, is pre-eminently the article needed. They cure every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch, or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under its mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are thoroughly driven out, and the long train of evils that follow in their train, such as dyspepsia, biliousness, internal fever, ulcers, tumors, and kindred affections, disappear under the influence of these great remedies.

TRUST.

I cannot see my way, dear Lord,
Why God should grant me love;
I only know he said a word,
And I believe and love.

I cannot see why my poor prayer
Should reach the ear of God;
I only know he said, "Come unto me,"
And I have come, dear Lord.

I cannot answer, even when
With questions fraught with fear
Satan comes whispering to me,
But I can say, dear Lord,

I cannot know why sorrow comes
To those I love so well,
But this I know, God reigns above,
And all is well, dear Lord.

I may not know the reason why
Some friends are called away,
But this I know, God's love is nigh,
And I can trust and pray.

I cannot know why I am here,
Or what I yet may be,
But this I know, I have no fear
To leave my all with Thee.

SKETCHES OF THE PIONEER METHODISTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. H. T. PEDEN.

NUMBER 7.

INTRODUCTION OF METHODISM INTO WESTERN CAROLINA—VARIOUS CIRCUITS—FIRST PREACHERS—SUCCESS OF THE CAUSE—TRIALS AND PERSECUTIONS OF THE WAR.

While one stream of Methodism was flowing westward on the south side of the Roanoke river, another was running parallel with it on the Virginia side of this river, and subsequently beyond that on the southside cross over into North Carolina from the Pittsylvania circuit, and spread through Stokes, Surry and Rockingham counties. The Pittsylvania circuit extended into North Carolina and embraced parts of Stokes, Rockingham and Surry counties." (Dr. Doub.) Thus we see that Methodism was introduced into Western Carolina by way of Pittsylvania as soon as 1776. It soon grew strong enough in that section to be organized into a separate work. For we find that in 1780—four years after its introduction was formed, having however only 24 members reported on the Minutes. Andrew Yeargan was the first circuit preacher sent to this new field. He traveled only two years and then located in 1781. The Yadkin was put back into the Pittsylvania circuit next year. It appears again on the Minutes permanently in 1782. The church records give no clue as to the boundaries and size of this oldest circuit in Western Carolina, but Dr. Doub states that he learned from Rev. Ira Ellis (one of the pioneers) that Yadkin circuit originally "extended from the Northwest corner of Guilford county to the Swannanoa gap in the Blue Ridge, and down the Swannanoa river towards Asheville." It accordingly must have embraced in its wide sweep about fifteen counties. It is probable however that it was not a circuit, so much as a line of appointments lying along the high way through this scope of country—which public road starting from Salem went across the Yadkin on up to the sand mountain gap out into the West. It was a route frequently traveled by Bishop Asbury, and as he always preached as he went, doubtless he had much to do in planting Methodism along this line. Methodism, however, soon branched off up the Yadkin river to its head waters, and down its current towards the Pee Dee section into South Carolina as far as Georgetown.

The Yadkin Circuit

John Cooper, Enoch Matson and George Kimble were sent on the Yadkin circuit in 1782. the third year after its formation. Very little historical material can be found in reference to these pioneers.

John Cooper

is supposed to have been a native of Maryland, and commenced his Itinerant labors in 1775. He was "a man of a solemn, fixed countenance, who had suffered much persecution."—Cooper's family opposed him in his religious efforts. "His father seeing him once on his knees in a chamber, threw a shovel of hot embers upon him, and afterwards expelled him from his home. His trials only confirmed him in his faith—he joined the Itinerant band of evangelists, and lived and died in the ranks." (Dr. Stevens.) He moved West and performed a prominent part in planting Methodism in that then new and wild country. He died in 1789.

Enoch Matson traveled only a few years, and was expelled from the Conference in 1788. Of George Kimble, I find nothing except the fact that he was sent to a circuit far in the North after he left the Yadkin circuit. In 1787 Yadkin is reported as having 438 members—a growth of 362 in three years. This shows rapid growth in a field which was substantially missionary ground, and in a time destitute of church edifices and effective organization. This large increase was doubtless due to the efficiency of Henry Ogburn, who labored on this circuit during this year, assisted by William Cannon and Lemuel Green.—"Ogburn was born in Mecklenburg county, Va., and was converted in the great revival of 1740. He labored with great zeal and success for ten years as an Itinerant. He was sent as a pioneer to the Kentucky circuit, and amid savage tribes he planted Methodism, preaching to the hardy settlers in their "stations" or little forts, and sowing seeds from which rose the Methodist Church in Kentucky."—(Dr. Bennett.)

In 1783, Guilford, Salisbury, Caswell, Bertie, Pasquotank, Marsh and Holston circuits were formed. The Salisbury and Guilford circuits were taken off of the Yadkin circuit.—Caswell was probably taken from the New Hope circuit. During this year Methodism crossed the Blue Ridge and set up its banners in the Holston country. It extended also from the Roanoke region into the extreme east to the Albemarle Sound, spreading through Bertie and Pasquotank counties. In seven years Methodism was planted all along that broad belt of North Carolina which borders on the Virginia line and extended its benefit influence from the Atlantic ocean to the Tennessee line. It had not penetrated very far into the Southern part of North Carolina as yet. The wave of Methodism however was rolling in that direction.

The final treaty of peace between England and the United States was concluded in the latter part of this year (1783) and it may be proper to note just here what conquests Methodism had made during this seven years of war in our State.

So commencing at the oldest circuit, I will give the statistics as reported in 1783. Roanoke numbered 400 members on her roll. Tar River 332, New Hope 182, Yadkin 218, Salisbury 50, Guilford 314, Holston 30, Bertie 50, Pasquotank 22, Marsh 50—Total, 2,048. The original Carolina circuit had been multiplied into 11, occupied by 22 preachers. These statistics will serve to indicate to the reader the particular localities and strength of Methodism at the close of the Revolution. Hitherto Methodism had to contend with many formidable difficulties in its progress, the chief of which was the blighting influence of the war, which raged most violently in N. C., from 1780 to 1782.

The battle of Ramsour's Mill in Lincoln county was fought in 1780—that of King's Mountain in the latter part of the same year, that of Guilford Court House the year following. The march of Cornwallis spread dismay and demoralization through the State along the route of its march from Guilford down to Wilmington. Jesse Lee says: "There was a blessed revival of religion in Virginia, and some parts of North Carolina: but the war was so distressing in those parts, that the preachers could not constantly attend their circuits: many of the societies were dispersed, and prevented from assembling altogether. Many of the male members were drafted, and when the militia were called out, they had to go into the army to fight in defence of their country. Some of them lost their lives, some made shipwreck of their faith, and but few returned home with as much religion as they formerly possessed. Some of the Methodists were bound in their consciences not to fight: and no threatenings could compel them to bear arms or hire a man to take their place. In consequence of this, some of them were whipped, some were fined, and some imprisoned; others were sent home, and many were much persecuted. The societies had much to discourage them, and but little to help them forward in religion. Yet notwithstanding all their difficulties, they stood fast as one body, and waxed stronger and stronger in the Lord." Again, it is said in reference to the Methodist preachers farther North: "In those days of suspicion, prejudice and alarm, to get a preacher or a society persecuted it was only necessary to excite suspicion, sound the alarm, and cry out, 'Enemies to the country or Tories.' Some of the preachers were fined, others put in jail for no other offence than preaching the Gospel. Some were "honored" according to the cant of the day, "with a coat of tar and feathers." Others personally insulted and beaten with blows nigh unto death, and carried their scars down to the grave. Freeborn Garrettsen, one of the successful pioneers of that day, was beaten by one of the officials and pursued till he fell from his horse and was nearly killed. Joseph Hartley was whipped by a young lawyer and imprisoned. Caleb Pedicord was whipped and badly hurt on the public road, and carried his scars to the grave." All this gives but a faint idea of what the first preachers had to endure and how great were their conflicts. They counted all things but loss so they might gain Christ and win souls. The Lord was with them as they passed through the fires and deep waters of affliction. They saw the pleasure of the Lord prosper in their hands—the wilderness and the solitary places were glad for them, the parched ground became springs of water, and the desert rejoiced and blossomed as a rose. Thus we see, that Methodism began its career in the beating storm of the Revolution—was cradled in the hurricane, grew up in the hardship of war, till it stood forth as a young, vigorous giant ready to run a more illustrious race after the treaty of peace.

A NEW BOOK.

BIBLE LANDS: Their Modern Customs and Manners: Illustrative of Scripture. Van Lennep. Harper & Bros., New York.

The great publishing house which issues this work has rarely rendered a higher service to the cause of sacred learning than in the publication of this copious and diversified illustration of Bible Lands. The work will be of special use and interest to those whose professional business it is to explain the Bible, and when once known will be simply indispensable to ministers of the gospel and teachers of Bible classes and Sunday schools. But its importance is not confined to one class only. It will render the Bible more attractive and intelligible to every class of readers. It brings it home to the "business and bosoms of men," in Lord Bacon's noble phrase. To many the Bible is a book apart, not in the sense of being more sacred and venerable and precious than other books, but as more foreign and remote in its allusions to the objects and habits of every day life.

Many a young man critically acquainted with the explanations of local customs, of political constitutions, of religious observances, of natural scenery and with personal anecdotes of distinguished men which so light up the pages of the Greek and Latin classics, will regard the Bible as dry and hard and repulsive simply from want of the very information so abundantly and delightfully conveyed in the volume before us. The exact value of any book, in its relation to the Christian faith, may be infallibly determined by the light it throws on the Scriptures of truth and the added interest which it lends to the sacred page.

To know accurately the physical features of the country; its topographical peculiarities; all the details of the daily life of the inhabitants; how they ordered their households; how they tilled the soil; what were the distinctive qualities of the soil they tilled; the material and make of their agricultural implements; the character of the climate and seasons; the flora and fauna of the land; the relations of the people to the sea and to navigation; the domestic animals chiefly prized and used; their progress in the various arts useful and ornamental; the peculiar structure of their civil polity; their legal statutes; above all the character of their religion and the hold it had upon them: to know these things is to know the people.

The time when men thought that History consisted only in the record of great public events; the change of dynasties; the fall and rise of ministers of State; national treaties and national wars, has passed by and the special charm of the best modern histories is their photographic delineation of the actual experience—the daily life and avocations of the great body of the people. We know of no one man to whom we are more indebted for this salutary revolution in the conception of what history is, and of the plan on which it should be written than to Lord Macaulay. The most charming and instructive chapter in his incomparable history of England is the third; that in which he describes the state of England at the death of Charles the Second. From that one chapter we may know the actual life of the English people then, as well as the men of this generation can know it now. We know how they lived; how they traveled; the state of the roads; the social status of the clergy and their relations to the people; the productive industries of the country; the growth of the towns, and the administration and working of the laws.

No department of knowledge has been more advanced by modern progress in matters of geographical and topographical interest and more thorough acquaintance with the traditions and habits of the oriental nations than the subject of Bible illustration. To have in the mind a perfect picture of the life of the Orient, the habits of the people and the natural features of the landscape, must impart an amazing force and freshness to our impressions of the people and of that wonderful Book which records their national history and reflects their national life. Now this is precisely what Van Lennep's work does, and does in the most pleasing and effective way, with all the aids of pictorial illustration and of accurate knowledge not gathered up for the nonce or for the purpose, but the ripe fruit of a long residence on the ground and among the institutions, the customs, the manners, the objects and the people described—on the part of a highly cultivated Christian missionary. The title of the book is replete with promise, and the promise is amply redeemed. It must prove attractive to all persons of intelligence and especially to all believers. It is unrivalled by any book in our knowledge in the profusion and beauty of its pictorial illustrations. It has not less than three hundred and fifty wood engravings and two colored maps.—The pictures addressed to the eye throw great light upon the descriptive sketches. The variety of the scenes, the characters and the objects brought before the reader has all the effect of a brilliant succession of panoramic scenes. The work opens with a vivid description of the physical geography and picturesque aspects of the Holy Land and exhibits a striking demonstration of its providential fitness in local position and in its manifold relations to the outer world—in its almost complete segregation from the Gentile nations—to the purpose of God in the religious vocation and office of the chosen people as the conservators of the true religion and the depositaries of the Divine Oracles.—The land itself in its position and surroundings, was the proper setting for a priceless jewel. It was a Theocratic scent—a land sacredly set apart from all the world for an elect people and a Divine economy. It was a garden enclosed and a fountain sealed. It may perhaps be worthy of remark how narrow were the limits assigned to the two nations to whom were providentially entrusted the highest intellectual and religious interests of the human race—the Greeks who were to be the teachers, the models and the masters of mankind in literature and art; and the Jews to whose guardian care were exclusively committed the oracles of God—whose were the fathers, and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came.

CHILDHOOD.

NUMBER 6.

"In summer morn's childhood hours
I her thousand wood-land songs, her glorious hues
O, young life's so full of flowers,
The difficulty then is where to choose.

Perchance in hours thus pure—sublime,
Dreams we would make realities—life seems,
So changed in after time
That we would wish realities were dreams."

Having glanced in a former number at some of the points connected with the happiness and welfare of children we return again more directly to the history of childhood.

We have alluded to the spoiled child, noting the fact that the child is less to blame than those who mislead it. But notwithstanding the seeming pains that are sometimes taken to spoil one of nature's most lovely and attractive works, success is only partial and there still exists a large number of sweet children to delight, soothe and divert us when we are wearied and fretted by grown up people, and to justify all that has ever been said or written of the charms of childhood.

Perhaps women only—their natural nurses and faithful protectors—can thoroughly appreciate the attractions of the first few months of human existence—the recumbent position, the fragile limbs, the lethargic tastes, the ungrateful indifference to notice of a very young infant, render it uninteresting to most of gentlemen except its father, and he is generally afraid to touch it lest he might break its neck.

But, even in this transition state mothers, grand-mothers, aunts and nurses, assure you with great earnestness and enthusiasm, that unmistakable indications of sense and genius, may be seen in the "little animal," and I have known a clamor of joy and surprise to be excited throughout a whole family, matter afforded for twenty long letters—innumerable animated conversations concerning some marvellous demonstrations of intellect, or the wondrous development of beauty and perfection in a little creature who is still in long clothes and cannot regulate the equilibrium of its head.

But as soon, however, as the child begins to notice, that is, as soon as its physical system has acquired firmness and activity—its mental powers expanded so that it smiles at a familiar face, or stares at a strange one—as soon as it begins to employ its hands and eyes in constant expeditions of discovery, and begins to crow and leap from the inspiration of the new life, which is dawning upon its mental vision—it becomes at once an object of indefinable and powerful interest, to which all the springs and sympathies of our nature attach us;—an object at once of curiosity and tenderness, interesting in its helplessness and innocence, doubly interesting from the contemplation of its present and prospective destiny; and if interesting to a philosopher, how much more so to a christian who looking beyond its temporal tries to fathom its future, eternal, destiny.

[illegible] has not often felt oppressed, in [illegible] child, by the weight of mystery which hangs over its fate? When we send an inquiring glance into the future destiny of men, we have certain data of character, principles, and tastes to guide us. We may venture to say of such a one "let fortune do her worst she cannot render our friend cruel, vicious or dishonorable;—but no such assistance is given us when we gaze on the face of a child and attempt to peer through the impervious curtain which hides its temporal as well as eternal destiny.

Perhaps we hold in our arms an angel, kept but a few months from the heaven in which it is to spend an immortal existence—perhaps we hold the germ of all that is hideous and hateful in our nature.

Thus looked, and thus smiled, the monsters of our race in the days of their infancy.

Where are the marks to distinguish a Cain from an Abel—a Moses from a Pharaoh—a Nero from a Trajan?

But it is not pleasant or wise to contemplate childhood in this spirit;—better it is when we behold the energy and animation of children, their warm affections, their ready, unsuspicious confidence, their wild unwearied glee their mirth so easily excited, their love so quickly won, better it is to enjoy unrestrained the pleasantness of life's morning and learn from its joy and brightness that nature intended us also to be happy, and generally gains her ends until we are old enough to discover how we may defeat her object.

Children may teach us one blessed enviable art,—the art of being easily made happy. Kind nature has given [illegible] that rare power of accommodating themselves to circumstances which compensates for any external disadvantages they may have to contend with.

Give him but a moderate portion of food and kindness an the poor man's child is, all things considered, happier than the very wealthy—free from artificial wants—unsated by indulgence, all nature is in harmony with his feelings and ministers to his pleasures—with a three penny jack knife he can carve out felicity from a piece of pine bark, or fish for it very satisfactorily with a pin hook in a mud puddle with the patience and pleasure of old Izack Walton himself—he would not exchange his rude bow for the rod maker's, nor this pop-gun for one of "Colts best."

We will continue this subject in our next.

WATCHMAN.

Cedar Grove, May 1876.

Animated Shot-Guns.

Animated, not because they kick, like so many of the guns our readers are familiar with, but because they swim; because they shoot themselves off, not accidently, like ordinary guns, but purposely; because they shoot to kill, and to eat what they shoot; more remarkable still, because they load themselves with water, which they live in, and shoot their game in the air, which they can't live in.

They are about six inches long, and the naturalists call them Toxotes jaculator. They look very much like perch, only more beautiful. Their general color is greenish above, and greenish silvery gray below. Across the back are four short dark brown stripes, shaded with green. Those who have seen them flashing through the water speak with enthusiasm of their lovely and ever changing hues. No wonder they are a favorite with the pet-loving Chinese who keep them in jars, as we do gold-fish, and amuse themselves by tempting the fish to display their skill by dangling a fly over the water.

The Toxotes are natives of the waters of Java, but have been widely distributed throughout the East as an ornamental fish. It is said that their aim is so accurate that they can bring down an insect from the height of three or four feet above the water.

This fish has a near relative, Chatodon rostratus by name, which inhabits the Chinese seas and rivers, a beautifully colored fish, which may be called an animated rifle, from the fact that it shoots, not a shower of drops, like the Toxotes, but a single drop, bringing down its game with wonderful certainty and precision. In this fish the jaws are prolonged into a short of beak, which serves as a rifle barrel. In other respects it resembles the scaly shot gun above described.—St. Nicholas for May.

Dr. Chalmers.

This mighty man was ordained minister of Kilmany, in Fife, May 12, 1803, and here he devoted himself diligently to his work. But up to this period, and some years beyond, he was utterly ignorant of the evangelical doctrines of the gospel, and it was by reading Mr. Wilberforce's "Practical View of Christianity" that he was led out of the cold region of religious form into the sunshine of the divine love by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Of his book he writes: "As I got on in reading it I felt myself on the eve of a great revolution in all my opinions about Christianity. I am now (February, 1820) most thoroughly of opinion, and it is an opinion founded on experience, that on the system of 'Do this and live,' no peace, and even no true and worthy obedience, can ever be attained. It is: 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.'"

The result of this change is stated thus: "Restored once more to the enjoyment of robust health, and with a mind once more at ease, and in the possession of firm and settled views, Mr. Chalmers resumed his labors at Kilmany, and for the first time began in earnest to preach the gospel. The effect was soon visible, the church became crowded, and the fame of the preacher's new born fervor and eloquence brought weekly accessions to the congregation from the neighboring parishes. Dundee, Edinburg and Glasgow lent their several contingents to the wrapt and excited auditory."

The eighteenth of May, 1843, a day ever memorable in the annals of the Scottish Kirk, was appointed for the opening of the Assembly. The galleries were crowded by an expectant auditory in the church of St. Andrew's. The Lord High Commissioner, the Marquis of Bute, proceeded from the palace of Holyrood with regal pomp, heralded by the sound of martial music, took his seat on the throne of majesty.

The leaders of the movement began to enter the sacred edifice, and as there appeared conspicuous in their midst the fine intellectual face and massive form of Chalmers, followed by Welsh, Candlish, and other worthies, the church rang with the shouts of the multitude. The plan of proceeding was fully arranged by previous concert, and the members advanced gravely and silently to their seats.

Dr. Welsh, the moderator of the previous year, according to usual custom, took the chair, and, having constituted the meeting by prayer, rose amid death like stillness—himself pale and agitated with the emotions of the hour—and proceeded to read a protest signed by all the ministers and elders of his party. This done, he quitted his place with great solemnity of manner, and, hat in hand, with a firm and decided step moved toward the door. At first a loud cheer burst from the gallery, but as instantaneously a silence deep as death followed. The first to tread in the steps of the moderator was Thomas Chalmers, venerable from his years, and illustrious from his talents, loved for his amiability as much as he was respected for his powers, and revered for his piety. Tears visibly chased each other down the furrowed cheeks of the great, good man as he made the hard sacrifice of position and association for conscience' sake. It must have been a heart sterner than his to have gone forth unmoved from the walls that had so often echoed to his lofty eloquence, and, at one blow, severed himself from a church in whose bosom he had been reared, and to whose service his manhood had been given. He left behind him imperishable memories, and carried to other scenes and new fields of labor his purity of principles and his unsullied honor.

Four abreast, there followed him through the streets of Edinburg a third of the ministers of the Scottish Kirk, and they the very elite of its clergy in respect of ability, learning, piety and public spirit. A vast crowd welcomed them without, and the houses they passed were filled from basement to roof with citizens, who loudly cheered the seceders, the ladies waving their handkerchiefs as in the enthusiasm of a public triumph. So they proceeded on their way to a hall in Cannon Mills, where other ministers, not members of the Assembly, and a crowded audience were awaiting their arrival. Amid the acclamations of three thousand persons, Chalmers was chosen the first moderator of 'The Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland."

I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

NONE need be miserable. By submission to Jesus Christ, trust in him, and obedience to his commands, all may be happy in life, in death, and for ever.

Enthusiasm

We want something more. We want enthusiasm in God's work. We find it in the world. Men are desperately in earnest in business circles. Hell is in earnest. Why should we not be? We talk about infidelity, and all the isms that are creeping over the world. I am more afraid of formalism than anything else. Let the children of God but see eye to eye, and Christianity will overcome all the hosts of hell and death. There is as much power in the gospel to day as ever. Man has been as bad as he can be. He was bad in Eden, he was bad for two thousand years under the law, and he has been bad these eighteen centuries under grace; but, my friends, there is power in the gospel to save When men are willing to give their lives to work for God, then He takes these men and uses them. One thing I admire about Garibaldi—his enthusiasm. In 1867, when he was on his way to Rome, he was told that if he got there he would be imprisoned. Said he, "If fifty Garibaldis are imprisoned, let Rome be free!" And when the cause of Christ is burned so deep in our hearts that we do not think of ourselves, and are willing to die, then we will reach our fellowmen. Five years ago I went to Edinburg, and stopped a week to hear one man—Dr. Duff, the returned missionary. A friend told me a few things about him, and I went to light my torch with his burning words. My friend said that the year before, he had spoken for some time, and had fainted in the midst of his speech. When he recovered he said, "I was speaking for India, was I not? And they said he was. "Take me back, that I may finish my speech." And notwithstanding the entreaties of those around, insisted on returning, and they brought him back. He then said, "Is it true we have been sending appeal after appeal for young men to go to India, and none of our sons have gone? Is it true, Mr. Moderator, that Scotland has no more sons to give to the Lord Jesus? If true, although I have spent twenty-five years there, and lost my constitution—if it is true that Scotland has no more sons to give, I will be off to morrow, and go to the shores of the Ganges, and there be a witness for Christ.' That is what we want. A little more, a good deal more, of that enthusiasm and Christianity will begin to move, and go through the world, and will reach men by hundreds and thousands.—D. L. Moody.

Take not thy Holy Spirit From me.

This is a most excellent prayer for an individual to offer. It should be the longing of every Christian soul that the Holy Ghost abide in his heart. Every unconverted man, if he realized his situation, would cry to God earnestly, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me."

We use the words now, however, for a different purpose. The Spirit of God has been working in many churches all over our land with refreshing power. Christians have been quickened and edified. Sinners have been converted Now, why should so happy a state of things depart? Why should not a church that has been thus blessed continue in the enjoyment of seeing saints edified and sinners converted?

There is really no reason. It is the normal condition of a church. But any church is in this normal condition only when the Divine Spirit is moving upon the hearts of men.

Your church, reader, has been refreshed. Now let your church pray with faith, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from us." If the Spirit of God stays with a church, it makes no difference whether the season be January or July. When he is there saints are edified and sinners converted.

We have too much fallen into the habit of thinking that after revival influences there must come a corresponding time of coldness. Nay, not so! "Take not thy Holy Spirit from us." If we only pray earnestly enough for his abiding presence, the prayer will be heard. A church importunate of the Holy Ghost will be in a revived state all the time. It is true that in God's spiritual as well as in his natural providence there are seasons of ingathering. But there is no need that a church, should ever be in a cold, dead state There is no need that any of these churches so blessedly refreshed during the past months should go back to coldness and stupor and inactivity.—American Messenger.

THE Christian's armor will rust except it be furnished with the oil of prayer.

IT was pride that changed angels into devils; it is humility that makes men as angels.

WHAT the key is to the watch prayer is to our graces—it winds them up and sets them going.

Stepping Its Pulse.

Says Mr. Spurgeon: "There is not a Christian beneath the scope of God's heaven from whom I am separated. At the Lord's table I always invite all Christians to come and sit down and commune with us. If any man were to tell me that I am separate from the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian or the Methodist, I would tell him he did not know me, for I love them with a pure heart fervently, and I am not separate from them. This bears rather hard on our strict communion Baptists. I should not like to say anything hard against them for they are about the best people in the world; but they really do separate themselves from the great body of Christ's people. They separate from the great universal church. They say they will not commune with it; and if any one comes to their table who has not been baptized, they turn him away. The pulse of Christ is communion; and woe to the church that seeks to cure the ills of Christ's church by stopping its pulse."

PROVIDENTIAL CARE.—During the awful massacre at Paris, by which so many Christians were removed from the present world, the celebrated Moulin crept into an oven, over the month of which a spider instantly wove its web; so that when the enemies of the Christians inspected the premises, they passed by the oven, with the remark, that no one could have been there for some days. So easily can God devise means for the safety of his servants.

We cannot live on probabilities. The faith in which we can live bravely and die in peace must be a certainty, so far as it professes to be a faith at all, or it is nothing.—Froude.

'Not I,' replied the shabby man. 'Why, then, do you so register your name?' 'Because I wish to travel incognito.' The stranger slumbered in the station-house.

On the 30th of March the tablet to the memory of John and Charles Wesley, in Westminster Abbey, was uncovered by Dean Stanley, in the presence of several hundred Wesleyan ministers and laymen including the President and several Vice-Presidents of the Conference. The Dean spoke of the Wesleys as men whom it was a privilege for the Church of England to honor, and hoped that no member of that Church would question the claim of the founders of Methodism to a memorial in the Abbey.

All the colleges and other buildings, save two at the Tarentum Camp-grounds, on the Allegheny River, twenty-one miles above Pittsburg, Penn., were destroyed by the fire at midnight on last Friday night. One hundred and forty cottages were burned. The loss is estimated at about $50,000, partly insured.

The Test.

There are those who persist in making individual professions of religion the solo test of Christianity. Hence they make every departure from Christian life the ground for skepticism and wickedness. But the testimony of men is not the only test of the truthfulness of Christianity—it is not even the principal test. "Ye are my witnesses" said the Saviour; but he did not say that in every case they should be true witnesses. We place this subject upon what we consider the true ground. Taking the testimony of the church with its failures in individual cases, it sustains, with great weight, the truth of the Christian religion. But what, we ask, was the test laid down by the founder of Christianity himself? If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine; that is, he shall know whether it is divine or human, true or false. What he means by doing the will of God he explains in another place. It is to believe in the person and work of Jesus Christ with that faith which involves practical obedience to his commands.

The Son of God taught that religion is a matter of personal experience. The ultimate evidence to every man of its truth is his own consciousness. The test then which the Saviour of mankind, with his divine authority prescribes, is not miracle and prophecy and human testimony. All these have their place among the evidences of Christianity, but at the best they can go no further than to meet the intellectual side of the question. No man, therefore, is justified in the rejection of Christianity, even if all the external evidences should fail to convince him. If he has studied miracle and prophecy and feels that this is not satisfactory: if he has found human testimony false or inconsistent when he naturally expected to find it true, the principal thing yet remains for him to do—do his will and he shall know of the doctrine. This is the test which Jesus Christ lays down, and no man has the right to reject Christianity until he has tried it in this way and found it false—and this no man has ever done. Surely the Son of God had the right to say upon what terms the Christian religion should be tried by the human soul.

We were pained to learn of the death of Col. John W. Leak of Rockingham, N. C., which occurred on the 6th inst. He was a prominent laymen in our Church, and was Secretary and Treasurer of the Missionary Board of our Conference. He was an earnest and liberal supporter of the Church and all its interests, and was devotedly attached to Methodism. A man of ripe experience, excellent judgment, and public spirit, the church in Rockingham, as well as the community, derived benefit from his wise counsels and generosity, and will keenly feel his loss; of high and unbending integrity, amiability and generous impulses, he had attracted the love and esteem of all with whom he came in contact, and is sincerely mourned. He died in the full assurance of a blissful future, giving frequent and touching evidences of his readiness to "cross over the River" and wear the crown that rewards the just and faithful man.

We had the pleasure of a visit the past week from Rev. H. H. Gibbons. He brings us good news from his charge. At Roxboro the church under his labors has been greatly blessed, and about 20 conversions have been the result of a gracious revival which he recently held at that place.

We are glad to learn that Dr. Closs is recovering from his recent severe illness. He attended one of his recent Quarterly Meetings and assisted in administering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Rev. J. J. Renn was in the city a few days since. He is much pleased with his new field of labor, and well he may be, for a nobler and a more generous people, it is seldom, if ever, the privilege of any minister to serve.

Rev. Dr. T. M. Jones has recently visited the Graham High School and greatly edified all who had the pleasure of listening to his able discourses.

GRAND LODGE I. O. O. F.—This Body, representing an honored and growing order, met in this city last Wednesday, and was well attended by delegates from the various subordinate Lodges. The election of Grand Officers resulted as follows:

M W Grand Master, R J Jones, of Wilmington; Deputy Grand Master, A J Burton, of Weldon; Grand Warder, P. C. Carlton, of Statesville; Grand Secretary, J J Litchford, of Raleigh; Grand Treasurer, Theo F Klutz, of Salisbury; Grand Chaplain, Rev H H Gibbons; Grand Representative to the Grand Lodge of the United States, Seaton Gales, of Raleigh. The Grand Lodge accepted an invitation to visit, in a body, the Institution for the Deaf, Dumb, and the Blind. The Grand Lodge also donated $100 annually to the Oxford Orphan Asylum.

The Religious Herald says: "Occasionally a man may be heard to complain of his paper because it contains advertisements. What does that man want a newspaper for! He can want it only for the information it gives. Now it matters not to him whether it comes to him in the shape of an advertisement or in the reading columns."

Rev. Bro. Robey writes us that the Church and College at Lenoir have been enjoying a delightful revival season. The revival was progressing, without abatement, at the date of his letter, the 6th inst.

The Centennial exercises of the Conference in many sections are now being conducted with great profit to the church.

Church Periodicals.

These are golden words from the Central Advocate:

"In canvassing for our Church periodicals there is but one rule by which the pastor can work and hope to be successful: he must aim to place at least one periodical in each family, visiting each family with that purpose in view. And in such a canvass, without neglecting the monthlies and Quarterly, the weekly paper commands the first place. Its visits are more frequent, it has a word for each member of the family, it furnishes the religious news and current thought of the time on moral and religious topics, and keeps its readers in sympathy with present Church work.—And these are the first objects to be sought in the diffusion of religious papers But there are in nearly every charge families who have the means to take others or all of our periodicals and their claims should be fairly presented. For each periodical adds to the intelligence and culture of the family, and secures a fuller co-operation with the pastor in the work to which he has devoted his life."

Death of an Honored Methodist

The following notice of the death of Hon. Trusten Polk is from the Nashville Advocate. I would be glad (if you can find room for it), to see it in the Raleigh Advocate: and glad if the young men of N. Carolina would read it They may be able to see that a man may succeed and be a Methodist. A Class Leader, a Governor, a United States Senator, yet amid all, the honors of the people did not so dazzle or charm that he either forgot or neglected his duty to his Church or weaken his devotion to the cause of Christ, or mar his consistency as an humble christian.

W. C. WILLSON.

DEATH OF THE HON. TRUSTEN POLK.

We have learned with deep sorrow and regret that our honored friend and brother, Trusten Polk, of St. Louis, died suddenly at 2:30 A. M., April 16—supposed of a disease of the heart. Thus passes away one of the foremost laymen of the Church, widely known, universally respected; admired for the high qualities which distinguished him as a public man—for the purity, integrity, and stainless honor which marked his character and made illustrious his career—and we feel fortunate enough to be numbered among his intimate friends. Mr. Polk was born in Delaware in 1811, graduated at Yale in 1831, and spent a couple of years afterward at the Law School of that University; was admitted to the bar, and removed in 1835 to St. Louis, Mo. His career as a lawyer was brilliant and successful He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Missouri, in 1845, and was elected Governor of the State in 1856. Soon after, he was elected to the Senate of the United States, which position he held at the breaking out of the late war. Adopting the cause of the South, he shared the fortunes of that cause: was taken prisoner, exchanged, held the office of Judge Advocate of the Army in Arkansas, and Military Judge in Mississippi. His "war record" was unimpeachable—sans peur et sans reproche After the war he devoted himself to his profession, steadily declining all overtures looking to a return to political life. He was all along a member of the M. E. Church, South—all along known, recognized, respected, as a religious man. His colors were nailed to the mast. He was a class-leader for thirty years; was prompt and punctual at official and prayer-meetings; gave his prayers, attention, and money to the various departments of "Church-works," took the lead in planning and erecting the "cathedral" church of Southern Methodism—Centenary: spent much time and labor in securing for its magnificent auditorium those acoustic proportions which make it a delight to preach there; welcomed to the elegant hospitalities of his house Bishops and preachers; was sent to the Annual and General Conferences, and was one of the two layman appointed on a Commission to meet a similar Commission, should one be appointed by the General Conference of the M. E. Church to adjust all existing difficulties between two Connections—in a word, perhaps it might safely be said, every thing considered, that Governor Polk was the most prominent layman in the Methodist Church of the South. We record his death with throbs of sorrow for the loss to the country and the Church have sustained in the departure of such a man in the prime of his usefulness. We point with exultation to the "entrance ministered abundantly" to such a man, from the earthly into the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ:" to the honors, plaudits, glory, of the triumph with which his entrance into that kingdom was greeted. We glorify the riches of God's grace manifested in the virtues and distinguished usefulness of such a career as his, in times so full of darkness and peril and wreck of reputation among public men.

Items for the Advocate.

MESSRS EDITORS: About two years ago there appeared an article in the ADVOCATE telling how snuff is made.—I wish to say to the writer of that article, that his labor was not in vain. A lady told me the other day that she took her snuff box and sat down to dip and read the Advocate. She read the piece on the manufacture of snuff. It gave her an abhorrence to snuff, and she has not wanted it since. It is to be hoped that she is one of many who were by said article embittered against the filthy stuff.

2. A lady gives me her gold earbobs and her bracelets for the Foreign Missionary cause. She thinks it sinful for her to wear those useless ornaments while so many souls are being lost because they have not the Gospel, or a knowledge of Christ. We pray that all who love and fear God may thus come to a proper knowledge of Divine truth. And let their adorning be, not gold, but a "meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price."

3. We have commenced work on our church in this place (Columbia); we need help. In this connection I wish to tender thanks to "Lizzie." She reads the Advocate, and was the first to respond to our appeal for "Help."

Our College Agents.

MESSRS EDITORS: Since the great Centennial in Raleigh I have visited Matamuskeet, Bath, and Greenville circuits, and Washington station On all these charges encouragement was given, and upon the whole the trip was a success. On Matamuskeet, I was able to secure a little above two thirds the amount apportioned, with good hope that more will be done. Some of the societies met their proportion in full, but as others did not, there is deficiency on the circuit. It a little more time could have been given, I feel sure that results would have been different. Tuis people appreciate the Colleges, and may be counted on for their proportion in the end.

It is good for an agent to meet such people as these often—good for his heart and good for his pocket And then it is such a place for high living, fish and oysters, and such oysters! On my return I made a partial canvass of the Bath circuit, and to the amount of people seen, no circuit has done better. A thorough canvass here, I feel satisfied, would have met with great success. But I hope to have this success yet during the year

Washington was next visited, and I must say did nobly. She pledged her full proportion, and gave a larger margin over, than any charge yet called upon.

And now let me say for Washington, as she calls for help, she not only needs assistance to complete her house of worship; but she is "worthy for whom thou shouldst do this," for she loveth our cause, and is ready to respond to these general enterprises, to the full amount asked for. Let the dollars go to Bro. Culbreth for Washington Church by every mail. Never rest until you give one. And let me say of Bro. Culbreth, that while "many" preachers "have done nobly," he "excels them all" in helping an agent. They are all hearty, and I cannot say too much in their praise, but he has been an agent, and knows better how.

Greenville responded liberally also, pledging ⅔ of her amount, and will no doubt complete it during the year.

Altogether this was a most pleasant, and profitable trip, and I am made to "thank God and take courage."

This work may be made pleasant and successful, if all our people and preachers will only regard these institutions as ours, and determine that these debts shall be cancelled.

Yours &c.

V. A. SHARPE.

RUTHERFORD COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.—Our annual Commencement will take place on 30th and 31st. Rev. P. J. Caraway of the N. C. Conference will preach the Commencement sermon. Rev. R D. [illegible] of the S. C. Conference will deliver a Literary Address, and Rev. L. E. Stacy of the N. C. Conference will address the Alumni.

We will have only three regular graduates, males; two in A. B., and one in A. M.

We have 176 students in regular attendance. Of these, 53 are females, 123 males.

During the term, we have enjoyed a very pleasant influence of Divine grace generally, without any extraordinary revival of religion. Several of the students have professed conversion.

The Temperance idea has been kept very prominently before the school during the term. We have suffered less this year from the influences of liquor men, than in any former scholastic year. I think the country is improving in this particular.

Prof. John T. Abernethy's health has been such that he has not been able to attend to his position regularly. This has imposed double duty on myself. But, thank God, I am well.

Can you not attend with us? I give you a most sincere and cordial invitation to be with us.

May God bless you.

Yours,
R. L. ABERNETHY

Revival at Fayetteville.

MESSRS EDITORS: We have just closed a most profitable meeting in our Church in Fayetteville. There was remarkable interest on the part of the membership, and the congregations were large and attentive throughout the meeting. Many professed faith in Christ, and 37 made application for admission into the Church.

Rev. J. S. Nelson, P. E and Rev. J. A. Cunninggim, were with us most of the time, and Revs. Chaffin and Hall occasionally. We are very greatly indebted to these brethren for the services so faithfully and successfully rendered. We praise God for his great mercy to us.

Fraternally,
E. A. THOMPSON.
THOS. W. SMITH.

Hon. A. M. Waddell, of Wilmington will deliver the address at the approaching Commencement of Thomasville Female College, on June 9th. The address will be followed by delivery of Diplomas etc., closing with a concert in College Hall at night. All are invited.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The Charlotte District Conference will be held in Concord to commence on Wednesday morning August the 2nd, 1876,

Mr. Moody in Augusta Ga

An Augusta correspondent of the Atlanta Constitutium writes, under date of the 2d inst, as follows of the interest manifested in that city in the labors of this successful evangelist, who has been conducting a series of meetings under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association:

Perhaps there was never a time before now when religious feeling was stronger, deeper, or more general in Augusta. Under the leadership of Mr. Moody, the daily meetings are attended by immense crowds, combining all classes and conditions of people. Strong, rough men, who were wont to disregard and laugh at every pious exhortation, and who were always careless of the future, are now, in many instances, bending beneath a deep sense of religious conviction, and are become serious and apprehensive as to their spiritual condition. Young ladies and girls have left off thinking of the giddy ball room, and are turning to serious and imperative duties. Indeed, all ages and kinds of men, women and children seem to be affected by this unusual fervor that is in the very atmosphere of Augusta. The city pastors have put on new energy, and are working with a harmony and earnestness that will of necessity accomplish great results. And so, too, with a great many of the laymen of the different denominations. The Church generally of this city is like a spiritual bee hive, and many are the workers therein. Mr. Moody thinks the cause of Christ ten-fold stronger upon earth than ever before, and that the great interest that is manifested in Augusta is but a typo of the general spread of the Gospel among the nations of the earth that is going on.

The open-air meetings present a most picturesque appearance. They are held in the beautiful yard of the Presbyterian Church, where plain plank seats have been arranged for the thousands who attend. A temporary platform has been erected, large enough to accommodate the clergy and the leading singers. A panel or two of the Church-yard fence has been torn down, so as to allow the pressing, eager crowd free access and egress to and from the place of worship.

It is really very interesting to look on the vast crowd, and observe the great interest manifested by all in the work that is going on; and it is glorious to hear the name of God lifted in song by a great multitude of Christians. The very air seems quick to catch and bear aloft the swelling harmony, and there is a certain majesty in the music as it rolls through the splendid grove, until every sensitive leaf quivers and trembles with ecstacy.

When Mr. Moody rises to speak, there is a universal hush upon the audience He receives the most respectful attention from all.

Life for Everything.

Punshon in his splendid exposition of "The Healing Waters," (Ezekiel's Vision) exclaims: "How complete and effectual the healing! 'Everything shall live whither the river cometh' And this is true of the Gospel of Christ. There is no desert of worldliness anywhere which the Gospel cannot turn into a garden; there is no Dead Sea of error which the Gospel cannot purge from its pollution and transform into a receptacle of life. The completeness of the healing is one of the most agreeable of its characteristics, and furnishes to those who rejoice in it their loftiest materials of praise. The world is a vast valley—a valley of the dead, without motion, without strength, without hope; but there is not one of those unburied corpses that may not be quickened into life.'—I am bold to affirm it—everything may live whither the river cometh! The Gospel has life in it for all. Its voice can reach to the furthest wards of the sepulchre, and there is no catacomb that is too remote, too crowded, or too loathsome to be visited and to be emptied; however long death may have had sway, the Gospel can chase it from the heart—ay, though time may have resolved the dust into dust again, and though the soul, like a mummy of the Pharaohs, may be swathed in its embalmment for many centuries of years, everything shall live whither the river cometh.

"Not only may each man be brought under the influence, but each man may be redeemed: light for the understanding, that it may no longer be darkened by the clouds of speculative error; light for the imagination, that it may quench its strange fires in the blood of the Lamb, and snatch from the altar of his cross a brighter and more hallowed flame, light for the memory, that it may be haunted no longer by the ghostly scenes and spectral thoughts of evil, but that it may hoard with miser's care every fraction of knowledge and transform it into an argument for God: life for the affections, that they may spend the bloom of their intensity of love on an object upon which they can expiate without fear of idolatry, and without fear either of treachery or change; life for the whole nature, that it may rise from the death of sin into the better life of God, in the soul, that it may not be sullied even by the shadow of death, but that, in the pure white light of the Redeemer's presence, it may go onward and upward into the sacred high, eternal noon of heaven—'Every thing shall live whither the river cometh.' It shall flow into the desert, the life of God shall be implanted in the wilderness, and the whole nature shall be turned about, that the barrenness shall become a bloom. 'Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name for an everlasting sign which shall not be cut off.'"

Among the Exchanges

The Churchman makes this point: that if any clergyman is compelled to combine the work of a preacher and that of a man of affairs—and the necessity ought to be inexorable to permit this—he owes it to his Order and to the Church at large, that he should not do business with his title as part of his capital stock. We have seen an insurance agent preach on Sunday, and solicit the congregation on Monday, and if he did not wear his surplice he made unmistakable use of his clerical character as an endorsement."

The Evangelist says of the ferment among our Baptist brethren on Communion that "the cause of liberty has nothing to fear from a discussion of this question, whatever the immediate result." It also asks Bishop McQuaid: "Will the Bishop be so good as to tell us when his Church, being in power, has done to Protestants as it would be done to by them in like circumstances"

The Presbyterian is sharp in this: "Nobody understands how to kill a conversation, or a prayer-meeting, or a church quicker than a good, energetic controversialist. How effectually his presence acts as a check upon the flow of talk, of feeling, of social life He switches the trains of conversation off the track. He casts the apple of discord into the meeting for prayer and conference. When he gets up to speak you know what is coming, and turn to the hymn book, or put your head down in despair. He rides his hobby right through a church, splitting the people like a marshal in procession, and leaving a broad wake of dissension behind him."

The Christian at Work writes of "Reading for the Young:" "To every parent who values the eternal interest of his children the question comes home with awful significance, 'What do your children read? You must not only keep them from the evil, but in no way can you do so as effectually as by proving them with what is wholesome. Give them the pure, the good, the ennobling, and they will have no appetite for the sensational, the vulgar, the prurient."

The Interior says: "We have learned that a pebble which God shall direct an humble word whose fight he shall determine—may be better than all the panoply of science, logic, or eloquence. Let us look to God for increase of faith, and then gathering pebbles from the river of God, honor the truth by a believing advance. For we fight the Christian battle not by calculation, or counting resources, but by faith in God."

The Jewish Messenger exhorts parents: "We adjure you, fathers and mothers, to take our lesson to heart. We know you love your sons and daughters, and would do everything within your power to render them happy. They are hearts of our your hearts, and are they not souls of your souls, and is it not your bounden duty, confirmed by your affection, to prevent their drifting to shores of infidelity, unless you prove to them by your acts, your lives, that your creed is not one of sterile incomprehensibility, but a religion based upon the pedestal of truth?"

The Campbell Printing Press Company, in order to exhibit their machinery properly, have erected on the Centennial Grounds at Philadelphia, a structure known as the "Campbell Press Building," to which editors, publishers, printers, and their lady friends are welcomed They have provided ample Reception Rooms, Parlors, Correspondent's and Retiring Rooms, and a Coat and Bundle Room, where anything may be left on check; also a Safe for valuables, and Telegraph and Mail facilities. We acknowledge the courtesy of an invitation to make use of the facilities offered.

Resolutions of the Book Committee.

WHEREAS, there is owing to the Publishing House from our traveling preachers more than thirty thousand dollars; and whereas, this amount, if in the hands of our Book Agent, would enable him to liquidate the entire floating debt, and thus remove a cause of annoyance and embarrassment to the House; and whereas, it is important to all the parties concerned that these accounts be adjusted and closed without delay. Therefore,

Resolved, That the Annual Conferences be requested to appoint, at their next sessions, committees of not less than three members, and to authorize said committees to confer with those indebted to the Publishing House, and effect settlements with them under advice and instructions from the Book Agent.

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to furnish the Bishops with copies of the foregoing preamble and resolutions, and that they be requested to bring the same to the attention of the Annual Conferences for their action.

Resolved, That we are highly gratified to hear of the general approval which has been given to Dr. Cunnyngham in the conduct of our Sunday-school department, and the success attending his work; and that we cordially approve the introduction of the international texts into our system of uniform lessons

Resolved, That after patient and careful inquiry into, and consideration of, the affairs of the Publishing House for the last twelve months, and especially in view of the stagnation in business circles and the financial distress which has pre vailed in the country, we cordially approve and commend the policy and management of our interest by our Agent, Dr. A H. Redford.

P A PETERSON,
J S. LITTLEJOHN.

Resolved, That our admiration for the learning, indnstry, and skill of Dr. Thomas O Summers, editor of the Christian Advocate, remains unabated, and we hereby pledge to him our sympathy and support.

MEMORIES OF FAMILIAR BOOKS. By Wm. B Reed, L. L. D, E. J. Hale and Sons, Publishers. New York,

We have received the above entitled book lately published by the enterprising firm of E. J. Hale and Sons. It is by the author of "Among my Books" which we read at the time of its appearance with great interest and pleasure. The book before us contains a number of fugitive pieces written by William B Reed, L. L. D., and a short memoir of the anthor by Manton Marble. The design of these essays by the author was to freshen the memories of familiar books, rather than to offer something new or original and in this he has been happily successful. The book contains essays on Swift, Bolingbroke, Clarendon, Junius, Quotation Books; Books of Travel, Missions of the East, The prayer Books, Autographs, Wm. Cobbett, Blackstone, Sermons—Barrow to Manning—The Napiers, The Stuart Books, The Theatre, Novels—Devoe to Thackery—Thackery, Walter Scott, Lord Palmerston, American History, and Henry Reed.

The Centennial authorities at Philadelphia have established a special department for the Press and have fitted up an office whose facilities will be extended to journalists who visit the Exposition. Cards of admittance to the Grounds and Buildings will be furnished to such editors and publishers who go properly accredited. It is pleasant, at times, to be connected with the Press—and in times of panic to be a "dead head" loses half its obnoxiousness.

MEMORIAL DAY.—The beautiful custom of decorating the graves of our Southern dead, and commemorating their valorous deeds and virtues, was observed in this city last Wednesday. An immense throng of people gathered at our beautiful Oakwood Cemetery in which a large space is set aside as the resting place of many hundred valiant heroes. Capt. S. T. Williams, of Rocky Mount, formerly editor of the Daily News of this city, delivered the address, preceded by an earnest and devout prayer by Rev. Dr. Marshall, of the Episcopal Church. The oration of Capt. Williams was an eloquent and touching enlogy upon the "Lost Cause" and its heroic defenders. Seldom have we listened to an oration so chaste, elegant and eloquent as the oration delivered. It was listened to with delighted interest by the large audience, after which the graves were decorated with flowers and miniature flags by the hands of fair women in whose bosoms remains longest the admiration of heroic deeds and sacrifices.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Charlotte's debt is only $33,000.

Durham, like London, has a West End.

T. C. Evans, Local Editor of the News, has retired and Geo. B. Ennis takes his place.

Every Spring we hear of a scarcity of tobacco-plants, and yet every Fall there is a good crop.

A courting gentleman in Durham went to sleep in the parlor and the ladies left him with his dreams, and he slept until 3 o'clock next morning.

The Durham Plant is tired of waiting on an insurance man who has owed him a debt for four years and intends to publish him.

Gov. Brogden, accompanied by his aids, Col I. J. Young and Geo, W. Stanton, attended the opening of the Centennial at Philadelphia.

The Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Masons meets in Charlotte on the sixth of June.

The Democrats of Catawba recommend Col. M. L. McCorkle as their first choice for Congress; and Gov. Z. B. Vance as their second.

On memorial day in Charlotte, boxes were placed at the entrance to the cemetery, to receive contributions for the monument to be erected there.

Geo. W. Swepson, Esq., has purchased the mills of Dr. B. A. Sellers, on Haw River, and will soon convert them into a cotton factory.

An attempted consolidation of the Wilmington Journal and Star miscarried. They couldn't arrange the editorial control of the paper.

Ralph H. Graves, Esq., Principal of the Hillsboro Military Academy, and a distinguished educator, died suddenly at Hillsboro on the 30th inst.

A shingle machine inventor, J. J. Kendal, has made Greensboro his residence and will manufacture shingles there.

New Summer Resort. The Journal says a new summer hotel is to be built at Masonboro Sound on the banks to be used as a pleasure house during the summer.

Mortally Wounded. Newbern Nutshell says in an altercation between two negroes named Cobb and Whitfield, working near Kinston, Cobb was mortally cut with a knife.

A ladie's contribution. The Hillsboro Recorder says that the dramatic entertainment on Wednesday night last conducted by the ladies of the town and aided by Mr. De La Croix for the benefit of the University, netted about $175.

The trial of Swepson for the killing of Moore, which was removed from Alamance to Orange, has been removed from Orange to Wake, on the ground that an article in the Hillsboro Recorder had created a prejudice in Orange against the accused.

The liquor dealers of Greensboro are trying to obtain licenses to sell wine and beer, as the prohibitory liquor law does not provide for these beverages. But the City Commissioners have refused to grant them.

Col. John H. Dillard, of Guilford, or Jesse F. Graves, of Surry, are names that should receive due consideration at our approaching State Convention in connection with the Attorney Generalship.—Winston Sentinel.

Revolutionary Relics. The STAR has examined a pistol worn by Col. Alex. Lillington at the battle of Moore's Creek, Feb. 24th 1775; also a silver crescent worn on his hat through the war, and also a crescent worn by his son John Lillington.

Mr. Mclauchlon Black of Rocky River, Cabarrus county, now about 75 years old, has never bought a pound of bacon, or a bushel of corn or wheat. He has always worn clothing spinned and woven at home.

The Statesville American says the freight shipped by one firm in that place, Wallace Brothers, during the year was the immense amount of one million eight hundred thousand pounds. And to one firm alone they sold twelve thousand pounds of elder flowers, and now have an order for larger amount.

The curious things under the water. Washington WHAT NEXT: A LUSUS NATURAE of the piscatorial tribe was to be seen at the Market wharf on Saturday last. It was an animal with a long round body about two feet in length, mouth like a hog, feet like an alligator, striped like a snake and had ears which were covered with downy hair. It was caught in this river, but even our oldest fishermen could not tell what it was.

Terrible Accident. The Wilmington STAR details a most piteous calamity in Wilmington on Monday evening by which two little children of Mr. Jesse Cassidey were scalded, one dying shortly afterwards, the other still lingering in terrible agony. The mother had left the little ones in the cook room for a moment when one of them upset a boiling pot of coffee upon them. The one who died was a little boy eighteen months old; the other a little girl about three years of age.

The Gazette learns that a little child of Mr. N. H. Cohen, of Fayetteville, came to its death last Tuesday evening in a very singular manner: it drank some boiling molasses sitting on the stove to make candy, and soon expired in dreadful agony.

BANKRUPT MATTERS.—Thos. B. Keogh Esq., Register in Bankruptcy, was engaged, Thursday, at room No. 1, Cozzins Hotel, in hearing matters in bankruptcy and transacting such business as came before him. A meeting of the creditors of Tiddy Bros. unanimously elected Gen. W. L. Prince assignee. In the matter of the Bank of Mecklenburg, the proposition of the Equitable Life Insurance Company to pay eighty five cents on the dollar on the life policy of the late Thos. W. Dewey, was accepted by the creditors.

The Danville Express says: "There is a widow lady living in one of the adjoining counties of North Carolina whose husband was a Confederate soldier, and who during the war was a prison at Elmira, N. While Pastor of the Canton Church New Jersey, some years ago, I temporarily lost my voice, and was in consequence unable to preach for nearly a year. Last spring I began to have all the symptoms of losing it again. I laboured with great difficulty, fearing each time I preached would be the last. In July I commenced using Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, at the same time rubbing my throat and chest freely with the Liniment. I gargled my throat daily according to the directions given in Dr. Jayne's Almanac, at the same time taking the Expectorant regularly. Feeling very much better, I discontinued the use of the Gargle and the Liniment, but still kept on with the Expectorant. This winter I have been more exposed, and preach oftener than for many years past, and yet my voice seems to be growing stronger, and were it not for the requirements of my calling, I firmly believe a permanent cure would be effected by the Expectorant. At all events the good it has done, and is doing me, makes me anxious to recommend it to all who are suffering from throat or Lung Complaint. Rev. W. PIKE, LAKEVILLE, WASHINGTON COUNTY, N. Y.

At 11.30 the Wagner Festival Inauguration March was performed by an orchestra under the direction of Theo Thomas, at the conclusion of which Bishop Simpson offered up devout prayer, during the rendering of which the vast assemblage stood with uncovered heads.

"Low Prices."

There is nothing that possesses a greater charm than great expenses—every merchant who sells his goods at so low a figure as to please the multitude will be persecuted by them. Some people prefer cheap goods, though they may be very inferior. But when we get sick and require medicine to cure us, is it not remarkable as well as true, that we will only use the most refined highest priced, prepared by the most skillful chemist perfectly regardless of expense?

This is the secret of the great popularity of DR. TUTT'S MEDICINES. He was for many years a teacher in one of the best medical colleges in the United States and has been engaged in the practice of medicine for thirty years. Thus guaranteeing that his medicines are prepared upon strictly scientific principles. TUTT'S PILLS have been in use for twenty years and have become a household word in nearly every country on the globe.

Obituary notices of twenty lines are inserted without charge. The excess over twenty lines or short words is charged for at the rate of 10 cents per line. Count the lines and also short words to the line. In no way can we always know the amount to publish. Resolutions of respect are subject to the same rule.

Mrs. Mary Louisa Kelly was born Oct. 7th 1818 and died in the town of Washington, N. C. April 7th 1876. Sister Kelly was a christian, and died in the hope of eternal life. Her sufferings were often severe but she possessed a submissive spirit under them all. It was a pleasant duty to visit her, and hear her testify to the sustaining power of God's grace. The day before she fell asleep in Jesus, I asked her if her spiritual sky was clear, and she replied "Yes through Christ." God called and she was ready. My her relatives and friends meet her in the better land.

B. B. CULBRETH.

Died at Pamaukett, Dare county N. C. April 29, 1876, Nancy, wife of D. S. Meeklins. Sister Meeklins was converted at a protracted meeting held by Rev. F. D. Swindell, and joined the Methodist Church and remained a consistent member to the day of her death. I visited her often in her afflictions and always found her enjoying peace with God. She was one among the most faithful christians that I ever saw. A few hours before she died she became very happy, and shook hands with me all and exhorted us all to meet her in heaven. A few minutes before she died she said "glory be to God on high" and fell asleep in Jesus, leaving behind her an affectionate husband and two children, father, mother and other relatives to mourn their loss.

In vain our fancy strives to paint
The moment after death,
The glories that surround the saint
When he resigns his breath.

One gen'ral sigh it shall be heard
When e'en an eye shall say he's gone
Before the willing spirit takes
Her mansions near the throne.

This much, and this is all we know,
They are completely blest
Have done with sin and care and woe,
And with their Saviour rest.

D. G. MEEKINS.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas our Heavenly Father in His divine Providence has taken from us our esteemed brother Daniel Atwater, who departed this life January 13th 1876, in the fifty-ninth year of his age, therefore;

Resolved 1st, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, we nevertheless lament the loss we have sustained in this sad bereavement.

Resolved 2nd. That as a husband and father in his family, as a friend and neighbor in society, as a pious and liberal member of the church and as a member of this Quarterly Conference in the capacity of Steward and Class leader, when offices held for many years he did his duty consistently and faithfully, and has left the influence of an example that will not soon die.

Resolved 3rd, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to his widow and children in their loss, and pray that they may all meet in heaven.

Resolved 4th, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Conference, that a copy be sent to the family so requested, and also to the Raleigh Christian Advocate for publication.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The 2nd Quarterly Conference, held for Rock Spring District at Zion Church, May the 6th 1876, passed the following preamble and resolutions.

Whereas it hath pleased God in his wisdom to take from us our dear friend and brother Levi C. Lesk Pierce-Esq.,

Resolved 1st. That while we bow submissive to the will of God we feel most deeply the loss we and the Church of God have sustained.

Resolved 2nd. That we magnify the grace of God in him, which enabled our brother to live so exemplarily, and to die so triumphantly, so peacefully and victoriously.

Resolved 3rd. That we will endeavor to imitate his pure life, and emulate his many virtues.

Resolved 4th That we hereby tender our most sincere sympathies to his deeply bereaved family, and pray the God of all grace to bless us and comfort them, and bring them to His eternal kingdom.

J. S. NELSON P. E.
J. M. STANSELL, Sec'y.

Died in Surry co N. C on Sunday the 16th of April about 1 o'clock P. M. Mrs Sally Christian consort of Mr. Wm. Christian. She was born Nov the 11th, 1838.

She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Mount Hermon when she was about 9 or 10 years old, in which she lived a consistent member and almost upright christian life till the last moment of her earthly existence. She was a kind and devoted wife and a most affectionate mother, and loved by all who knew her. She was afflicted for several years with a severe nervous disease which caused her untimely death.

She bore her afflictions with great fortitude and seldom a murmur. She met death's common peaceably and calmly, and when asked if she had much to do her spirit seemed to rise she replied, 'Mother I am not afraid to die." Her last words were "I see Jesus"

She was buried on Tuesday following at Mount Hermon where the appropriate burial ceremonies by Brother Dave Nixon a local minister her pastor being absent. There was a large concourse of citizens in attendance. She leaves a kind husband, 7 devoted children and an aged mother, 3 brothers and 2 sisters to mourn her loss, and a large circle of sympathizing friends. But their loss is her eternal gain

May a kind Providence comfort and console the dear relatives in this their day of sad bereavement and may their last end be like hers.

W. B MANESS

Fell asleep, in the arms of Jesus Sunday night, April 16th, 1876 Dr Patsey, aged nine years he only daughter of Bro. John H. and Sister Martha Bivings.

She was a sweet child and beloved by all that knew her. She attended her Sunday School regularly, until ill sickness, and by her sweet loving spirit attached to her both teachers and scholars.

Not being "of the earth earthy," God took her to a more genial clime, where

"Sickness sorrow, pain, and death
Were felt, and feared no more."

She is now singing, with the Angels, the praise of Him who said "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of God" God bless the afflicted parents, and finally reunite them in heaven.

T. Page Ricaud.

Nathaniel M. Terrell, departed this life May 3rd 1876 in the 67th year of his age.

Bro. Terrell was converted in the city of Raleigh, while a young man, and joined the Methodist Church. Shortly after, came to Tarboro and connected himself with the church here, and was for a long time the only male member in the place.

In those days it took moral nerve to be a Methodist in Tarboro. One had to endure scorn and contempt, and ridicule, to submit to bear the reproach of Christ" and to be regarded as the "filth and offscouring of the world" Bro. T. in the midst of this, never faltered in his devotion to the church of his choice.

He was for some time superintendent in one of the Sunday Schools, a class leader and steward in the church. A quiet and retiring man, he did, and said no harm. He passed away an acceptable and esteemed member of the church. A wife and three children mourn his loss. May God comfort them.
